Great as is the positive and essential merit of Stevenson's work when at its best, it is as an influence in letters and in thought that his position is most notable. In some respects he is an interesting parallel to William Hazlitt, a writer whom, both in substance and manner, he took in youth for one of his chief models. If to Hazlitt may be applied the caustic saying of Voltaire, Sa réputation s'affermira toujours, parce qu' on le lit guère, so more than half of the various and unequal work that fills the long shelf of Stevenson's collected works will probably become the possession of a small circle of men of letters and be disregarded or forgotten by the wider public. The same fate has already overtaken De Quincey, who likewise resembles Stevenson in multifariousness, in a certain extravagance and whimsicality of mind, and in the possession of a style of great fascination and marked individuality, highly artificial in origin and construction, but become a second nature to its author, and handled with perfect ease and consummate skill. Stevenson as an essayist stands apart from both in virtue of his refined and subtle psychology: as a romance-writer he belongs to a different order of literature. The name by which he was known among the native Samoans, Tusitala, 'the teller of tales,' is that on which his permanent reputation will rest. His delight in stories of adventure was that of a boy, and his story-telling instinct (one of the rarest of literary qualities) unsurpassed within the limits which his nature had assigned to him. He was one of those persons who in a sense never outgrow their boyhood. As has been already remarked, one half of the human race remained for him throughout life almost a sealed book. 'I have never pleased myself with any women of mine,' he wrote towards the end of his life; and the criticism is just. Even his men are for the most part larger children. But of the romance of boyhood and adolescence, and, going still farther back, of the feelings and inner life of childhood, he is an unsurpassed master. Even the philosophy of life developed in both his essays and his romances is that rather of a gifted boy than of a mature man. Like his style, it was fully developed in him by the age of five-and-twenty; and it underwent no change thereafter except, in his last years, an imperceptible and silent reversion towards the traditions of his birth and blood. He has been called, not unjustly, the best loved of modern writers; and the Gods, according to the Greek saying, also loved him: for he died young.

From 'Notes on Edinburgh.'

The ancient and famous metropolis of the North sits overlooking a windy estuary from the slope and summit of three hills. No situation could be more commanding for the head city of a kingdom; none better chosen for noble prospects. From her tall precipice and terraced gardens she looks far and wide on the sea and broad champaigns. To the east you may catch at sunset the spark of the May lighthouse, where the Firth expands into the German Ocean; and away to the west, over all the carse of Stirling, you can see the first snows upon Ben Ledi.

But Edinburgh pays cruelly for her high seat in one of the vilest climates under heaven. She is liable to be beaten upon by all the winds that blow, to be drenched with rain, to be buried in cold sea fogs out of the east, and powdered with the snow as it comes flying southward from the Highland hills. The weather is raw and boisterous in winter, shifty and ungenial in summer, and a downright meteorological purgatory in the spring. The delicate die early, and I, as a survivor, among bleak winds and plumping rain, have been sometimes tempted to envy them their fate. For all who love shelter and the blessings of the sun, who hate dark weather and perpetual tilting against squalls, there could scarcely be found a more unhomey and harassing place of residence. Many such aspire angrily after that Somewhere-else of the imagination, where all troubles are supposed to end. They lean over the great bridge which joins the New Town with the Old—that windiest spot, or high altar, in this northern temple of the winds—and watch the trains smoking out from under them and vanishing into the tunnel on a voyage to brighter skies. Happy the passengers who shake off the dust of Edinburgh, and have heard for the last time the cry of the east wind among her chimney-tops! And yet the place establishes an interest in people's hearts; go where they will, they find no city of the same distinction; go where they will, they take a pride in their old home.

Venice, it has been said, differs from all other cities in the sentiment which she inspires. The rest may have admirers; she only, a famous fair one, counts lovers in her train. And indeed, even by her kindest friends, Edinburgh is not considered in a similar sense. These like her for many reasons, not any one of which is satisfactory in itself. They like her whimsically, if you will, and somewhat as a virtuoso dotes upon his cabinet. Her attraction is romantic in the narrowest meaning of the term. Beautiful as she is, she is not so much beautiful as interesting. She is pre-eminently Gothic, and all the more so since she has set herself off with some Greek airs, and erected classic temples on her crags. In a word, and above all, she is a curiosity. The Palace of Holyrood has been left aside in the growth of Edinburgh, and stands grey and silent in a workman's quarter and among breweries and gasworks. It is a house of many memories. Great people of yore, kings and queens, buffoons and grave ambassadors, played their stately farce for centuries in Holyrood. Wars have been plotted, dancing has lasted deep into the night, murder has been done in its chambers. There Prince Charlie held his phantom levées, and in a very gallant manner represented a fallen dynasty for some hours. Now, all these things of clay are mingled with the dust, the king's crown itself is shown for sixpence to the vulgar; but the stone palace has outlived these changes. For fifty weeks together, it is no more than a show for tourists and a museum of old furniture; but on the fifty-first, behold the palace reawakened and mimicking its past. The Lord Commissioner, a kind of stage sovereign, sits among stage courtiers; a coach and six and clattering escort come and go before the gate; at night the windows are lighted up, and its near neighbours, the workmen, may dance in their own houses to the palace music. And in this the palace is typical. There is a spark among the embers; from time to time the old volcano smokes. Edinburgh has but partly abdicated, and still wears, in parody, her metropolitan trappings. Half a capital and half a country town, the whole city leads a double existence; it has long trances of the one and flashes of the other; like the king of the Black Isles, it is half alive and half a monumental marble. There are armed men and cannon in the citadel overhead; you may see the troops marshalled on the high parade; and at night after the early winter evenfall, and in the morning before the laggard winter dawn, the wind carries abroad over Edinburgh the sound of drums and bugles. Grave judges sit bewigged in what was once the scene of imperial deliberations. Close by in the High Street perhaps the trumpets may sound about the stroke of noon; and you see a troop of citizens in tawdry masquerade; tabard above, heather-mixture trowser below, and the men themselves trudging in the mud among unsympathetic bystanders. The grooms of a well-appointed circus tread the streets with a better presence. And yet these are the Heralds and Pursuivants of Scotland, who are about to proclaim a new law of the United Kingdom before two score boys, and thieves, and hackney-coachmen. Meanwhile every hour the bell of the University rings out over the hum of the streets, and every hour a double tide of students, coming and going, fills the deep archways. And lastly, one night in the springtime—or say one morning rather, at the peep of day—late folk may hear the voices of many men singing a psalm in unison from a church on one side of the old High Street; and a little after, or perhaps a little before, the sound of many men singing a psalm in unison from another church on the opposite side of the way. There will be something in the words about the dew of Hermon, and how goodly it is to see brethren dwelling together in unity. And the late folk will tell themselves that all this singing denotes the conclusion of two yearly ecclesiastical parliaments—the parliaments of Churches which are brothers in many admirable virtues, but not specially like brothers in this particular of a tolerant and peaceful life.

From 'Kidnapped.'

The next day Mr Henderland found for me a man who had a boat of his own and was to cross the Linnhe Loch that afternoon into Appin, fishing. Him he prevailed on to take me, for he was one of his flock; and in this way I saved a long day's travel and the price of two public ferries I must otherwise have passed.

It was near noon before we set out; a dark day with clouds, and the sun shining upon little patches. The sea was here very deep and still, and had scarce a wave upon it; so that I must put the water to my lips before I could believe it to be truly salt. The mountains on either side were high, rough and barren, very black and gloomy in the shadow of the clouds, but all silver-laced with little watercourses where the sun shone upon them. It seemed a hard country, this of Appin, for people to care as much about as Alan did.

There was but one thing to mention. A little after we had started, the sun shone upon a little moving clump of scarlet close in along the waterside to the north. It was much of the same red as soldiers' coats: every now and then, too, there came little sparks and lightnings, as though the sun had struck upon bright steel.

I asked my boatman what it should be; and he answered he supposed it was some of the red soldiers coming from Fort William into Appin, against the poor tenantry of the country. Well, it was a sad sight to me; and whether it was because of my thoughts of Alan, or from something prophetic in my bosom, although this was but the second time I had seen King George's troops, I had no good-will to them.

At last we came so near the point of land at the entering in of Loch Leven that I begged to be set on shore. My boatman (who was an honest fellow and mindful of his promise to the catechist) would fain have carried me on to Balachulish; but as this was to take me farther from my secret destination, I insisted, and was set on shore at last under the wood of Lettermore (or Lettervore, for I have heard it both ways) in Alan's country of Appin.

• This was a wood of birches, growing on a steep, craggy side of a mountain that overhung the loch. It had many openings and ferny howes; and a road or bridle track ran north and south through the midst of it, by the edge of which, where was a spring, I sat down to eat some oat-bread of Mr Henderland's, and think upon my situation.

Here I was not only troubled by a cloud of stinging midges, but far more by the doubts of my mind. What I ought to do, why I was going to join myself with an outlaw and a would-be murderer like Alan, whether I should not be acting more like a man of sense to tramp back to the south country direct, by my own guidance and at my own charges, and what Mr Campbell or even Mr Henderland would think of me if they should ever learn my folly and presumption: these were the doubts that now began to come in on me stronger than ever.

As I was so sitting and thinking, a sound of men and horses came to me through the wood; and presently after, at a turning of the road, I saw four travellers come into view. The way was in this part so rough and narrow that they came single and led their horses by the reins. The first was a great, red-headed gentleman, of an imperious and flushed face, who carried his hat in his hand and fanned himself, for he was in a breathing heat. The second, by his decent black garb and white wig, I correctly took to be a lawyer. The third was a servant, and wore some part of his clothes in tartan, which showed that his master was of a Highland family, and either an outlaw or else in singular good odour with the Government, since the wearing of tartan was against the Act. If I had been better versed in these things, I would have known the tartan to be of the Argyll (or Campbell) colours. This servant had a good-sized port-manteau strapped on his horse, and a net of lemons (to brew punch with) hanging at the saddle-bow; as was often enough the custom with luxurious travellers in that part of the country.

As for the fourth, who brought up the tail, I had seen his like before, and knew him at once to be a sheriff's officer.

I had no sooner seen these people coming than I made up my mind (for no reason that I can tell) to go through with my adventure; and when the first came alongside of me, I rose up from the bracken and asked him the way to Aucharn.

He stopped and looked at me, as I thought, a little oddly; and then, turning to the lawyer, 'Mungo,' said he, 'there's many a man would think this more of a warning than two pyats. Here am I on my road to Duror on the job ye ken; and here is a young lad starts up out of the bracken, and speers if I am on the way to Aucharn.'

'Glenure,' said the other, 'this is an ill subject for jesting.'

These two had now drawn close up and were gazing at me, while the two followers had halted about a stone-cast in the rear.

'And what seek ye in Aucharn?' said Colin Roy Campbell of Glenure; him they called the Red Fox; for he it was that I had stopped.

'The man that lives there,' said I.

'James of the Glens,' says Glenure, musingly; and then to the lawyer: 'Is he gathering his people, think ye?'

'Anyway,' says the lawyer, 'we shall do better to bide where we are, and let the soldiers rally us.'

'If you are concerned for me,' said I, 'I am neither of his people nor yours, but an honest subject of King George, owing no man and fearing no man.'

'Why, very well said,' replies the Factor. 'But if I may make so bold as ask, what does this honest man so far from his country? and why does he come seeking the brother of Ardsheel? I have power here, I must tell you. I am King's Factor upon several of these estates, and have twelve files of soldiers at my back.'

'I have heard a waif word in the country,' said I, a little nettled, 'that you were a hard man to drive.'

He still kept looking at me, as if in doubt.

'Well,' said he, at last, 'your tongue is bold; but I am no unfriend to plainness. If ye had asked me the way to the door of James Stewart on any other day but this, I would have set ye right and bidden ye God speed. But to-day—eh, Mungo?' And he turned again to look at the lawyer.

But just as he turned there came the shot of a firelock from higher up the hill; and with the very sound of it Glenure fell upon the road.

'O, I am dead!' he cried, several times over.

The lawyer had caught him up and held him in his arms, the servant standing over and clasping his hands. And now the wounded man looked from one to another with scared eyes, and there was a change in his voice that went to the heart.

'Take care of yourselves,' says he. 'I am dead.'

He tried to open his clothes as if to look for the wound, but his fingers slipped on the buttons. With that he gave a great sigh, his head rolled on his shoulder, and he passed away.

From 'Pulvis et Umbra.'

Of the Kosmos in the last resort, science reports many doubtful things and all of them appalling. There seems no substance to this solid globe on which we stamp: nothing but symbols and ratios. Symbols and ratios carry us and bring us forth and beat us down; gravity that swings the incommensurable suns and worlds through space, is but a figment varying inversely as the squares of distances; and the suns and worlds themselves, imponderable figures of abstraction, NH_3 and H_2O . Consideration dares not dwell upon this view; that way madness lies; science carries us into zones of speculation, where there is no habitable city for the mind of man.

But take the Kosmos with a grosser faith, as our senses give it us. We behold space sown with rotatory islands, suns and worlds and the shards and wrecks of systems: some, like the sun, still blazing; some rotting, like the earth; others, like the moon, stable in desolation. All of these we take to be made of something we call matter: a thing which no analysis can help us to conceive; to whose incredible properties no familiarity can reconcile our minds. This stuff, when not purified by the lustration of fire, rots uncleanly into something we call life; seized through all its atoms with a pediculous malady; swelling in tumours that become independent, sometimes even (by an abhorrent prodigy) locomotory; one splitting into millions, millions cohering into one, as the malady proceeds through varying stages. This vital putrescence of the dust, used as we are to it, yet strikes us with occasional disgust, and the profusion of worms in a piece of ancient turf, or the air of a marsh darkened with insects, will sometimes check our breathing so that we aspire for cleaner places. But none is clean: the moving sand is infected with lice; the pure spring, where it bursts out of the mountain, is a mere issue of worms; even in the hard rock the crystal is forming.

In two main shapes this eruption covers the countenance of the earth: the animal and the vegetable: one in some degree the inversion of the other: the second rooted to the spot; the first coming detached out of its natal mud, and scurrying abroad with the myriad feet of insects or towering into the heavens on the wings of birds: a thing so inconceivable that, if it be well considered, the heart stops. To what passes with the anchored vermin, we have little clue: doubtless they have their joys and sorrows, their delights and killing agonies: it appears not how. But of the locomotory, to which we ourselves belong, we can tell more. These share with us a thousand miracles: the miracles of sight, of hearing, of the projection of sound, things that bridge space; the miracles of memory and reason, by which the present is conceived, and when it is gone, its image kept living in the brains of man and brute; the miracle of reproduction, with its imperious desires and staggering consequences. And to put the last touch upon this mountain mass of the revolting and the inconceivable, all these prey upon each other, lives tearing other lives in pieces, cramming them inside themselves, and by that summary process, growing fat: the vegetarian, the whale, perhaps the tree, not less than the lion of the desert; for the vegetarian is only the eater of the dumb.

Meanwhile our rotatory island loaded with predatory life, and more drenched with blood, both animal and vegetable, than ever mutinied ship, scuds through space with unimaginable speed, and turns alternate cheeks to the reverberation of a blazing world, ninety million miles away.

What a monstrous spectre is this man, the disease of the agglutinated dust, lifting alternate feet or lying drugged with slumber; killing, feeding, growing, bringing forth small copies of himself; grown upon with hair like grass, fitted with eyes that move and glitter in his face; a thing to set children screaming;—and yet looked at nearer, known as his fellows know him, how surprising are his attributes! Poor soul, here for so little, cast among so many hardships, filled with desires so incommensurate and so inconsistent, savagely surrounded, savagely descended, irremediably condemned to prey upon his fellow lives: who should have blamed him had he been of a piece with his destiny and a being merely barbarous? And we look and behold him instead filled with imperfect virtues: infinitely childish, often admirably valiant, often touchingly kind; sitting down, amidst his momentary life, to debate of right and wrong and the attributes of the deity; rising up to do battle for an egg or die for an idea; singling out his friends and his mate with cordial affection; bringing forth in pain, rearing with long-suffering solicitude, his young. To touch the heart of his mystery, we find in him one thought, strange to the point of lunacy: the thought of duty; the thought of something owing to himself, to his neighbour, to his God: an ideal of decency, to which he would rise if it were possible; a limit of shame, below which, if it be possible, he will not stoop.

(From Across the Plains.)

From 'Underwoods.'

It is the season now to go
About the country high and low,
Among the lilacs hand in hand,
And two by two in fairy land.

The brooding boy, the sighing maid,
Wholly fain and half afraid,
Now meet along 'he hazel'd brook
To pass and linger, pause and look.

A year ago, and blithely paired,
Their rough-and-tumble play they shared;
They kissed and quarrelled, laughed and cried,
A year ago at Eastertide.

With bursting heart, with fiery face,
She strove against him in the race;
He unabashed her garter saw,
That now would touch her skirts with awe.

Now by the stile ablaze she stops,
And his demurer eyes he drops;
Now they exchange averted sighs
Or stand and marry silent eyes.

And he to her a hero is,
And sweeter she than primroses,
Their common silence dearer far
Than nightingale and mavis are.

Now when they sever wedded hands,
Joy trembles in their bosom-strands
And lovely laughter leaps and falls
Upon their lips in madrigals.

(No. iv.)

From 'Songs of Travel.'

Blows the wind to-day, and the sun and the rain are flying,

Blows the wind on the moors to-day and now,
Where about the graves of the martyrs the whaups are crying,

My heart remembers how!

Grey recumbent tombs of the dead in desert places,
Standing stones on the vacant wine-red moor,
Hills of sheep, and the homes of the silent vanished races,
And winds, austere and pure:

Be it granted me to behold you again in dying,
Hills of home! and to hear again the call;
Hear about the graves of the martyrs the peewees crying,
And hear no more at all.

(No. xliii.; To S. R. Crockett, on receiving a dedication.)

Standard editions of the works are: the 'Edinburgh' (28 vols., ed. by Sir Sidney Colvin, 1894-98), 'Pentland' (20 vols., ed. by Sir E. Gosse, 1906-7), 'Swanston' (25 vols. 1911-12), 'Vailima' (26 vols. 1922), 'Tusitala' (35 vols. 1923). The Waif Woman was first published in 1916. His Life, by Sir Graham Balfour (2 vols. 1901), supplements the four volumes of Letters edited by Sir Sidney Colvin in 1911. Other biographies are by Miss E. B. Simpson (1898), J. A. Stewart (1924), and Miss R. Masson (1923), who also edited I Can Remember Robert Louis Stevenson (1922). There are studies by Raleigh (1893), L. C. Cornford (1899), F. Watt (1913), F. Swinnerton (new ed. 1924), G. K. Chesterton (1927); and Bibliographies by J. H. Slater (1914) and W. F. Prideaux (revised ed. 1918). See also the 'R.L.S.' number of The Bookman (1913).

J. W. MACKAIL.

Francis Herbert Bradley (1846-1924), Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, published Ethical Studies (1876), Principles of Logic (1883), Appearance and Reality (1893), Essays on Truth and Reality (1914). All his work is subtle in thought and brilliant in style; Appearance and Reality is probably the most important and influential piece of pure metaphysic that has appeared in Britain since Hume died. Bradley's philosophy is a highly individual form of Absolute Idealism.

William Hurrell Mallock (1849-1923), born at Cockington Court, Devon, won the Newdigate in 1871 whilst at Balliol, Oxford. He made a hit with The New Republic (1877) and The New Paul and Virginia (1878); wrote A Romance of the Nineteenth Century, and other novels; published a poem on Lucretius and several volumes of verse; and in Aristocracy and Evolution, Religion as a Credible Doctrine, The Limits of Pure Democracy, and other works sought to make serious contributions to the solution of religious, political, and sociological problems. His Memoirs of Life and Literature appeared in 1920.

Sir Henry Rider Haggard, born at Bradenham Hall in Norfolk, 22nd June 1856, and educated at Ipswich Grammar School, held several official positions in South Africa in 1875-79, and on his return was called to the Bar. His first book, Cetewayo and his White Neighbours (1882), attracted little notice; and two novels, Dawn (1884) and The Witch's Head (1885), were only successful after King Solomon's Mines (1885) and She (1887) had by their novelty and imaginative ingenuity won great and immediate popularity. Among his novels are Jess (1887), Allan Quatermain (1887), Maiwa's Revenge (1888), Cleopatra (1889), Allan's Wife (1890), Montezuma's Daughter (1893), Swallow, a Story of the Great Trek (1897), The Child of Storm (1903), Ayesha (1905), Finished (1917), The Ancient Allan (1920), She and Allan (1921). The World's Desire (1891) was written in collaboration with Andrew Lang. Keenly interested in agriculture and imperial problems, Sir Rider Haggard (kt. in 1912; K.B.E. in 1919) published A Farmer's Year (1899), Rural England (1903), Rural Denmark (1911). He died 14th May 1925.

Mrs Humphry Ward (1851–1920) was born at Hobart in Tasmania, eldest daughter of Thomas Arnold, second son of Dr Arnold of Rugby, who, having resigned his Tasmanian inspectorship of schools on becoming a Roman Catholic, was by Newman appointed Professor of English Literature in a Catholic college at Dublin. Mary Augusta Arnold was already known as a scholarly and accomplished writer when in 1872 she married Thomas Humphry Ward, editor of The English Poets. She began early to contribute to Macmillan's Magazine, and gave the fruits of her Spanish studies to Smith and Wace's Dictionary of Christian Biography. A child's story, Milly and Olly (1881), Miss Bretherton (1884), a slight novel, and the translation of Amiel's Journal Intime (1885) prepared the way for the spiritual romance of Robert Elsmere (1888), which became the novel of the season. It describes the struggle towards a new theism of a soul that has lost the old faith. For all its thoughtfulness and insight it is marred as a work of art by diffuseness, didacticism, and a fatal inability to make its characters live. David Grieve (1892) has the same faults with fewer merits. Of her later novels, Marcella deals with politics and Helbeck of Bannisdale with modern Catholicism. Her daughter, Mrs. Trevelyan, wrote her Life (1923).

Madame Duclaux, a bilingual authoress, was born in 1857 at Leamington, was educated at Brussels, in Italy, and at University College, London, and under her maiden name of Agnes Mary Frances Robinson was well known as an English poetess ere, in 1888, she married Professor James Darmesteter (died 1894), a learned Parisian, who was professor at the Collège de France. In 1901 she married Professor Duclaux, Director of the Pasteur Institute (died 1904). Her Handful of Honeysuckles showed her a poetess of rare gifts, and the impression was confirmed by her Crowned Hippolytus, a translation from Euripides; The New Arcadia and other Poems; An Italian Garden, a book of songs; Songs, Ballads, and a Garden Play; and Retrospect and other Poems. Her works include a novel, Arden; books on The End of the Middle Ages, on The French Ideal, Emily Brontë, Victor Hugo (1920), Pascal (1927); a Short History of France (1918); Lives of Margaret Queen of Navarre, Racine, etc., and a mediæval anthology; and in French, books on Froissart, Mme. de Sévigné, and Renan, and Grands Écrivains d'Outremanche (1901).

Michael Field is the pseudonym adopted by two ladies who wrote poetry in collaboration, Miss Katharine Harris Bradley (1846–1914) and her niece, Miss Edith Emma Cooper (1862–1913). Some of their plays, like Callirrhoe (1884) and Brutus Ultor (1887), have classical themes, but the majority are based on passages of English and Scottish history. Such are Fair Rosamund (1884); The Father's Tragedy (1885), dealing with the fate of David, Earl of Rothesay; William Rufus (1886); Canute the Great (1887); and The Tragic Mary (1890), who of course is Mary Queen of Scots. These are written after the Elizabethan manner. Callirrhoe is pretty and ingenious, but not at all Hellenic in tone or quality. In the Name of Time, their last work (1919), has Carloman for hero. The lyrical poems published under the pseudonym are less ambitious and have more decided charm. These include Long Ago (1889), Sight and Song (1892), Underneath the Bough (1893), Wild Honey (1908), Poems of Adoration (1912), Mystic Trees (1913).

Alice Meynell (1850–1922), younger sister of Lady Butler the battle-painter, was educated entirely by her father, T. J. Thompson, with whom she lived in England and Italy until her marriage in 1877 with Wilfrid Meynell, who wrote much for the reviews and in 1903 published a Life of Beaconsfield. Preludes (1875), her first volume of verse, was illustrated by her sister, and was republished with some changes and additions in 1893. It was praised by Ruskin and Rossetti, and contains verse of high quality for so young a poetess. For many years her literary activity was mainly employed in essay-writing; her Anthology of English Poetry (1897) showed delicate literary discernment. Her works include The Rhythm of Life (1893), The Colour of Life (1896), Childhood (1917), and other sets of essays; a sympathetic criticism of Ruskin; Later Poems (1902) and Collected Poems (1913), and Selected Essays (1914). Her output is small, her measures are simple, but the workmanship is graceful and finished. See a Memoir by her daughter Viola, a novelist and poet. The Meynells befriended Francis Thompson.

Mary St Leger Harrison (1852–1931), one of the most powerful of women novelists of her time, the younger daughter of Charles Kingsley, spent her girlhood at Eversley Rectory. She married the rector of Clovelly in that North Devon so dear to her father, but became a widow in 1897, and turned Roman Catholic. As 'Lucas Malet' she made her mark with Mrs Lorimer (1882) and Colonel Enderby's Wife (1885)—both of them, like most of her novels, dealing frankly with the ethical aspects of human life and society. Her best-known story, The Wages of Sin (1891), was followed by The Carissima (1896), The Gateless Barrier (1900), The History of Sir Richard Calmady (1901), and The Tall Villa (1920), to mention no others. She completed her father's unpublished The Tutor's Story (1916).

Virginia Woolf (1882–1941) was a daughter of Sir Leslie Stephen. She married Mr Leonard Woolf in 1912. Too delicate for school or college, she read widely and judiciously in her father's fine library. The fruits of her reading enrich the criticisms of The Common Reader (two series, 1925 and 1932). Her first novel, The Voyage Out (1915), was in the traditional novel form and attracted little attention. No more did Night and Day (1919). Then she threw away the traditional tools of the trade, and wrote Jacob's Room (1922) on a new method, presenting twenty years of life in a series of flashes like pictures on the screen. The construction of Mrs Dalloway (1925), on the other hand, is more like that of an orchestral symphony. The whole action—to call it 'action'—occupies twelve hours, twelve hours of Mrs. Dalloway's life. Everything centres on her, as in To the Lighthouse (1927) everything centres on Mrs Ramsay, alive or dead. The Waves (1931) and The Years (1937) are experiments still more complex and resonant. In Mr Bennett and Mrs Brown (1924) she had blamed Bennett for subordinating character to material accessories. She herself excels in rendering the minds of women—not their purposive thoughts only but all the half-sensed impressions, memories, dreams, emotions that make up their mental life. Yet the woman-artist must not be all woman. Orlando (1928) is a fantastic biography of a being who lives for three centuries and turns from man into woman midway, an allegory on Coleridge's text that genius is androgynous. A Room of One's Own (1929) reveals her purpose in writing, to pave the way for the Superwoman, the female Shakespeare who is yet to come.

William Sharp (1855–1905), born at Paisley, in his own name published Sospiri di Roma and other volumes of verse, novels, and biographies of Rossetti, Shelley, Heine, and others. As 'Fiona Macleod' he wrote a remarkable series of Celtic tales, romances, and poems, beginning in 1894 with Pharais, a Romance of the Isles, followed by The Mountain Lovers, The Sineater, Green Fire, The Dominion of Dreams, and similar tales; From the Hills of Dream, poems and 'prose rhythms'; The House of Usna, a play; The Divine Adventure and other volumes of essays. 'Fiona Macleod' found themes in the Celtic myths of early Ireland and Scotland, and became one of the chief representatives of that 'Celtic Revival' of which Mr W. B. Yeats was the protagonist. 'The beauty of the world, the pathos of life, the gloom, the fatalism, the spiritual glamour—it is out of these, the spiritual inheritance of the Gael, that I have fashioned these tales.' Till his death Sharp maintained the secret of his pseudonym. His widow wrote his Life (1910), and arranged his works.

Sir James Matthew Barrie (1860–1937), born at Kirriemuir, a small town in Angus which he made famous, was educated at the local school, at Dumfries Academy, and at Edinburgh University, took his M.A. in 1882, and soon settled in London as a contributor to such weekly journals as the Speaker and the National Observer. His first book, Better Dead (1887), was largely a satire on London life; his second, Auld Licht Idylls (1888), and its successor and sequel, A Window in Thrums (1889), made him one of the most popular writers of the day. Few sketches of Scottish small-town life show as much keen observation and quaint humour as are to be found in these vignettes of an extinct generation of country weavers. Barrie's first full-length novel, The Little Minister (1891), is less true to nature, less happy as a work of art. Other stories include When a Man's Single; My Lady Nicotine; Sentimental Tommy, with its sequel, Tommy and Grizel; The Little White Bird; Peter Pan in Kensington Gardens, and Peter and Wendy (1911). Margaret Ogilvy (1896) is a picture of the life and death of his mother. His dramatic ventures began with Walker, London (1892), a slight but agreeable farce; The Professor's Love Story; and a setting of his own Little Minister. These were wonderfully well received, and, followed by The Admirable Crichton, Quality Street, and Little Mary, won for their writer a still wider audience than he had attained as a 'Kailyard' novelist. His success as a dramatist was crowned by Peter Pan (1904), whose delicate fantasy and whimsical humour appeal perennially to young and old alike. Later plays are Alice Sit-by-the-Fire, What Every Woman Knows, A Kiss for Cinderella, Dear Brutus, Mary Rose, and Shall We Join the Ladies? His stories and sketches deal mostly with the lives of humble folk in his native 'Thrums,' his plays with English middle-class life. The Boy David (1936) was a kind of miracle play based on the Bible story. The Greenwood Hat (1937) covers his début in London. See Life by Denis Mackail (1941).

George Bernard Shaw, an original, brilliant, and (latterly) eminently popular dramatic writer and unconventional critic of things in general, was born at Dublin in 1856. Privately educated, he came in 1876 to London, and there embarked, at first with small success, on a career of journalism and literary work. Between 1880 and 1883 he produced four novels, the best-known of which is Cashel Byron's Profession, with a boxer for hero. In 1883 he became a Socialist agitator, and helped to form the programme of the Fabian Society. The Quintessence of Ibsenism was issued in 1891 (new ed. 1913). In 1892 appeared the first of Shaw's clever and eccentric plays, Widowers' Houses, afterwards included, with The Phil- anderer and the censored Mrs Warren's Profession, in Plays Unpleasant (1898). The companion volume of Plays Pleasant contained Arms and the Man, Candida, You Never Can Tell, and The Man of Destiny. A third provocatively titled volume—Three Plays for Puritans (1900)—is made up of The Devil's Disciple, Cæsar and Cleopatra, and Captain Brassbound's Conversion. In Man and Superman (1903) Shaw expounds at abnormal length his views on sex relations and the 'life-force'; in abridged form this brilliant comedy draws delighted audiences. John Bull's Other Island (1904), Major Barbara, and The Doctor's Dilemma (1906) added to the dramatist's fame abroad and his notoriety at home, which was accentuated by the censoring of The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet (1909). Thus thwarted in serious satire, Shaw turned to witty farce, Fanny's First Play (1911), Androcles and the Lion, Pygmalion, among others. While Back to Methuselah (1921), a cycle of five plays, was too colossal for the stage, Saint Joan (1923) was a theatrical as well as a literary success. Its heroine, Joan of Arc, is perhaps the most 'sympathetic' of all his characters. Among his later works, The Intelligent Woman's Guide to Socialism (1928) recommends the equalization of incomes as a panacea for social evils; but Shaw's idol is efficiency, not freedom, and his play of The Apple Cart (1930), with its advocacy of government by experts, should have prepared his Socialist admirers for his apparently new-found enthusiasm for dictators, whom, however, he satirised in Geneva (1938). In Good King Charles's Golden Days (1939) is a typical discourse on government and other matters. Too True to be Good (1932) and The Millionairess (1936) are below his best. In 1925 he was awarded a Nobel prize. Age cannot wither this apparently perverse purveyor of paradox, this gifted provoker of mirth and of controversy, this earnest, exuberant, egotistical pamphleteer who writes plays to his prefaces.

John Davidson (1857–1909), son of a minister of the Evangelical Union, was born at Barrhead. After some twelve years as chemist's assistant, clerk, and teacher, he went to London as a journalist in 1890. Already he had published several dramas, the first being Bruce, a Chronicle Play (1886), after the Elizabethan manner. Two series of Fleet Street Eclogues (1893–95) brought him recognition, and with Ballads and Songs (1894) he reached some measure of popularity. After these appeared more ballads, plays, and a series of 'Testaments' expounding a Nietzsche-like philosophy. He also wrote Perfervid (1890) and other novels. Unequal, didactic, often flat or turgid, his verse is, at its best—in his lyrics—vivid, forcible, graceful, and luxuriant; in his treatment of metropolitan scenes he shows at times a quite poignant realism. Morbidly depressed, Davidson sought escape by drowning.

Sir William Watson (1858–1935), was born, a farmer's son, at Burley-in-Wharfedale. From an early age he showed a poetic gift, and in 1880 appeared The Prince's Quest, his first published work, manifesting strongly the influence of William Morris. Neither it, however, nor the Epigrams of Art, Life, and Nature, which came out in 1884, attracted much attention; and it was not till the thoughtful and touching verses on 'Wordsworth's Grave,' in the measure of Gray's Elegy and the manner of Matthew Arnold, were issued along with some other short pieces in 1890 that he was generally recognised as a poet. In 1892 he produced another pleasing elegy entitled 'Lachrymæ Musarum,' on the death of Tennyson, bringing it out along with several other lyrics, one of which, 'England my Mother,' bears close resemblance to Henley's much more powerful 'England, my England.' The Eloping Angels (1893) is a clever caprice in Byronic ottava rima, and, like the majority of its predecessors, has something of the air of an echo of the great masters. More original and personal are the sonnets of The Year of Shame and The Purple East (1896), although they are deformed by their fierce and almost hysterical denunciation of the 'unspeakable Turk.' Notable poems are his 'Father of the Forest' (1895) and 'The Hope of the World' (1897). In 1903 he published For England: Poems written in Estrangement. Other works are Excursions in Criticism (1893), a volume of essays; New Poems (1909); The Muse in Exile (1913); The Man who Saw (1917); The Superhuman Antagonists (1919); Poems, Brief and New (1925). Watson made a selection of his poems, published with notes in 1928; and in 1936 appeared The Poems of Sir William Watson, 1878–1935.

Oscar O'Flahertie Wilde (1856–1900), poet and dramatist, was the younger son of Sir William Wilde, eminent both as surgeon and as antiquary, and of Jane Elgee, a lady who under the nom de guerre of 'Speranza' contributed some inspiring verse to The Spirit of the Nation. He was educated first at Trinity College, Dublin, and afterwards at Magdalen, Oxford, where he won the Newdigate prize in 1878 by a poem on Ravenna. Here he began that cult of 'æstheticism' for which he quickly became famous. This movement, which took an astonishing hold on the British public, derived its impulse mainly from Wilde, and its influence has been much more than ephemeral. In 1881 appeared a volume of poems, marked by a singular mixture of verbal felicity and affected sentiment. In 1888 Wilde entered on a period of great activity, first as a writer of novels and stories, and later as a dramatist. In the former kind The Portrait of Dorian Gray (1891) is his chief work, and its success was due, in part at least, to qualities not exclusively literary. The popularity of his plays was more legitimately earned. Lady Windermere's Fan (1892), A Woman of No Importance (1893), The Ideal Husband, and The Importance of being Earnest (1895) were all of them successful on the stage, and are admirable specimens of light comedy, abounding in vivacious dialogue and dexterous situations. Wilde's career was abruptly terminated in the height of his dramatic success; and after undergoing two years' imprisonment for an odious criminal offence, he was released in 1897. The Ballad of Reading Gaol (1898) and De Profundis (1905) embody his experiences as a convict. There are monographs by Ransome, Hopkins (1913), Sherard (1915), Harris (1920).

George Moore (1852–1933), novelist, playwright, and art critic, was the son of a Mayo landowner and M.P. of literary talent. Educated at Oscott, he soon gave proof that his father's taste for letters had descended to him. His earliest venture was in verse. Flowers of Passion appeared in 1877, and Pagan Poems in 1881. Following these efforts, Moore spent several years in the study of art in Paris, where he imbibed views which coloured his subsequent work. In 1885 a translation of Zola's Pot-bouille expressly avowed the direction which Moore's artistic and literary sympathies had now taken; but in A Mummer's Wife, a novel published in the previous year, he had indicated his enthusiasm for 'realism' plainly enough. Esther Waters (1894; revised ed. 1920) is in the same vein. Of Evelyn Innes (1896), and its continuation, Sister Teresa (1901), the heroine is a great singer who turns nun. Moore's career thereafter was chiefly associated with the Celtic Revival, an odd development in view of his earlier tendencies. That his intimate connection with the school of art and letters in France at that date should have led him to the conclusion that the English language had ceased to be an apt vehicle for literary purposes was less surprising than that the disciple of realism should find the elixir of a new literary life in the idealism of the Celtic movement. With Yeats and others, he contributed to Ideals in Ireland (1901), and he wrote The Bending of the Bough, a comedy, for the Irish Literary Theatre. As an art critic he most deservedly won distinction, his best work being found in Modern Painting (1898). In 1903 he renounced the Roman Catholic faith. Hail and Farewell (3 parts, 1911–14), like Memoirs of my Dead Life (1906), is autobiographical; it records his lost faith in the Irish movement. Later works include The Brook Kerith (on the story of Christ), Abelard and Heloise, The Coming of Gabrielle (1920), and The Passing of the Essenes.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle (1859–1930), son of a clerk in the Exchequer Office in Edinburgh, and nephew of Richard Doyle of Punch, studied medicine at Edinburgh. He wrote for Chambers's Journal when yet a student, and in 1887 and 1888 attracted notice by A Study in Scarlet and Micah Clarke, which were followed in 1890 by the still more popular White Company. Thereafter he was a successful author by profession, especially as the creator of a special type of detective story, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes (1891). The popularity of this character constrained his creator to make him the hero of several other series of adventures. Brigadier Gerard, Rodney Stone, The Hound of the Baskervilles, The Lost World, The Poison Belt (1913) are among the most successful of his later tales. Loose yet vigorous in style, his detective stories and historical and scientific romances are full of invention and movement. He also wrote The Great Boer War (1900), and in The Cause and Conduct of the War defended Britain's action in South Africa against misrepresentation abroad. Besides a History of the British Campaign in France and Flanders (1915–20), he latterly wrote much in advocacy of spiritualism.

Andrew Cecil Bradley (1851–1935) was Professor of English at Liverpool and Glasgow, and (later) Professor of Poetry at Oxford. His Commentary on In Memoriam (1901), Shakespearean Tragedy (1904), Oxford Lectures on Poetry (1909), and A Miscellany (1929) are noble examples of interpretative criticism in the Coleridgean tradition—sensitive, philosophical, and utterly sincere.

Sir Sidney Lee (1859–1926), to whom Britain is largely indebted for the carrying out of the monumental Dictionary of National Biography, was born in London, and studied at the City of London School and Balliol College, Oxford. From the beginning of the Dictionary of National Biography to the twenty-first volume (1883–90) he was assistant-editor; in 1890–91 (vols. xxii.–xxvi.) he was joint-editor with Sir Leslie Stephen; and from 1891 to the conclusion of the work (with the sixty-third volume), besides supplements (6 vols.) and epitome (1891–1912), was sole editor. In 1913 he was appointed Professor of English at East London College. His new edition of Lord Berners's translation of Huon of Bordeaux (1883) was followed by a recension and continuation of Lord Herbert of Cherbury's autobiography. He wrote on Stratford-on-Avon, on the first folio Shakespeare, a standard life of the poet (1898; revised 1922), and memoirs of Queen Victoria (1902) and Edward VII (1925). The article on Shakespeare in this Cyclopædia of Literature (vol. I. p. 355) is from his pen.

Rudyard Kipling, journalist, writer of short stories, novelist, and bard of Empire, was born at Bombay on 30th December 1865. His father, John Lockwood Kipling, C.I.E., was an artist of considerable knowledge and skill; his mother (née Alice Macdonald), with her daughter, published poems (Hand in Hand, 1902) of no small literary power, rare delicacy and refinement of feeling. Rudyard Kipling was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho, North Devon. Afterwards returning to India, he became a journalist and acted at Allahabad as assistant-editor on the Civil and Military Gazette and the Pioneer, in which were printed the stories which, when collected and republished in book form, first drew the attention of the reading public to his merits. He travelled widely in China, Japan, Africa, Australia, and America. After a seven years' residence in the United States he returned to England, but made frequent lengthy visits to South Africa. He died on 18th January 1936. Kipling's publications include Departmental Ditties (1886), Plain Tales from the Hills, Soldiers Three, In Black and White, Life's Handicap, The Light that Failed (1891), Barrack-Room Ballads, Many Inventions, The Jungle Book (1894), The Second Jungle Book, The Seven Seas (verse), Captains Courageous, Stalky & Co., Kim (1901), Just So Stories, The Five Nations (poems), Traffics and Discoveries, Puck of Pook's Hill (1906), Actions and Reactions, Rewards and Fairies, The Harbour Watch (play, 1913), France at War and Fringes of the Fleet (1915), A Diversity of Creatures, The Years Between (1918, verse, including 'France'), Letters of Travel (1920), Thy Servant a Dog (1930). In 1907 he was awarded a Nobel prize.

No attempt can be made to fix the place which he will eventually occupy in the literature of his age and country. The task would be made additionally difficult by the curious and almost freakish developments and changes which marked his literary power in the course of the last forty years. He became known originally as a writer of short stories dealing with Indian life, and particularly with the life of the British soldier in India. These showed him to be possessed of a method at once vivid and strong, and of an uncompromising directness of expression somewhat rare amongst the writers of the day. The stories were not less remarkable for the extraordinary keenness of observation displayed by the writer. There, limned to the life, were the Cockney, the Yorkshireman, and the Irishman, three types of the great mass of their fellows who make up the rank and file of the army. Their weaknesses and the peculiar code of morals that is supposed to distinguish the regular soldier from his civilian fellow-countrymen were set down as faithfully as their courage, their fatalistic endurance, their admiration of manliness, and their resourcefulness. The success of Soldiers Three and Plain Tales from the Hills was incontestable, and they were followed by sketches displaying the same graphic power in conjunction with imaginative insight and a vein of tenderness in some of the tales that formed a strange contrast to the somewhat brutal but intentional roughness of other writings by the young author. Less successful was The Light that Failed, Kipling's first attempt at a novel. The same qualities and the same contrast are to be observed in this book as in the collections of shorter stories, but the coarseness outweighs and overpowers the tenderness; and the style of writing which, in spite of its jerkiness and its lack of emotional restraint, carried the writer triumphantly through the few pages of the short story seems to lag and halt when forced into his service for a novel. While the two Jungle Books and Kim must not be forgotten by those who endeavour to estimate Kipling's position as a writer, it may safely be said that his chief triumphs were gained by his poems. The best of these, such as 'The Ballad of East and West' and 'Recessional,' reach a very high level indeed. In the 'Ballad' is to be found that union of fiery descriptive power with nobility of feeling and an artfully simple metrical dexterity which stamps all great ballads. No doubt many of Kipling's pieces in verse, notably the Barrack-Room Ballads, with their coarse dialect jargon and their almost affected brutality of sentiment, are destined merely to a passing popularity. Of many of his other pieces, too, it may be said that the strenuous and often aggressive patriot has submerged the poet; but if he be judged by the best of his work in poetry, it may be affirmed that amongst writers of his day he was unsurpassed for vigour of diction combined with an imaginative power that holds the reader in its spell even when the subject dealt with by the poet is most terrible and distressing.

RUDOLF C. LEHMANN.

His Poems were collected in 3 vols. (1929). His autobiography, Something of Myself, appeared in 1937.

Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins (1863–1933), the son of a London head-master and clergyman, went to Marlborough and Balliol College, and was called to the Bar in 1887. The Prisoner of Zenda (1894), though not his first book, was that which made his pen-name of 'Anthony Hope' familiar and put Ruritania on the map of historical fiction. Compounded of romanticism, satire, modernity, and burlesque, it has found many imitators. The Dolly Dialogues (1894) set a new fashion in natural dialogue. Other works are Rupert of Hentzau, Quisnibé, and an Autobiography (1927).

William Frend de Morgan (1839–1917) was an artist by profession, specialising in stained glass and ceramics. He was sixty-five when, to beguile a convalescence, he began to write. Joseph Vance (1906) was followed in rapid succession by Alice-for-Short, Somehow Good, It Never can Happen Again, An Affair of Dishonour, A Likely Story, and When Ghost meets Ghost—all issued before the War. He died of trench-fever, caught while visiting invalid soldiers, leaving The Old Madhouse and The Old Man's Youth to be completed by his widow. An Affair of Dishonour was a period piece, but all his other novels dealt with the upper-middle-class England of his youth, and brought into the twentieth century an air from the days of Dickens. De Morgan had led a full and happy life, and known many interesting people. His father was Augustus de Morgan (see p. 398), and William Morris was his friend. His true Muse was Memory, and he wrote best when, as in Joseph Vance, he trusted to her most, reviving the Victorian scene and peopling it with attractive and life-like characters.

William Butler Yeats was born near Dublin in 1865. His father, J. B. Yeats, was an artist, as is his brother, Jack Yeats; and he himself studied art for three years. In the nineties he was in London, consorting with the Yellow Book aesthetes, but the call of Ireland drew him home to lead the Irish Renaissance movement. He helped to found the Irish Literary Theatre, later known as the Abbey Theatre, became a director of it, and wrote plays for it on old Irish themes. From 1922 to 1928 he was a member of the Senate of the Irish Free State. He died on 28th January, 1939. W. B. Yeats always hated materialism and loved the mystical, even the magical. He believed that individual minds and memories are waves on the sea of one Great Mind and Memory, which can be evoked by symbols. He trafficked with theosophy, spiritualism, and astrology, tried to systematize Blake's Prophetic Books, and, failing, elaborated in A Vision (1925) an equally incomprehensible system of his own. Better inspiration came to him from the heroic mythology of Ireland, the legends of Deirdre and Cuchulain. As an artist he passed through several phases. His earliest poems show influences from Shelley and Rossetti; in the nineties he was affected by the French Symbolists; but on his return to Ireland he abandoned that Palace of Art and turned to 'cold Clare rock,' resolved to write 'for [his] own race and for reality'; later still came that experience of administration and practical politics which has made his recent muse less austere. He re-edited his poems so often as to obscure the development of his style, but The Wanderings of Oisín (1889), The Wind Among the Reeds (1899), The Green Helmet (1910), and The Tower (1928) with The Winding Stair (1929) represent fairly the four phases described above. His plays, such as Cathleen ní Hoolihan (1902), On Baile's Strand (1904), Deirdre (1907), whether in verse or in prose, are rather dramatic poems than dramas: the characters are symbols, embodied ideas, not persons of flesh and blood. His prose, too, is the prose of a poet, witness the beautiful Ideas of Good and Evil (1903), and Per Amica Silentia Lunæ (1918). The Trembling of the Veil (1926) is an autobiography.

Yeats has not Synge's sardonic humour and sense of drama; nor is he so pure a visionary as 'A. E.'; but he is a better poet than either. Indeed, he is not merely the best of modern Irish poets; he is one of the most distinguished figures in contemporary literature.

An Irish Airman foresees his Death.

I know that I shall meet my fate
Somewhere among the clouds above;
Those that I fight I do not hate,
Those that I guard I do not love;
My country is Kiltartan Cross,
My countrymen Kiltartan's poor,
No likely end could bring them loss
Or leave them happier than before.
Nor law, nor duty bade me fight,
Nor public men, nor cheering crowds,
A lonely impulse of delight
Drove to this tumult in the clouds;
I balanced all, brought all to mind,
The years to come seemed waste of breath,
A waste of breath the years behind
In balance with this life, this death.

John Millington Synge (1871–1909) was born, a barrister's son, at Newtown Little, near Dublin, the youngest of a family of eight. Having taken his B.A. at Trinity College, Dublin (1892), he studied music in Germany, then dabbled in literary criticism in Paris till W. B. Yeats, in 1899, induced him to return to Ireland to gather on the spot the material for a descriptive book on The Aran Islands (pub. 1907). Riders to the Sea (1903) showed the sombre influence of Loti's Pêcheur d'Islande; another one-act play, In the Shadow of the Glen (1904), was really earlier in composition. A third short play, The Well of the Saints (1905), was followed in 1907 by his best-known work, The Playboy of the Western World, a comedy in three acts, which stirred violent protest in Ireland and America, but earned for Synge a European reputation. The Tinker's Wedding (1908) likewise gave offence to some and enraptured others. In his last and uncompleted play Synge turned inevitably to Deirdre of the Sorrows (1910). Other works were Poems and Translations (1909), In Wicklow, and various journalistic contributions. Synge held that 'of the things which nourish the imagination, humour is one of the most needful, and it is dangerous to limit or destroy it.' His characters are mostly poor west of Ireland peasants, tinkers, and fisher-folk, speaking a quaint, caressing, cadenced English. The baffling, yet arresting, psychology of the plays—naked brutality and primitive passion combined with subtle beauty and poetry of thought; boisterous humour breaking through brooding pessimism—makes Synge the leading figure, though not the leader, of the Irish Literary Theatre. There are monographs on him by M. Bourgeois (1913; uniform with the collected edition of the works, 4 vols. 1910), W. B. Yeats (1911), P. P. Howe (1912), and John Masefield (1916).

Francis Thompson (1859–1907), poet, was born at Preston, and, a devout Roman Catholic, was educated at Ushaw College. Failing to take a medical degree at Owens College, Manchester, in 1885 he sought a livelihood in London, but found instead destitution and (through opium) ill-health. His first poems and an essay were published (1888) in Merry England by Wilfrid Meynell, to whose devoted household Thompson owed his rescue from ruin. In 1893 appeared his first volume of Poems (including 'The Hound of Heaven'), whose ornate diction, 'Metaphysical' themes, and imagery link him with Crashaw and the seventeenth century. Sister Songs followed in 1895, New Poems in 1897. These, with his prose writings—Health and Holiness (1905), a Life of St Ignatius Loyola, an Essay on Shelley (1909), and literary criticism—make up a body of work whose true worth was not rightly appreciated till after the writer's death from consumption. Wilfrid Meynell edited Thompson's Works (3 vols. 1913), and his son, Everard Meynell, wrote a Life (new ed. 1926).

Rabindranath Tagore, poet, was born at Calcutta in 1861, the son of Maharshi Devendranath Tagore (or Thakur), Brahmic sage and reformer, and the grandson of Prince Dwarkanath Tagore. A lonely, sensitive child with a passion for nature, he was deeply influenced by his father and by the old Vaishnava poets of Bengal. At the age of twenty-four, already married, he took charge of some of the family estates. In 1901 he founded the Shanti Niketan (Abode of Peace) at Bolpur, Bengal, a forest school on the model of the ancient Asram. A knighthood given him in 1915 was renounced in 1919. The Nobel prize for literature, awarded to him in 1913, was in recognition of his Bengali poems; but by virtue of his own translations of some of these and other works he is entitled to a place in English literature, 'the first Indian poet able to interpret the spirit of the East to the people of the West.' It was Gitanjali that made him known in the British Isles—myetical 'Song Offerings' translated (1912) into rhythmic English prose. Next appeared The Gardener (beautiful 'Lyrics of Love and Life') and The Crescent Moon (1913; charmingly spiritual child poems); Sādhana: The Realisation of Life (1913), lectures embodying his lofty philosophy; Chitra, The King of the Dark Chamber, The Post Office, and Sacrifice—symbolic plays (1914–17); Hungry Stones (1916), Mashi (1918), and other collections of impressive short stories; and My Reminiscences (1917), a delicate piece of autobiography.

John Masefield, Poet Laureate since 1930, was born at Ledbury in 1878, ran away to sea, and, afloat and ashore, saw much of life in the raw, afterwards utilised in his narrative poems. Typically enough, his first published volume was Salt Water Ballads (1902). More Ballads followed in 1903, and then he tried his hand at short tales of the sea (as in A Mainsail Haul, 1905) and novels (e.g. Multitude and Solitude, 1909), and plays, including the powerful tragedy of Nan (staged in 1908). With the publication in 1911 of The Everlasting Mercy, followed by The Widow in the Bye-Street, Dauber, and Daffodil Fields, a study of Shakespeare, and another novel, The Street of To-day, Masefield became a recognised force in contemporary literature. Among later works specially noteworthy are narrative poems, such as Reynard the Fox, Right Royal; plays or dramatic poems—Pompey the Great, The Faithful, Good Friday, The Trial of Jesus, The Coming of Christ; Esther and other Racine adaptations; the War books, Gallipoli and The Old Front Line; and novels such as Sard Harker, Odtaa, The Bird of Dawning, The Taking of the Gry. Singing of beauty and of brutality, suiting violence of language to unrestrained passion, vivid, virile, though often unequal, by his lyric charm, his narrative gift, his tragic intensity, Masefield gave new impetus to the poetic movement of the twentieth century. The quartette which began with The Everlasting Mercy infused fresh blood into the English narrative poem. In these four pieces, and still more in Reynard the Fox, the influence of Chaucer is manifest. As a novelist Mr Masefield suffers from hasty production and lack of self-criticism; but his knowledge of the sea is a great asset.

George William Russell (1867–1935), poet, was born at Lurgan, Co. Armagh. From art studies he passed to Irish agricultural organisation, promoting the co-operative movement and editing The Irish Homestead. Writing as 'A. E.', by his works and his influence he played a leading part in the Celtic Revival. Homeward (1894) was his first volume of verse (Collected Poems, 1926); Deirdre (1902) was written for the Irish Literary Theatre; Imagin- tions and Reveries (1915) contains critical essays. Pervaded with Indian mysticism, aglow with Celtic fervour, an artist with brush and with pen, he is, according to his friend W. B. Yeats, 'the one poet of modern Ireland who has moulded a spiritual ecstasy in verse.' See the Life by J. Eglinton (1937).

William Henry Hudson (1841-1922) was born near Buenos Aires, of American parents. In 1869 he came to England, where for many years he lived poor and lonely. He was naturalised in 1900 and received a pension in 1901. He loved birds passionately, and in 1925 a bird-sanctuary was founded in Hyde Park in memory of him, with a statue of Rima (the heroine of Green Mansions) by Epstein. Of his works, The Naturalist in La Plata (1892), Idle Days in Patagonia (1893), Birds of La Plata (1920), The Purple Land that England Lost (1885), Green Mansions, a Romance of the Tropical Forest (1904), the short stories of El Ombú (1902), and the autobiographical Far Away and Long Ago (1918) deal with South America—the 'purple land' being Paraguay; Nature in Downland (1900), Hampshire Days (1903), A Shepherd's Life (1910), A Hind in Richmond Park (1922) deal with the English countryside. Fame came slowly to Hudson, but to-day he stands with Gilbert White in the front rank of our classic naturalists. In two respects he was White's superior: his intense observation of Nature's ways was sustained by something more than a simple love of wild things: he had at times, if not always, an ecstatic sense of a Presence in Nature—'The Being that is in the clouds and air'; and he recorded his observations in a style of singular purity and grace. The tragedy of Rima would be almost unbearable but for its strange and beautiful setting.

George Robert Gissing (1857-1903), novelist, born at Wakefield, left Owens College, Manchester, in disgrace, and roughed it in America, gathering experience—if no moss—which he embodied in New Grub Street (1891), one of the first of his sombre stories to cause a stir. Other realistic Zolaesque pictures of poverty and misery he painted in The Unclassed (1884), Demos, Born in Exile, Odd Women (1893), to mention no more. When not sociological his novels are usually psychological. Three striking successes (in different veins) of his later years are his Charles Dickens: A Critical Study (1898); By the Ionian Sea (1901), a charming account of a Calabrian ramble; and The Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft (1903), full of autobiographical interest and mature reverie in a Devonshire garden. Veranilda (1904) is a historical novel. See a study of him by Swinnerton (1912).

Joseph Conrad (TEODOR JOSEF CONRAD KORZENIOWSKI: 1857-1924), novelist, born of Polish parents in the Ukraine, was educated at Cracow, and went to sea in 1874. He was naturalised in England in 1884, and took his master's certificate, but ten years later gave up the sea for literature. Almayer's Folly (1895) was followed by An Outcast of the Islands, The Nigger of the Narcissus, Tales of Unrest, and Lord Jim (1900)—all brimming with sea reminiscences. Youth (1902) and Typhoon (1903) proved him a master of the short story. In The Inheritors (1901) and Romance (1903) he collaborated with Ford Madox Hueffer. Nostromo (1904), the story of a South American revolution, well illustrates his faculty for making his characters tell their own tale. The novelist's Slavonic origin shows itself in The Secret Agent (1907) and Under Western Eyes (1911). After Chance (1914) Conrad had an ever-widening audience. Later novels are Victory (1915)—like so many of his stories, a South Sea yarn—The Arrow of Gold (1919), and Rescue (1920). A Set of Six, like Twixt Land and Sea and Within the Tides, is a volume of short stories. The Mirror of the Sea (1906) and Some Reminiscences (1912) are autobiographical; and Notes on Life and Letters (1921) also helps 'towards a better vision of the man.' By his transfusion of realism with romance, his blending of rich experience with a vivid imagination, his surprising command of English (an unknown tongue to him till 1878), his masterly—if sometimes laborious—unfolding of plot, his psychological insight, his creation of atmosphere, his irony, humour, and noble if tragic vision of life, Conrad established himself securely in the very front rank of modern English fiction. Jean-Aubry edited his Life and Letters (1927).

Gilbert Keith Chesterton (1874-1936) was born in Kensington, studied at the Slade School of Art, and entered journalism as an art critic. The Wild Knight (1900) and, still more, The Ballad of the White Horse (1910) showed him to be a vigorous poet. In The Napoleon of Notting Hill (1904), The Flying Inn (1914), and other tales he likewise gave rein to his exuberant fancy and his whimsical humour. Paradoxical essays, such as Heretics (1905) and Orthodoxy (1908); discerning books on Browning, Dickens, Victorian Literature, and Bernard Shaw; a Short History of England (1917); a 'spook' play—Magic (1913); and detective stories with a Catholic priest as hero are among the other productions of his versatile pen. He became a Roman Catholic in 1922. His charming Autobiography appeared in 1936. The initials of this vivacious journalist and dogmatic, satirical critic became as familiar in print as are those of G. B. Shaw, with whom he loved to tilt.

John Galsworthy (1867–1933) came of an old Devonshire family, was educated at Harrow and Oxford, and called to the bar, but did not practise. The Island Pharisees (1904) was followed in 1906 by The Man of Property, which with In Chancery (1920) and To Let (1921) forms The Forsyte Saga, on which his fame as a novelist chiefly rests. The Forsytes are a solid, clannish, English family, in all of whom the sense of property is strong, and strongest in Soames, 'the man of property.' Galsworthy treats Soames at first with cold irony, but gradually melts to him, and makes him at last a living, even a likeable, character. The Country House (1907) and The Patrician (1911) deal with other sections of English society—the squirearchy and the aristocracy. After To Let Galsworthy turned to a younger generation of Forsytes in The White Monkey (1924), The Silver Spoon (1926), and Swan Song (1928); and to some of their contemporaries in Maid in Waiting (1931), Flowering Wilderness (1932), and Over the River (1933). But his sympathy with the post-war generation was imperfect; plot and characterisation alike wore thin. He also wrote some twenty-five plays: compact, realistic pieces in the Ibsen manner, including The Silver Box, Joy, Strife, Justice (pre-war); and The Skin Game, Loyalties, Escape (post-war). His numerous short stories, collected in Caravan (1925), show, like his novels, a strong feeling for the beauty of nature.

Galsworthy's compassionate and fastidious nature impelled him to social criticism. But he belonged, unlike Bernard Shaw, to the nation, and, unlike H. G. Wells, to the class which he criticised; and he shared its limitations. He looked for its reform not to a radical change in the structure of society, but to a change of heart, which he would promote by exposing (ironically, as his fastidiousness dictated) its pharisaism and the moral obtuseness of its class and sex distinctions and heartless penal code. The moralist in Galsworthy obtrudes himself less in the novels than in the more abstract dramas, where he is sometimes too much for the artist. Galsworthy received the Order of Merit in 1929 and the Nobel prize in 1932.

(Enoch) Arnold Bennett (1867–1931), born near Hanley, one of the 'Five Towns' in the Potteries which are the scene of his best work, was a lawyer's clerk till he turned to editing a Ladies' Journal. He gave that up in 1900, though in a sense he remained a journalist to the last. Between 1900 and 1908 he lived at Fontainebleau. The influence of France (he married a Frenchwoman) is apparent in his style and his artistic detachment. His productivity was immense. Besides many essays and reminiscences, he wrote 'fantasias on modern themes' like The Grand Babylon Hotel (1902), Teresa of Walling Street (1904), Hugo (1906), Buried Alive (1908); jeux d'esprit like The Card (1911); and a score of plays, some of them dramatised from his 'fantasias' or novels. E. Knoblock collaborated with him in the very successful Milestones (1912). But his reputation rests more solidly on his realistic novels of lower middle-class life, above all on The Old Wives' Tale (1908), Clayhanger (1910)—its sequels Hilda Lessways (1911) and These Twain (1915) are weaker—and The Price of Love (1914). All these are 'Five Towns' stories. The Old Wives' Tale relates the lives of two sisters from childhood to old age: drab, commonplace lives they seem, but the relation is enthrallingly lifelike. The opening chapters of Clayhanger paint an unforgettable picture of child labour in the Potteries in the bad old days. Of his later novels Riceyman Steps (1923), with its sequel Elsie and the Child (1924), is a powerful picture of a miser, somewhat marred by excessive pathological detail. Excess of detail also mars the ambitious Imperial Palace (1930). Bennett had no poetry, no romance, no 'message,' social, political or religious; only an insatiable curiosity about life. He drew what he saw in all its significant detail without comment. But he drew superbly; if his lack of ideas and ideals and his vulgar scale of values deny him the name of an interpreter of life, he stands in the front rank among its recorders.

Herbert George Wells, a professional cricketer's son, was born at Bromley in Kent in 1866. After a year or two in a draper's shop and six months as an usher, he went with a scholarship to the Royal College of Science, where he was a pupil of Huxley's and graduated with first-class honours in 1888. Two scientific text-books were followed by a series of scientific romances, long and short. (The best of the latter were collected in 1911 in The Country of the Blind.) The longer romances culminated in 1898 in the grim War of the Worlds, from which he passed by way of The Sleeper Wakes (1899) to speculations on the future of mankind, fictional in A Modern Utopia (1905), The War in the Air (1908), The Autocracy of Mr Parham (1930), expository in Anticipations (1901), Mankind in the Making (1903), The Open Conspiracy (1928). But as early as 1896 he had begun to try his hand at realistic novels drawn with much humour from personal experience. The hero of Love and Mr Lewisham (1900) is an usher; the heroes of The Wheels of Chance (1896), Kipps (1905), and Mr Polly (1910) are all drapers. Ann Veronica (1909), Tono-Bungay (1909), and The New Machiavelli (1911) also contain autobiographical elements, but expand into social and political criticism strongly laced with personal satire. These two strains—criticism of the present and speculation on the future—blend in most of his later novels—with excursions into allied topics like marriage, religion and education in Marriage (1912), The Soul of a Bishop (1917), Joan and Peter (1918)—and in The Fate of Homo Sapiens (1939). In the novels the veil of fiction wears thin sometimes, till in The World of William Clissola (1926) it is a mere rag on the naked propaganda. Later works, The Outline of History (1920), The Science of Life (1929), The Work, Wealth and Happiness of Mankind (1931) are monuments of encyclopædic knowledge; his Experiment in Autobiography (1934) makes Rousseau's Confessions look reticent. H. G. Wells, though a man of science, is no determinist. He believes that the pooled intelligence and goodwill of mankind, in league with 'God the Invisible King,' can accomplish anything. But his Utopias have little attraction for people less insensitive than he to beauty and the graces of conduct.

Gerard Manley Hopkins (1844-89) was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, and entered the Society of Jesus in 1868. He remained almost unknown to the public till 1918, when Bridges edited his poems (revised edition 1930). His correspondence with Bridges and Canon Dixon was published in 1936. Hopkins's influence on modern poetry is largely due to his daring innovations in metre and diction. He invented, or rediscovered, a kind of accentual prosody, which he called 'sprung rhythm'; and he treated the English language as if it were his private property, twisting words to his purpose and inventing new ones when he wanted them. But the greatness, and the difficulty, of poems like 'The Wreck of the Deutschland' arise not from these oddities, which Hopkins was outgrowing when he died, but from the scholastic subtlety and darting imagination of his exalted, agonising spirit.

Sir James George Frazer (1854-1941) was sometime Professor of Social Anthropology at Liverpool, and published Totemism (1887), a translation of Pausanias with commentary (1898), Pausanias and other Greek Sketches (1900), Letters of William Cowper (1912), an edition of Ovid's Fasti (1929), etc. But these, and his many other contributions to anthropology, are mere parerga to The Golden Bough (12 vols.: 1890-1915). This took its title from the golden bough which Aeneas plucks in the Sixth Aeneid, and began as a treatise on tree-spirits, then spread out into a discussion of hundreds of other myths, superstitions and rituals belonging to primitive religion. No English book since Darwin's Descent of Man has had such an influence on our literature. An abridgement appeared in 1922.

Alfred Edward Housman (1859-1936) was born in Bromsgrove and educated at St John's College, Oxford. After eleven years in the Patent Office he became Professor of Latin first at University College, London, then at Cambridge. Housman was perhaps the greatest Latinist of his day, but he owes his place in English literature to three small volumes of verse—A Shropshire Lad (1896), Last Poems (1922), and More Poems (1936)—and especially to the first of these. Some unexplained embitterment of spirit made him rail against 'whatever brute and blackguard made the world,' a world which yet he found very fair, but in which youth is cheated of hope and joy and death ends all. These feelings he encased in simple-seeming stanzas exquisitely finished. Fresh imagery in Last Poems reveals the student of astronomy, the editor of Manilius. The posthumous More Poems added nothing new, but his one published lecture on The Name and Nature of Poetry threw interesting light on his own methods of composition and reactions to poetry.

Neil Munro (1864-1930) was born at Inveraray, and worked long for the Glasgow Evening News. Thus he knew the Highlands by birthright and the Lowlands by adoption. In his own name he wrote of Highland life and history in The Lost Pibroch (1894), John Splendid (1898), Gillian the Dreamer (1899), Doom Castle and The Shoes of Fortune (1901), Children of Tempest (1903), and The New Road (1914). Meanwhile as 'Hugh Foulis' he enlightened the News with the humours of 'Erichie' (collected in 1904), and of the skipper 'Para Handy' (collected in 1931). Munro knew the Gael—adventurer, dreamer, or subtle politician—as neither Scott nor Stevenson did. His style was at first too Stevensonian, but he soon developed an English of his own, rich in Gaelic metaphors or spiced with racy Scots. The New Road has been pronounced the best novel of Scottish history since Scott. His fugitive verses were collected in 1931.

(Robert) Laurence Binyon, born in 1869, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he became an Honorary Fellow. At the British Museum he rose to be Keeper of Prints and Drawings, becoming a leading authority on Oriental art. On retiring he held the Norton Chair of Poetry at Harvard for a year. His poems (collected in 1931) include lyrics and elegies, e.g. Lyric Poems (1894), Odes (1901), For the Fallen (1917), The Sirens (1924), The Idols (1928); the vignettes of London Visions

(1896 and 1898); narrative poems, such as Penthesilea (1905); and poetic plays, from Attila (1907) to The Young King (1934); with a translation of Dante's Inferno in terza-rima (1933). He carried on the classical tradition of Arnold and Bridges; his narrative poems are mostly on classical themes: the London Visions are in a simpler, more Wordsworthian strain; but his native mood of impassioned contemplation finds its most appropriate expression in the ode. With the War his voice took on a deeper note; his style grew bolder, and the smooth flow of his metres broke into long and varied rhythms. One stanza of For the Fallen—

'They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old:

Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.

At the going down of the sun and in the morning
We will remember them'— is inscribed on many War memorials. The Sirens and The Idols are noble examples of the greater lyric.

Thomas Sturge Moore (born in 1870), poet, wood-engraver, and art critic, has upheld the classical tradition consistently but in a manner of his own. His Poems, collected in 1931-33, include, inter alia, the rich promise of The Vine-dresser (1899), The Gazelles and Medea (1904), A Sicilian Idyll (1911), and the tragedy Aphrodite Against Artemis (1901). He wrote studies of Altdorfer, Dürer, and Correggio. His æsthetic theory, developed in Armour for Aphrodite (1929), is based on intimate knowledge of art and artists and practical experience as a wood-engraver.

Walter (John) de la Mare was born in Kent in 1873, of an old Huguenot family, related to Browning. As 'Walter Ramal' he published Songs of Childhood in 1902. Henry Brocken (1904) and The Three Mulla-Mulgars (1910) are children's books also; but The Listeners (1912) proved that he was a poet to be taken seriously by adults. The fanciful verse of Peacock Pie (1913) and the imaginative prose of Memoirs of a Midget (1921) greatly increased his popularity. The Sunken Garden (1917), Motley (1918), and The Veil (1921) may be named among his poems. After the War, however, he wrote less in verse than in prose, but prose as subtle and exquisite as his verse. In such volumes of short stories as The Riddle (1923), The Connoisseur (1926), On the Edge (1930), A Froward Child (1934), The Wind Blows Over (1936) he displays his uncanny gift for conveying by pure suggestion a sense of 'unknown modes of being' encompassing this visible life. His psychological insight can be applied equally to the commonplace, as in the perfect little sketch called 'The Nap.' His perennial interest in children and in the land of dreams prompted such original anthologies as Come Hither (1923), Desert Islands (1930), and Behold this Dreamer (1939). Early One Morning (1935) contains much wisdom on the psychology of childhood.

Gordon Bottomley, born at Keighley in 1874, lives in North Lancashire, debarred by ill-health from professional life. His Poems of Thirty Years (1925) show pre-Raphaelite influence. He is best known for his plays, of which he has written nearly a score, from The Crier by Night (1902) to The White Widow (1935). King Lear's Wife (1915) and Gruach (1921) presented situations antecedent to Shakespeare's Lear and Macbeth. Both are quasi-realistic, and might be acted on the ordinary picture-stage. But in Scenes and Plays (1929) and Lyric Plays (1932) he abandoned realism both of diction and of staging for a purely poetic type of drama, which relied for its effect wholly on beauty of spoken verse and rhythmic movement, and needed no scenery but a pair of folding curtains, which he presently replaced by a chorus. His later plays are almost all based on Scottish history and legend.

Rt. Hon. Winston Leonard Spencer Churchill was born in 1874 and educated at Harrow and Sandhurst. As a soldier he saw much fighting in India and the Sudan—recorded in The Story of the Malakand Field Force (1898) and The River War (1899)—and as a war correspondent in South Africa. He entered Parliament in 1900, and became Prime Minister in 1940. He told of his boyhood and youth in My Early Life (1930) and Thoughts and Adventures (1932). In The World Crisis (1923-29) he gave his version of the causes and course of the Great War. But his literary reputation rests most solidly on his Lord Randolph Churchill (1906) and Marlborough (4 vols.: 1933-38), which are based on family archives. Mr Churchill's prose style has the eloquence of a natural and practised orator.

William Somerset Maugham (born in 1874) wrote Liza of Lambeth in 1897 while still a medical student in London. Since then he has written nearly thirty plays, and many novels and short stories, and has mastered all three kinds. He has travelled far: Don Fernando (1935) gives a vivid picture of Spain, and many of his scenes, e.g. in the collections of short stories called The Trembling of a Leaf (1921), The Casuarina Tree (1926), Ah King (1933), are laid in the Far East. His best-known novels are Of Human Bondage (1915), The Moon and Sixpence (1919), and Cakes and Ale (1930). Among his plays Our Betters (1923) made a sensation by its bitter satire of the upper classes. Other plays, such as The Circle (1921) and The Constant Wife (1926), have been very successful on the stage; but after Sheppey (1933) he abandoned drama as too abstract and static for his purpose. Large tracts of human nature are unknown to Mr Somerset Maugham, but within his limits he is a very competent artist. He has been called a cynic, 'as heartless as Congreve': it might be fairer to say of him, as he says of his own 'Ashenden,' that he is more interested in people than affected by them. His The Summing Up (1938) is self-explanatory.

George Macaulay Trevelyan, O.M., son of Sir George Otto Trevelyan (see p. 687), was born in 1876 and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge. His England in the Age of Wycliffe (1899) was followed in 1904 by England under the Stuarts. Then, after a brief excursion into criticism with The Poetry and Philosophy of George Meredith (1906), he turned to Italy and produced his three most popular books: Garibaldi's Defence of the Roman Republic (1907), Garibaldi and the Thousand (1909), and Garibaldi and the Making of Italy (1911). During the War he served as Commandant of the First British Ambulance Unit in Italy. Manin and the Venetian Revolution of 1848 (1923) completed his studies of the Italian Risorgimento. His History of England (1926) did for his contemporaries what Green's Short History had done for an earlier generation. But his magnum opus is his England under Queen Anne (3 vols.: 1930-34). He wrote lives of John Bright (1913), of Lord Grey (1920), and of his father (1932). From 1927 he was Regius Professor of Modern History at Cambridge. In the style of his historical writings, at once learned and popular, he carried on the literary tradition of his father and his famous great-uncle, Lord Macaulay.

Wilfrid Wilson Gibson, born at Hexham in 1878 and educated at private schools, served as a private in the War, and worked in the East End. His earliest poems (not reprinted) were Tennysonian. Even in The Nets of Love (1905) the influence of Tennyson is felt. But in Stonefolds (1907) he shook off that influence and set himself to be the Wordsworth of his native Northumberland. In that poem, and in Daily Bread (1910), Borderlands (1914), Livelihoods (1917), Krindlesyke (1922), and Kestrel Edge (1924), he tells of the lives of working folk on fell and road, in workshop and mine. All these poems are dramatic in form. His Collected Poems (1926) include lyrics and 'dramatic reveries.' Later works are Between Fairs (a comedy), Hazards, Highland Dawn, Islands, Fuel, and Coming and Going (1938). By using the dramatic form Mr Gibson is able to keep even closer to ordinary speech than Wordsworth did. Though he does not write in dialect, he laces his vocabulary with north-country words. In some of his war-verses the style verges on the prosaic, but at its best it achieves a noble plainness like granite.

Giles Lytton Strachey (1880-1932), son of Sir Richard Strachey, was born in London and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. His Landmarks in French Literature (1912) and Books and Characters, French and English (1922) reveal, with his lecture on Pope, the depth of his debt to France and to the eighteenth century. Eminent Victorians (1918) made a great stir by its 'debunking' of certain Victorian idols: Cardinal Manning, Florence Nightingale, Dr Arnold, and General Gordon. In Queen Victoria (1921) satiric intention gradually succumbed to a growing perception of Victoria's greatness. In Elizabeth and Essex (1928) Strachey overreached himself; he did not know the period well enough, and its spirit resisted denigration. Portraits in Miniature appeared in 1931, and Characters and Commentaries after his death, in 1933. Strachey's influence has been both good and bad. He cleared away the monumental masonry of Victorian biography, and showed that a biography could be a work of art as entertaining as a novel. But he was prone, and his imitators are more prone, to prefer effect to truth, mistake malice for candour, and usurp the novelist's prerogative of overhearing the private thoughts of his characters.

Lascelles Abercrombie (1881-1938) was born in Cheshire and studied science at Owens College, Manchester. He was Professor of English Literature in Leeds and then in London, and became Goldsmiths' Reader in English at Oxford. His collected Poems were published in 1930. Much of his poetic work is in dramatic form, the most important of his dramas being The Sale of Saint Thomas (completed in six acts in 1930). For these dramas he created a type of diction and metre at once poetic and modern. Abercrombie was one of the most intellectual of present-day poets, more interested in ideas than in character and situation. His prose works deal acutely with aesthetics, more especially the theory and technique of poetry, as in An Essay Towards a Theory of Art (1922), The Idea of Great Poetry (1925), Poetry, its Music and Meaning (1932), Principles of Literary Criticism (1932).

David Herbert Lawrence (1885-1930), the son of a Nottinghamshire miner, trained at Nottingham University College and taught for some years, then devoted himself to writing and painting. His first novel, The White Peacock (1911), was a failure, but the largely autobiographical Sons and Lovers (1913) had more success. Though a rebel against western civilisation, Lawrence was intensely gregarious, and wandered to Italy, Sicily, Australia, New Mexico, and Mexico, to find or make a society in which he could be himself. He failed, but his sojourn in Australia and Mexico gave him the material for Kangaroo (1923) and The Plumed Serpent (1926). Other novels were The Rainbow (1915), Women in Love (1920), Aaron's Rod (1922), Lady Chatterly's Lover (1928). Add the short stories of England, my England (1922), The Woman Who Rode Away (1928), The Man Who Died (1931). His poems include Amores (1916), Look! We Have Come Through (1917), Beasts, Birds and Flowers (1923), Pansies (1929). Mr Aldous Huxley edited his Letters in 1932. Lawrence's vivid personality hypnotised the intellectuals of his day. The years 1910 to 1930 have been called 'the Age of Lawrence'; and the phrase, though extravagant, is not quite empty. For he gave vehement expression to the feeling widespread in those years that civilisation had failed, that man must return to the life of instinct and learn 'to think with the blood.' This strange mysticism of the flesh cumburs his later novels with hysterical rhapsodies, but finds concentrated expression in his best poems. Lawrence's thought is less remarkable than his power of conveying the obscure emotions that lie on the edge of consciousness. Still more remarkable is the purely physical imagination by which he seems able to enter into the feelings of animals.

Thomas Edward Lawrence (1885–1935) was born at Tremadoc and educated at Jesus College, Oxford. In quest of material for a Degree thesis (published in 1936 as Crusader Castles) he visited many castles in Syria and Palestine and picked up Arabic. From 1911 to 1914 he was excavating at Carchemish. When war broke out he was sent to Arabia, where he led the Arab revolt against the Turks. This thrilling episode he recorded in Revolt in the Desert (1927) and more fully in The Seven Pillars of Wisdom (privately printed 1926, published 1935), to which Oriental Assembly (1939; edited by the author's brother) is in part an addendum. The matter of these books is unique; the style, stiff with archaisms and Arabic words, owes something to Doughty. Disgusted at the post-war treatment of his Arabs, he resigned his appointments and enlisted as an aircraftsman under an assumed name. He was fatally injured in a motor accident in 1935. A translation of the Odyssey in strange, colourful prose was published in America in 1932 and in Britain in 1935.

Thomas Stearns Eliot, born in Missouri in 1888 of a well-known New England family, studied at Harvard, the Sorbonne, and Oxford, settled in London in 1913, and was naturalised in 1927. He was much influenced at first by the French Symbolists. The Love Song of Alfred J. Prufrock (1917) is the rambling, free-associated soliloquy of a futile middle-aged lover. The same free association and dry, banal style mark the 'Portrait of a Lady,' which appeared, with some biting satires, in Poems (1920). The Waste Land (1922), a brief epic of the post-war spirit, made a great impression (see Vol. III, p. 723). The 'waste land' phase had passed when in 1928 Mr Eliot avowed himself a classicist in literature, royalist in politics, and Anglo-Catholic in religion, which positions he reaffirmed in his later writings. Ash Wednesday (1930), Sweeney Agonistes (1932), and The Rock (a pageant play: 1934) show a tendency to return to more traditional forms; but the mélange of Greek chorus, mediæval morality, melodrama, and Shavian tirade which makes up Murder in the Cathedral (1935) suggested that he had not yet found the form appropriate to his peculiar genius. Mr Eliot is a magisterial critic, whose task it is to reevaluate the great writers of the past for his own generation. His classical preferences appear in Homage to John Dryden (1924), For Launcelot Andrewes (1928), Dante (1929), The Use of Poetry and the Use of Criticism (1933), and Elizabethan Essays (1934).

Aldous Leonard Huxley, born in 1894, is a scion of two famous strains, grandson of T. H. Huxley and grand-nephew of Matthew Arnold; learned, perhaps over-learned, in letters, science, music, painting and architecture; acutely sensitive to the beauty of art and music, the indifference of nature, and the inhumanity of man. His sense of beauty finds expression chiefly in his poems and essays and such travel books as Jesting Pilate (1926), Beyond the Mexique Bay (1934); disgust and pity inspire the corrosive irony of novels like Antic Hay (1923) and Point Counter Point (1928); and such collections of short stories as Two or Three Graces (1926). Unlike Mr Wells, he does not look to science for salvation: Brave New World (1932) depicts a scientific Utopia of the future more hideous than the present world. Eyeless in Gaza (1935) preaches active pacifism as the only hope for mankind. In the construction of Eyeless in Gaza Mr Huxley tries, by interpolations and transpositions of chronological order, to secure something of the contrapuntal effect of music.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

English Literature from Edward VII to George VI

AWORK of literature is the product of three factors: the writer, the time, and the tradition. Individual writers can be characterised and the lineage of particular literary forms traced with some confidence; but who can paint a true picture of his own time? The object is too near and too vast. At most we can only sketch the salient features, and hope that the future will not prove our perspective too absurdly wrong.

The Background.—The historian of our generation has one advantage: his period has a definite beginning and middle, though as yet no discernible end. The Boer War did mark an epoch in our history. It shook us out of our complacency and revealed our isolation in Europe. Then the beginning of a new century and a new reign dispelled the air of decadence that had hung over the nineties, and made men look outward and forward. The rest of our era is all overshadowed by the Great War, its coming and its consequences—the sudden triumph of Communism in Russia, the reaction against it in Italy and Germany, the resurgence of these countries as strong totalitarian powers.

In home affairs we have to note the reaction from the Jingoism of the Boer War which led to the Liberal victory of 1906, the steady growth of the Labour party, the suffragist movement, the Sinn Féin agitation in Ireland, breaking into open rebellion in 1916 and partially appeased by the Treaty of 1921, the crumbling of the great Liberal party during and after the War, the Labour Ministries of 1924 and 1929, the Franchise Act of 1928, the spread of unemployment, the financial crisis of 1931 which led to the formation of a National Government, and the rearming of Britain in face of an armed Continent.

As the Great War overshadows all other events in these years, so its effect on literature was by far the most profound. Most of the verse evoked by its outbreak is already forgotten, but in Wilfrid Owen and Siegfried Sassoon it discovered two new poets who will long be remembered. It furnished material for a host of memoirs, the most important of which naturally came from those who were nearest the heart of the storm; but its direct effect on imaginative literature was significantly delayed: the spate of war-novels and war-dramas did not reach its crest till some years after the Armistice, as if men shrank from reviving in imagination horrors still too fresh in memory. Otherwise the effect of the War on literature was wholly disastrous. In its train came a slump, psychological as well as economic, a sense of disenchantment and frustration, and a breakdown of accepted values. But the most calamitous effect of the War on literature can be more simply stated. If post-war literature is impoverished, except where it has been salvaged by women, the main reason is simply that the War destroyed the flower of our youth: the men who should have been writing the masterpieces of to-day are dead.

Not all post-War changes, however, were actually caused by the War, though they may have been accelerated by it. So, too, some of the other public events above mentioned were due to causes that were already at work in other fields than politics. Sinn Féin grew out of the Celtic Renaissance, and was a literary and artistic movement before it turned political. The enfranchisement of women was merely the tardy recognition of the intellectual and legal emancipation which they had already won. And if, in the years immediately before the War, a common fear of Germany drew Britain into an understanding with France, and through her with Russia, English writers had already shaken off that subservience to German thought which was so strong in Carlyle's day, and were looking to the Scandinavian countries in drama, to Russia in prose fiction, and to France in poetry.

Meanwhile the rapid advance of applied science has transformed our private lives. The motor-car has speeded up the pace of life incalculably; the aeroplane has brought Cape Town within two days of London; the wireless has turned the whole world into a whispering gallery; and the cinema is outbidding the theatre for the entertainment of the million and infecting the technique of the drama and even of the novel. Poetry itself finds that it must come to terms with modernity or become an exotic.

Science: Philosophy: Theology.—While applied science has revolutionised the material conditions of life, the influence of pure science on imaginative literature has diminished since late Victorian days. At that time the conflict between science and faith was at its height: Tennyson and his contemporaries were preoccupied with scientific ideas, which they sought, in Arnold's phrase, to 'apply to life.' It is not so with the imaginative writers of to-day, and the reason is fairly clear. In the age of Tennyson the natural sciences were dominant, and the natural sciences dealt in ideas of evolution, heredity, environment, and natural and sexual selection, which had an obvious bearing on human life. To-day the primacy has passed to mathematics and physics. These sciences have indeed been revolutionised since 1900, but the revolution has not spread as yet beyond their own confines. Relativity Theory, Quantum Theory—how are these to be applied to life? The popularity of such expositors as Sir Arthur Eddington and Sir James Jeans shows that readers are deeply interested in these theories; but the poets and novelists can make no use of them. Meanwhile the conflict between science and religion has died down, now that science disclaims any knowledge of ultimate reality and declares that its business is only with pointer readings.

It is much the same with philosophy. At the beginning of the century, though Naturalism was strongly entrenched in some quarters, Idealism in one form or another dominated the Universities, and continued to furnish the intellectual background of poets like Bridges who carried on the great classical tradition. Neither the Realism of the Cambridge school nor the Pragmatism of William James had much influence outside professional circles. The most influential thinker of the second decade of the century was undoubtedly M. Bergson. Curious parallels can be traced between certain of his leading ideas and those of some of his British contemporaries: his élan vital recalls Mr Shaw's 'life force,' and his exaltation of intuition reminds us of D. H. Lawrence, though M. Bergson moved on to an ethical and religious mysticism worlds away from Lawrence's mystical sensuality. There was no borrowing—indeed Lawrence said that Bergson bored him—but Mr Shaw and M. Bergson owed a common debt to Lamarck. A more direct connection links M. Bergson's 'creative evolution' with the 'emergent evolution' of Lloyd Morgan, taken up and incorporated with the new physics in Professor Alexander's Space, Time, and Deity. These ideas were still in a measure 'applicable to life.' But since Space, Time, and Deity, philosophy, except in Professor Whitehead's hands, seems to have attempted no comprehensive synthesis of experience, confining itself to the analysis of logical concepts; of which, again, imaginative literature can make no use. On their part most of our modern novelists and playwrights seem to have no use for philosophy. The poets have: in so far as they are poets and not mere versifiers they seek to express their vision of life. Most of the older poets are still idealists; some of the moderns, attracted to Communism, have embraced, or believe themselves to have embraced, the determinist materialism of Marx.

To all this, however, there are two exceptions, Analytical psychology, in the form of psychoanalysis, has revolutionised our conception not of the physical universe but of the mind itself. Freud's analysis of dreams has revealed the unsuspected part played in our lives by the subconscious, by forgotten experiences (especially of infancy) and repressed desires (chiefly sexual). Freud has undoubtedly thrown new light into the secret places of the heart. But his method has grave dangers. It has not yet achieved scientific precision, and has been abused by charlatans and misused or basely used by half-educated writers who limp after Freud repeating formulæ that he has long discarded. The danger is gravest in biography.

Next to analytical psychology, the science that has most influenced modern literature is anthropology. The two sciences, in fact, are closely related, the one studying the subconscious mind of the individual, the other the primitive mind of the race. It is no accident that those writers who have followed Freud most faithfully have also been most diligent students of The Golden Bough.

In the welter of opinion which has marked our age the Church of Rome has stood fast by its perennial philosophy and buttressed by fresh study of the Schoolmen a position from which champions like G. K. Chesterton have made lively sallies on the heretics. In the Protestant Churches there has been a corresponding return upon the principles of the Reformers, a reaffirmation of fundamentals which has been called Neo-Calvinism. Others, between these extreme positions, have found in Anglo-Catholicism a refuge from unbelief and despair. All these reaffirmations of fundamentals have this in common, that they mark a revolt from Rousseauism and maintain that man, far from being naturally good and perfectible by his own efforts, can be saved only by the grace of God and kept safe only by dogma enshrined in institutions. No layman has stated this view more concisely and forcibly than T. E. Hulme, whose fragmentary Speculations give no measure of his influence.

History: Biography: Autobiography.—The tendency to specialisation observed in Science and Philosophy is equally marked in the study of History. That branch of knowledge has now grown so large that only Mr Wells can take it all for his province. The characteristic feature of History in this century has been the team-work of such great collections as the Cambridge Modern, Ancient, and Medieval Histories, or the Oxford History of England. Our generation has also surpassed all others in the number and excellence of its records of contemporary events, especially of the Great War: the memoirs of Lord Oxford, Viscount Grey, Mr Winston Churchill and Mr Lloyd George have literary as well as documentary value. Mr Blunden and Mr Sassoon saw the War from less elevated positions and wrote more intimately of its actualities. But of all records of contemporary events none seem more likely to live than T. E. Lawrence's Revolt in the Desert and Seven Pillars of Wisdom, accounts of the Arab rebellion which he planned and carried to victory. Otherwise recent historical writings have mostly been of the nature of monographs, confined to short periods or single aspects of history. Wider in range are Sir John Fortescue's History of the British Army, Professor G. M. Trevelyan's Queen Anne, and F. S. Oliver's Endless Adventure. Mr H. A. L. Fisher's History of Europe is still more comprehensive. Most comprehensive of all is Mr Arnold Toynbee's Study of History, a monumental work which, when its thirteen volumes are completed, will supersede Buckle as a history of civilisation. History is constantly being rewritten, either to embody new facts, or, as in Mr Belloc's History of England, to express a neglected point of view.

The writing of Biography has undergone a welcome change. The typical nineteenth-century biography was a ponderous affair, over-discreet, over-documented, and generally far too long. Biographies of more than one volume are tolerable only when the subject is a long-lived giant like Carlyle, or a great public figure like Queen Victoria, Gladstone, Disraeli, or Marlborough, whose doings made history. To-day Biography aims at being a work of art like fiction. The change was due above all to Lytton Strachey, in whose footsteps Mr H. Nicholson and Mr P. Guedalla have followed with some success. Others of Strachey's disciples unfortunately have aped his flippant iconoclasm without his artistry. More unfortunately still, the field of biography has of late been invaded by amateur psychologists, who write as if they were God's spies, and report not only their victim's doings but his private thoughts, complexes, and repressions. In this inquisition the poets have suffered most, as they expose the broadest front to such attacks: Shelley, it now appears, had incipient dementia præcox, and Pope's nature was warped because in childhood he was knocked down by a cow.

Autobiography is a form of literature in which the personality of the writer counts for more than the importance of the events he relates. Lord Morley's egotistical Recollections attract us less than those of Mr W. H. Davies, the super-tramp. When personality, matter, and style combine we get a masterpiece like George Moore's Hail and Farewell. The post-war years have been exceptionally rich in autobiographies, including those of Lord Balfour, Viscount Haldane, Mr Churchill, Mr Wells, Rudyard Kipling, and G. K. Chesterton—a distinguished and interesting group, and, as autobiographers, most interesting when they tell of the days before they became distinguished. One singularity about the recent flood of autobiography is the number of comparatively young persons who have felt themselves impelled to tell the story of their lives. Reminiscence used to be the prerogative of age: it is symptomatic when youthful wits like Mr Noel Coward begin to take themselves so seriously.

The Novel.—The modern novel, though not yet two hundred years old, has proved the most elastic of all art-forms, the most hospitable to all kinds of subject-matter. In spite of the competition of the wireless and the cinema its popularity is apparently undiminished: everybody can read nowadays, and with the spread of University education among women the number of really competent writers has increased beyond counting. New novels sprout daily in tropical profusion, and a critic will be lost in the jungle unless he succeeds in driving a lane or two through it.

It will help to clear the way if we classify novels according as they seek to provide an interpretation of life, a mere picture of it, or an escape from it. These are not clean-cut distinctions, but they are cleaner-cut to-day than they were last century. Dickens was at once a realist, a romancer, and a social reformer. To-day the melodramatic element in the Dickensian mélange has been crystallised out, as it were, and presented pure, or almost pure, in the detective story. It is no great exaggeration to say that the serious novel of to-day has no plot, the thriller of to-day is all plot. It was not quite so even in 1900.

In 1900 the younger men still looked on Meredith as the first of English novelists, with Hardy a good second, which means that they still regarded the interpretation of life as the novelist's prime business; for Meredith and Hardy were both interpreters, each with a conscious and fairly consistent philosophy: Meredith, indeed, maintained in so many words that without philosophy the novel, as a great art-form, was doomed. Few of their important successors, then, were content with mere realism or mere romance. No doubt pure romance continued to flourish: Anthony Hope, Seton Merriman, and Stanley Weyman carried on the Stevensonian tradition gallantly. But most of the major Edwardians had philosophy of a kind. Not De Morgan, perhaps; that delightful late-blooming Victorian preached only against strong drink. Nor Arnold Bennett, certainly, the raconteur, the artist; the insatiable curiosity about life which gives such richness of detail to his novels was not tintured by any dram of philosophy. But Kipling and Conrad each had his faith, and it is implicit in everything they wrote. Kipling preached discipline and pride of race, in season and sometimes out of season. To Conrad a ship was a symbol of human life, a microcosm maintained in being and well-being against hostile forces by stoical fortitude and the bond of loyalty. Galsworthy was a social, Mr Wells a social and political, reformer. The one directed his oblique, ironical assaults against the Pharisaism and moral insensitiveness of English society; the other launched a frontal attack on its moribund feudalism and general middleheadedness.

Moreover, these Edwardians still held the traditional view that a novelist should tell a story. It is true that in some of Mr Wells's novels the story was little more than a peg to hang propaganda on, but a story of a sort there always was. It was Henry James who undermined the plot. In his later novels what matters more and more is not external action, 'the motion of a muscle this way or that,' but the reactions of a group of characters to one another in an imagined situation, reactions which do not always involve oral communication. If the method were carried to its logical extreme, action would fade out altogether, dialogue would follow, and the novel be reduced to a séance of people thinking at each other. It has not come to that exactly, though in the hands of Miss Richardson, the most thoroughgoing (as Mrs Woolf is the most accomplished) of the subjective school, the novel becomes in effect a continuous record of the stream of the heroine's consciousness.

At this point the normal course of development was interrupted by the War. Mr Wodehouse persevered in his useful task of cheering us all up, and Mr Buchan (as he then was) did his best to distract us with thrillers in which the German spy replaced the crook; but the major novelists mostly fell silent for a time. And when they resumed the pen, those that were left of them, they found their audience changed, shaken in its nerves and its principles, and demanding from serious fiction not general criticisms of society or adumbrations of the world-state, but the truth about individual lives. In this atmosphere subjectivity and realism flourished. It was an atmosphere created mainly by the War, but two minor influences contributed to it, or were strengthened by it. One was the irruption of D. H. Lawrence, whose desperate gospel of the flesh appealed to a generation which believed that civilization had betrayed them. The other, much more potent, was the teaching of Freud. The success of psycho-analysis in the treatment of war-neuroses gave its methods an extraordinary prestige, and novelists seized on them and proceeded to apply them, often with little understanding, to the reduction of motive and character to their lowest, which generally meant their basest, terms, serving up 'slices of life' in which the factor of sex was emphasised to excess. Nor was this all. The stream of consciousness which Miss Richardson had begun to record in 1915 and was still engaged in recording was at vast a stream of waking consciousness; it remained for Mr James Joyce and Miss Gertrude Stein to plunge deeper—into the subconscious—into the unconscious—to a stratum where language itself broke down, where the sentence, even the word, crumbled to pieces, and we found ourselves listening to the mutterings of sleep or the babblings of delirium. About 1926 a reaction set in against the 'slice of life' novel; fiction came again, as it were, to the surface, and in the work of Mr J. B. Priestley resumed the form, and even something of the amplitude, of the Victorian three-decker. But whether the novel will again become a serious interpretation of life depends on its practitioners finding a philosophy credible by the modern mind. At present those of them who are not content with a conventional orthodoxy or an equally conventional naturalism seem to have nothing better to offer than a thin religiosity, too vague to be called mysticism, and too remote from the facts of life to satisfy men like Mr Aldous Huxley, to whom the miseries of the world 'are misery, and will not let them rest.' To Mr Wells's generation Science seemed to hold out hopes of a heaven on earth. Mr Huxley has no such hopes. Only in active pacifism has he found a way of life possible for a good man in a bad world; in Ends and Means he seeks a system of thought to support this moral position.

Mention has been made of the flood of war-novels that set in some years after the Armistice. Few of them seem likely to live except Mr Mottram's trilogy, The Spanish Farm. The Americans, who supped less full than we of the actual horrors of war, have made more of them in fiction. None of our war-novels aroused so much interest in this country as Mr Hemingway's Farewell to Arms and Mr dos Passos's Three Soldiers aroused in America, the former by its account of the rout of Caporetto, the latter by its description of the experiences of American privates in the War.

Mr dos Passos is noteworthy in another connection. In Nineteen-Nineteen he tried a bold experiment in novel-construction. Several distinct but convergent lines of action are linked by the cinematographic devices of 'the Camera Eye' and 'the News-Reel,' the whole designed to convey the impression of simultaneous action over a vast field. Of all British experimenters Mrs Woolf is at once the subtlest and the boldest. In Jacob's Room, her first experiment, she used a series of flash-lights, so to speak, to illuminate a great stretch not of space but of time. Time is always in her mind, as it was always in Shakespeare's. The whole action of Mrs Dalloway, for instance, if one may call it 'action,' occupied only twelve hours, but hours so full of echoes from the past that the construction suggests an orchestral symphony. Similarly, but less subtly, in Eyeless in Gaza Mr Huxley has tried, by transposing the chron-logical sequence of his chapters, to secure an effect like that of counterpoint in music. All these experiments in novel-construction have been suggested by the techniques of other arts: the same thing, as we shall see, has happened in modern poetry. So much for the interpreters and the realists.

The novel of Escape may take various forms. We may escape into the past in the historical romance, or into the distant in the tale of travel and adventure, or we may take flight with Mr de la Mare into the world of fantasy. The historical romance in our day has become more historical than romantic; with the spread of accurate historical knowledge among readers, writers have grown almost too careful of historicity, and dare not take such liberties with fact as Dumas, and even Scott, lightheartedly took. And if the historical romance has grown too solemn, the tale of travel and adventure has almost ceased to appeal to grown-up readers at all, though it still finds an eager audience among schoolboys. The escape most favoured by the adult, law-abiding Briton has long been into the world of crime. The detective story was invented by Edgar Allan Poe almost a hundred years ago, but its extraordinary popularity in Britain dates from 1890, when Conan Doyle created Sherlock Holmes. It was practised at first chiefly in short-story form, then in that of the full-length, or half-length, novel. In both forms, but especially in the latter, it grew ever more and more popular, till to-day it forms a separate province of literature, the staple industry among writers of fiction. Some of its popularity with old-fashioned readers in the days of the subjective, sex-ridden novel may have been due to the fact that while, by definition, it deals with crime it eschews vice. Sex is as much out of place in a pure detective story as women, in Stevenson's phrase, would be aboard a pirate ship. Its weakness is that it has sacrificed everything to plot. The interest of a detective story is like the interest of a puzzle: it evaporates as soon as the solution is found. As obvious situations are used up, writers have to spin more and more intricate yarns, till now the detective story is in danger of being strangled in the web of its own ingenuity. If it is to survive it will have to recapture those elements which it has sacrificed. And it may very well succeed in doing so. Miss Dorothy Sayers's later novels, her Nine Tailors and Gaudy Night, had dialogue, wit, character, and atmosphere enough to keep the plot in its place; and now in Busman's Honeymoon she has given us a novel in which the element of mystery is deliberately subordinated to other interests—a love story with detective interruptions—the Dickensian mixture as before.

It will be observed that the argument of the last two paragraphs has been illustrated chiefly by references to women. Ever since the English novel was invented in the middle of the eighteenth century, women have held their own in it far better than in any other department of literature. Since the Great War they have much more than held their own. In Edwardian days it would have been impossible to name six women novelists to compare with De Morgan, Conrad, Kipling, Bennett, Galsworthy, and H. G. Wells. To-day one could name a dozen whom the men would find it hard to match. It is natural enough that women should excel in the domestic novel, the language of the heart; but the example of Miss Sayers—and she does not stand alone—shows that they can hold their own equally well in the field of detection and mystery.

The Short Story.—The short story has not been practised so industriously in this country as in America, where it is in great demand for the numerous magazines. If British writers have produced less they have at least escaped that standardisation which is the curse of mass-production in literature. Very few British writers have risen to fame on the short story alone, but most of our novelists have turned to it on occasion, and some of them—D. H. Lawrence is a striking example—have found it a medium better suited to their genius than the full-length novel. Its strict limits curbed Lawrence's exuberance, and saved us from the long tirades and mystical rhapsodies which cumber his later novels. Even a master like Joseph Conrad found his profit in the short story, which won him the admiration of many plain people who lost themselves in the maze, the involved technique of his great novels, where he wound into his subject like a serpent. Kipling, on the other hand, was a short-story-teller first and foremost. His two long novels were failures, and he never attempted a third. Kim, of course, was a great success; but Kim, though of novel-length, is not a novel. In the short story he was complete master of his material. His lack of constructive power did not matter there; his amazing gifts of observation and phrase-making were enough. Most of his early stories owe their attractiveness to these gifts, and to the novelty of their setting. Some of them read to-day more like smart journalism than good literature; but when imagination came in aid of observation he produced in The Man Who Would be King one of the greatest short stories in the world. There is magic too in such later stories as They and The Brushwood Boy. But Kipling was a poet as well as a storyteller: Katherine Mansfield is the only writer of our time whose fame rests wholly on her short stories, 'vignettes,' as she called them, of the New Zealand of her childhood, marvellous in their clarity and economy of line. It is said that she was influenced by Chekov. His impressionism certainly suited her essentially poetic genius better than the tight method of de Maupassant, once the idol of short-story writers. Among present-day writers Mr Somerset Maugham has been equally successful in short story and novel.

Drama.—For a hundred years after Sheridan's death the British stage sank very low. Tom Robertson might have done something to raise it if he had lived. As it was, revival began in the 1880's with the brilliant comic operas of Gilbert and Sullivan, or, if we confine ourselves to 'the legitimate,' with Pinero's The Profligate (1889), which first attempted to discuss a serious problem on the stage. Pinero might not have effected much of a revolution by himself, but powerful aid came to him from outside. In 1891 three of Ibsen's plays were shown at the Independent Theatre; Ghosts raised an outcry; Mr Bernard Shaw took the field and carried the revolt to victory, with the result that the London theatres entered on a period more brilliant than any they had known since 1642, with Shaw, Barrie, and Galsworthy for their leading lights, and such minor but considerable luminaries as Pinero, Jones, and Granville Barker. In the provinces, too, 'little theatres' arose, to serve as nurseries of dramatic and histrionic talent. One of these, the Abbey Theatre in Dublin, developed a school of drama entirely independent of London, supported by a strong national sentiment, drawing its material from Irish life and the native Irish mythology, and served by men of genius like Mr Yeats and J. M. Synge. Lacking these advantages, the abundant dramatic talent of Scotland has remained dispersed, and thereby less effective. Of the London playwrights named above, Sir James Barrie indulged at times in fantasy, but the others were all faithful to the Ibsen formula, presenting real people in real situations talking language 'such as men do use'; and all in their different ways were critics of society.

This brilliance faded out after the War, mainly, no doubt, because these playwrights were aging or dying, and no new men of equal genius were growing up to take their places. But two external causes contributed to the decline: the deaths of the great pre-war actor-managers, and the competition of the cinema. That competition hit the provincial theatres very hard; half of them closed down. (Yet the miming instinct is as strong as ever; if professional companies have dwindled, amateurs have multiplied.) Another and more subtle cause has been at work: the Ibsen formula has begun to lose its power; people have begun to weary of seeing their own faces repeated behind the foot-lights. It is significant that so successful a practitioner as Mr Maugham has abandoned drama, as being too abstract and static for the portrayal of complex and changing characters. He believes that if drama is to survive against the competition of the cinema on the one hand and the novel on the other, it can do so only by reincorporating those elements of music, dance, verse, and spectacle which it has shed in its progress towards Ibsenite realism. And this, in fact, is what is happening. In America Mr Marc Connelly has revived the Miracle Play, and Mr Eugene O'Neill has reintroduced the ghost, the aside and the soliloquy of the Elizabethans, even the masks and chorus of Greek tragedy; on this side of the Atlantic Mr Sean O'Casey has moved from the realism of Juno and the Paycock to the 'expressionism' of the second act of The Silver Tassie, while in Within the Gates, with Hyde Park for its stage and its chorus of down-and-outs, he has owned his debt to Mr O'Neill.

While realistic prose drama has thus been moving towards poetry, poetic drama has not stood still. Most of the great nineteenth-century poets tried their hands at drama, but none of them had any stage-craft, and all of them were enslaved to the Elizabethan tradition in verse and diction. Stephen Phillips's experience as an actor gave his poetic plays a short-lived success on the stage, but in verse and diction he too was a traditionalist. Mr Abercrombie and Mr Bottomley have broken away from tradition, though in different directions. Mr Abercrombie has tried to create a type of blank verse and of dramatic speech that shall be at once poetic and contemporary. Mr Bottomley, abandoning realism of speech as of staging, has developed in his later plays a form of choric or lyric drama which relies for its effect not on scenic illusion but purely on beauty of spoken verse and rhythmic movement.

Poetry.—When Tennyson died in 1892 it seemed that a great poetic era had ended and only Bridges was left to carry on the noble English tradition. But already Kipling and Mr Yeats had begun to write, each of them heralding (but in what different ways!) a new return to nature. Presently Mr Binyon showed himself the true heir of Arnold and Bridges; then came the thrill of A Shropshire Lad; then, most remarkable of all, the discovery of a poet, possibly a great poet, in the veteran novelist Hardy—all this before 1900. With the turn of the century new stars began to appear in quick succession. None of them perhaps was of the first magnitude, but taken with those that were already above the horizon they formed a galaxy of which Mr Yeats, writing in 1936, could justly say, 'I think England has had more good poets from 1900 to the present day than during any period of the same length since the beginning of the seventeenth century.' Among pre-war poems Hardy's Dynasts stands out like a mountain. The unknown Doughty was toiling in these same years at his enormous Dawn in Britain; but none of the younger men attempted anything on that colossal scale. Mr Abercrombie and Mr Bottomley, in the heyday of Ibsenism, kept the flag of poetic drama flying; Mr Masefield and Mr Gibson infused fresh blood into the short narrative poem; but mostly these young poets favoured the lyric, traditional in form and romantic in spirit. 'An Indian summer of Romanticism' is Mr Bullough's happy phrase: 'an Indian summer,' for the heats of Romanticism were over, its great motifs exhausted; these 'Georgians,' as they came to be called, were content to enjoy Nature without striving to see into the life of things. Yet the phrase does something less than full justice to a group which included not only Mr Davies, with his simple creed of delight and liberty, but the intellectuality of Mr Abercrombie, the sustained rapture of Mr Hodgson, and the realism of Mr Masefield and Mr Gibson, to say nothing of Mr Walter de la Mare, with his haunting vision of a world encompassed by unknown modes of being.

The War stirred many soldiers to poetry inspired not by its pomp and circumstance but by a new sense of the dearness and beauty of the land they had left behind. But as it went on its horrors produced a revulsion, expressed most passionately by Mr Siegfried Sassoon, most gravely and comprehendingly by Wilfrid Owen. Owen is one of the two poets whom the moderns acclaim as their precursors. The other is Gerard Manley Hopkins, whose poems were given to the world by Robert Bridges in 1918. But the time of their influence came later.

The ten years that followed the Armistice are the most confused period in the history of English poetry, or so they seem when viewed so near. The older poets still sang, some of them better than ever. Hardy's Late Lyrics, Bridges' Testament of Beauty, Mr Binyon's Sirens, and Mr Yeats's Tower all belong to this decade, and when the dust of controversy has settled will stand out as its greatest achievements in poetry. Hardy, it is true, despaired after Versailles, but the others all kept their faith, though their voices took on a graver note. But the younger writers were all in revolt against tradition in life and in art. The influences which affected the substance of their poetry have been mentioned already in other connections. They were not all born of the War, though most of them grew stronger in the post-War atmosphere. They coalesced into a conviction that Europe had taken the wrong turn at the French Revolution, since when it had gone farther and farther astray. The Revolutionary faith in human perfectibility had faded during the nineteenth century into a vague belief in progress, which had found a dangerous ally in the doctrine of evolution. Now even that belief had evaporated, and a godless generation was left wandering in a waste land of unbelief and despair. From this situation these younger writers all sought to escape. Mr Eliot, having exposed its desolation, took sanctuary in Anglo-Catholicism. Miss Sitwell turned from its vulgarities in disgust to the walled garden of her childhood. Lawrence, despairing not only of European civilisation but of reason itself, bade men return to the life of instinct and 'think with the blood.' The Imagists shut out reflection, absorbed in pure poetry.

The form of this new poetry may prove to have been of more lasting value than its substance. The conviction that European civilisation had failed brought with it a strong resentment against the Romanticism which had masked that failure in a veil of idealised sentiment and vague, half-religious emotion. These new poets, in a word, discarded the whole Wordsworthian conception of poetry as 'the spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings.' Poetry, they declared, is an art, not a dumping-ground for emotion. Discarding Romanticism in general, they were particularly scornful of the faded diction and hackneyed metres into which it had sunk in the hands of the feeble Georgians. Conscious of their heightened modern sensibility, they were ambitious to find such expression for it as modernist painting and music had done, and turned for models to the French Symbolists. Psycho-analysis affected them too by revealing the extent to which the flow of ideas is guided not by purposive thought but by free association. The Imagists, imitating the Symbolists, tried for a kind of pure poetry which should produce an effect like that of music by the evocative power of patterned words. Their insistence on definiteness was salutary, but by limiting poetry to the image and banishing reflection, narrative, and description they condemned themselves to sterility. Imagism, though fathered by T. E. Hulme, was more an American than an English movement. Lawrence took it up at first, but he had too much fire in his belly to sit carving cherry-stones for long. The Sitwells have practised the art, or played the game, of poetry with a virtuosity that amounts, in Miss Sitwell at least, to genius. Though her abuse of private association may affront the reason, and her 'derangement of epitaphs,' her lights that 'creak' and 'whine,' too easily become a trick, she has done more than any other of these coterie poets to freshen the diction and the rhythms of English verse. She has been less influential, however, than Mr T. S. Eliot, whose Waste Land was hailed as a watershed in English poetry comparable to the Lyrical Ballads. Its impressiveness was due partly to its bleak message, partly to the deliberate dryness and banality of a style stuck here and there with splinters of poetry but made excessively difficult in detail by its erudite allusiveness and in sum by its substitution of free association for logical sequence. Since he declared for classicism Mr Eliot has grown more communicative and more tolerant of traditional forms.

Of the newest school of all, represented somewhat arbitrarily by Mr Auden, Mr Day Lewis, and Mr Spender, it is too soon to speak with confidence, though it grows easier to do so as they emerge more and more from the penumbra of the post-War decade and begin to shine by their own light. Two or three things are already clear. Like the poets of the 1920's they are in revolt against the shape of things as they are. But they are not seeking to escape into any palace of art, artificial paradise, or orthodox sanctuary. No, they mean to go through with it and make new poetry for a new world. Their free verse is not lawless, like so much of the stuff that once went by that name; on the contrary, they are seeking, as Hopkins and Owen were seeking, for laws of harmony different indeed from, but not less strict than, those which have governed our traditional metres. Finally, being modernist in spirit and communistic in their sympathies, they believe that there will be no hope for poetry in a modern classless society unless it comes to terms with the material conditions of this machine age, and addresses itself not to coteries but to the general heart of men.

Criticism.—Literary criticism in our time has followed a course not unlike that of poetry. The school that prevailed in 1900 was one that might be called Coleridgean. It regarded the critic as being primarily an interpreter, whose business it was to expose a sensitive mind to the full influence of a poem or play and report his impressions faithfully. The danger of this method lay in its subjectivity: the impression which the critic took might not be quite that which the poet meant to convey. To enter fully into the poet's mind one ought to know all his circumstances at the time of writing. This is the aspect of the matter on which recent Shakespearean criticism has laid stress. After the War criticism tended to revert to the eighteenth-century view: that a critic is by definition a judge, that his business is not only to interpret but to assess, for which purpose he must have standards, to wit, the exemplars of Greece and Rome. The view of modern classicists is not essentially different, though doubtless they have a wider conception of 'the classical' than Dr Johnson. They have exalted Pope and Dryden at the expense of the Romantics and (rather surprisingly) of Milton. Dr Richards has gone deeper. Not content with traditional standards, he seeks to find an experimental basis for criticism by analysing the act of judgment in numerous instances. Dr Richards is a professional psychologist; his methods are not to be confused with those of the amateur psycho-analysts who approach their subjects with a scalpel, not to interpret the meaning of a poem or assess its value as a work of art, but to expose the urges which drove the poet to write it as and when he did. But this is not criticism; it is a more or less fanciful species of biography, and as such has been dealt with in its place.

The criticism so far discussed is of particular writers or works; but general aesthetic theory has also been acutely expounded, not only by academic critics like Dr Richards but by practising poets like Mr Sturge Moore and Mr Abercrombie.

Other Forms of Prose.—Except as a vehicle for literary criticism the Essay has not flourished greatly in our time. G. K. Chesterton has used it for controversial purposes, and so has Mr Shaw—if the prefaces for which he wrote his plays may be called essays; but the personal essay, the kind of essay which Montaigne invented and Lamb brought to perfection, has not greatly flourished. It looks as if Lamb had done it so well that the genre could no farther go.

Nor have there been any travel books in our day to match Doughty's majestic Arabia Deserta, though out of the shadow of that comparison Cunninghame-Graham's swift, keen-eyed, unsentimental sketches of Spain, Morocco, and South America would rank with the best. C. E. Montague should be remembered too for the passion for the mountains which inspired his chiselled prose.

In the allied subject of Natural History our age has produced one master. W. H. Hudson's pictures of animal life, especially of bird life, set him beside, if not above, White of Selborne. Hudson had a pen of gold as well as a keen eye, and his love of Nature mounted at times to religious ecstasy.

Summary.—When we look back over these years we see the Great War lying black across the middle of them. Before it literature was developing normally from its roots in the Victorian age, with drama and fiction flourishing in healthy fashion, and the promise of a new spring in poetry. After the War there was a time of confusion: science and philosophy grew too technical to give a lead to imaginative literature; theology became strongly conservative; drama wilted through lack of fresh blood and the competition of the cinema; fiction, subjective and sex-ridden, would have wilted too but for the genius of women; and poetry entered on a period of experimentation from which it is only now emerging. There has been no great event in recent years to make an epoch in our public life as the Boer War did; but in literature, now that all the great Victorians and most of the great Edwardians are dead, we may fairly say that we have come to the end of an age. The future is with unscathed youth.

J. C. SMITH.

ENGLISH LITERATURE IN THE BRITISH DOMINIONS BEYOND THE SEAS.

English Literature in Canada.

THE Dominion of Canada, even without its Arctic islands, occupies more of the surface of the North American continent than the United States, and is in area little less than the whole of Europe. But at the beginning of the twentieth century the energetic population who had already given it its rank amongst the most promising countries and communities of the world numbered less than five and a half millions—a little more numerous than the people of the Netherlands at the same date, larger by a million than the population of Scotland, but less by a million than the population of Greater London. Only since the early years of the seventeenth century has any part of what we now call Canada been the home of men of European blood and speech. The earliest settlers were Frenchmen, whose sparsely peopled settlements on the shores of the St Lawrence and in Acadia were till near the end of the century but little disturbed by the English colonists to the south. From New England the tide of colonisation gradually flowed towards north and west. Collisions between French and English interests, between French and English colonists, became frequent and almost inevitable; and in the middle of the eighteenth century Canada was the stake for which France and Britain contended in wars fought out partly in Europe and partly in America. The capture of Quebec by Wolfe in 1759 practically ended the struggle; and by the Treaty of Paris in 1763, what was then called Canada, with the parts of New France between the Alleghanies and the Mississippi, was ceded to Great Britain. During the revolution which led to the constitution of the United States as a new nation, Canada remained loyal to the mother-country. And the immigration into Canada at the close of the war of some thirty or forty thousand United Empire Loyalists, sadly shaking off the dust of their feet against the new republican polity, greatly strengthened the still numerically weak English element in the loyal province, and permanently saved British interests in the vast area where till of late settlers of English speech had been greatly outnumbered by those of French blood.

French literature in Canada, beginning with the books of the old explorers and missionaries, and including in modern days the poems of Fréchette, Crémazie, Le May, and Sulte, lies wholly without the scope of this work. And the earliest books in English written in Canada or about Canada—such as the accounts of their explorations by the Londoner Samuel Hearne and the Scotsman Alexander Mackenzie, all dating from the end of the eighteenth and beginning of the nineteenth century—need only passing mention. Nor have the Earl of Selkirk's writings, William Smith's History of Canada (1815), or David Thompson's The War of 1812 much to do with the development of Canadian literature; as in the other colonies, a majority of the earlier writers were British born. From 1828 onwards Joseph Howe made his newspaper, the Nova Scotian, published in Halifax, an important literary as well as political organ, and secured for it Haliburton's humorous papers. In virtue of his three years' sojourn in Canada, and of his Lawrie Todd, Bogle Corbet, and other works dealing with Canadian life, John Galt (see pages 296–300) is at least associated with Canadian literature; and whoever it was who wrote it, the 'Canadian Boat Song,' referred to on page 298, is (in contrast to Moore's) a very noteworthy and early poetic outcome of a Scottish exile's life in the Canadian backwoods. Many of R. M. Ballantyne's stories (see page 623) reflect his experiences in the Hudson Bay territories, and have made three generations of British boys familiar with some aspects of life in those regions.

The first considerable verse writer in Canada was Mrs Susanna Moodie, youngest sister of Miss Agnes Strickland. With her husband, a Scottish officer who had seen service in the Low Countries and South Africa, she settled in Ontario in 1832, and before her death in 1885 produced a good deal of verse (including notable poems on the maple and the canoe) and much minor fiction. Charles Heavysege (1816–76), a Liverpool cabinetmaker, published after he settled in Canada, in 1853, sonnets, longer poems, novels, and several tragedies, of which the most important was Saul. Isabella Valancy Crawford (1850-87), born in Dublin, came to Canada as a child, and is gratefully remembered for her lyrics, such as 'The Master Builder' and 'The Axe of the Pioneer.' George Frederick Cameron (1854-85), a Nova Scotian born, deserves to be regarded as the first native poet whose lyrics, intense and passionate, were greeted 'as admirable by the foremost English critics and poets. He became editor of a Kingston newspaper, and is perhaps best known for his defiant 'What reck we of the creeds of men?' The Oxford Book of Canadian Verse (1913) commemorates the work of a hundred poets, of whom W. H. Drummond, Archibald Lampman, Sir C. G. D. Roberts, Bliss Carman, W. W. Campbell, Robert W. Service, and Duncan C. Scott may be reckoned amongst the foremost. Of minor verse-writers it must suffice to mention here Thomas D'Arcy M'Gee (1825-68); Alexander M'Lachlan (1818-96); Charles Sangster (1822-93); E. Pauline Johnson (1862-1913), the Indian poetess; Marjorie L. C. Pickthall; and Ethelwyn Wetherald. Among Canadian poets lost in the Great War were Harold Verschoyle Wrong (1891-1916) and Lt.-Colonel John M'Crae (died 1918), a Montreal physician, whose In Flanders Fields (1919) takes its title from an oft-cited poem.

In novels, tales, and stories Galt's first successor was Major John Richardson (1796-1852), author of Wacousta (1833), who was born in Ontario of Scottish parents. William Kirby (1817-1906), G. M. Adam, 'Ralph Connor,' Stephen Leacock, economist and parodist, Alan Sullivan (also a poet), and Arthur Beverley Baxter; Mrs R. E. Leprohon (1832-79), Mrs Everard Cotes (née Sarah Jeannette Duncan), Miss Lily Dougall, Miss M. M. Saunders, Lucy M. Montgomery (b. 1874; authoress of Anne of Green Gables, etc.), Martha Ostenso and Mazo de la Roche—these are but a few amongst recent or living authors of romance and story. Grant Allen, Canadian born, studied at Oxford, and is reckoned among English authors. Sir Gilbert Parker, even when settled in England, was still accounted the most conspicuous Canadian man of letters.

Amongst historical writers, besides Bourinot, Sir C. G. D. Roberts, Kingsford, and Goldwin Smith, should be named Robert Christie, James Hannay, George Bryce, J. C. Dent, and G. M. Wrong. Sir Arthur Doughty's Siege of Quebec (1901-2) and Canada and its Provinces (1913 ff.; ed. Doughty and Shortt) are noteworthy. Sir Daniel Wilson, antiquarian and historian, in 1853, in mid-time of his life, went to Toronto as Professor of History and English Literature. Sir William Logan, geologist, was the first native man of science who can be reckoned amongst really eminent representatives of his profession: the Dawsons, father and son—Sir J. W. Dawson and Dr G. M. Dawson—worthily maintained the tradition. Sir John Murray (1841-1914) 'of the Challenger,' a supreme authority on oceanography, was born in Coburg, Ontario, and partly educated in Canada, but did most of his scientific life-work in Britain. Dr Theal (see page 733) was a New Brunswicker. Dr J. B. Crozier, though long settled in London, may be claimed by Canadians as one of their most original and stimulating thinkers and writers. Professor John Watson of Kingston went from Scotland to Canada in 1872, and published works on Kant, Schelling, Comte, Mill, and Spencer, on ethical philosophy and Christian idealism, which rank him amongst our most fruitful writers on philosophy.

On the beginnings of literature in Canada, see the Transactions of the Royal Society of Canada (1883 et seq.), Sir J. G. Bourinot's Canada's Intellectual Strength and Weakness (1893), Rand's Treasury of Canadian Verse (1900), Wilfred Campbell's Oxford Book of Canadian Verse (1913), A. MacMurchy's Canadian Literature (1906), Lorne Pierce's History of Canadian Literature (1927), and the Cambridge History of English Literature (vol. xiv. 1916).

Thomas Chandler Haliburton (1796-1865) was born at Windsor in Nova Scotia. Called to the Bar in 1820, he became a member of the House of Assembly, Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas (1828), and Judge of the Supreme Court (1842). In 1856 he retired and settled in England. He takes rank in British-American literature mainly as creator of 'Sam Slick,' Yankee pedlar and clock-maker, whose quaint drollery, unsophisticated wit, simple but trenchant satire, knowledge of human nature, and aptitude in the use of 'soft sawder' have given him a fair chance of immortality. The newspaper sketches (written anonymously) in which this character first appeared were collected in 1837-40 as The Clockmaker, or Sayings and Doings of Samuel Slick of Slickville, and were continued as The Attaché, or Sam Slick in England (1843-44), the typical Yankee having been brought to England in this new capacity. Haliburton's other works include A Historical and Statistical Account of Nova Scotia (1825-29); Bubbles of Canada (1839); The Old Judge, or Life in a Colony; The Letter-bag of the Great Western; Wise Saws and Modern Instances; Traits of American Humour; and Rule and Misrule of the English in America (1850). This Canadian humourist is recognised as the father of all such as have anywhere in America written humorous work in dialect. There is a Memoir by F. B. Crofton (1889).

Joseph Howe (1804-73) was the son of an emigrant-loyalist who came from Boston to Halifax after the American Revolution. Bred, like his father, a printer, he soon showed exceptional journalistic gifts, and in 1828 became proprietor and editor of the Nova Scotian, remarkable not merely as the paper in which Haliburton's 'Sam Slick' made his bow to the world, but for its editor's own brilliant contributions. These comprised sketches of his own experiences, 'Western and Eastern Rambles'; a series of papers, 'The Club,' on the model of Noctes Ambrosianæ; and his weightier 'Legislative Reviews.' He became the most conspicuous man in provincial public life, the most eloquent speaker in the Assembly, Secretary of State, and Governor of Nova Scotia. His Speeches and Public Letters were published in 1858, Poems and Essays in 1874; and there is a Life of him by J. W. Longley (1904).

William Kingsford (1819-98), author of the standard History of Canada, was born in London; at sixteen he enlisted in the Dragoon Guards, and in 1837 went with his regiment to Canada. He had risen to be sergeant when, in 1841, he left the army to do surveying work; and as surveyor or engineer he was till 1879 engaged on canals, railways, and harbours in the United States, Panamá, and Canada. His first publications were on roads, canals, and his own travels. His History of Canada (10 vols. 1887-97), the result of seventeen years' patient labour in Canadian archives, is more remarkable for its fairness, fullness, and fidelity to its sources than for its literary style.

Goldwin Smith (1823-1910), born at Reading, passed from Eton to Oxford, took a first in classics in 1845, and in 1847 was elected a Fellow of University College and called to the Bar. Assistant-secretary to the first and secretary to the second Oxford University Commission, he served on an Education Commission in 1858. Regius Professor of History at Oxford (1858-66), during the American Civil War he strenuously upheld the North. In 1868 he was elected to the chair of English and Constitutional History in Cornell University. Three years later he settled in Canada where he edited the Canadian Monthly (1872-74), and founded and edited The Week and The Bystander; and nearly forty years' residence and literary work entitle him to rank as a conspicuous Canadian publicist and author. He wrote on the study of history, on Irish history, on Three English Statesmen (Pym, Hampden, Cromwell), on the American Civil War, a political history of the United States, and a political history of the United Kingdom. Believing profoundly in the mission of the English race, he was anti-imperialist both in British and in American politics, and always insisted (in The Political Destiny of Canada and in Canada and the Canadian Question) that, geographically and commercially, Canada is bound ultimately to gravitate towards incorporation in the United States. There are monographs from his pen on Shakespeare, on Cowper, on Jane Austen, and on Lloyd Garrison. Bay Leaves and Specimens of Greek Tragedy show his skill in verse. And in Rational Religion (1861), Guesses at the Riddle of Existence (1897), and a short book on The Founder of Christendom (1903), he broke with historical Christianity. His literary executor, A. Haultain, published a Life of him (1913).

Sir John George Bourinot (1837-1902), born in Sydney, Nova Scotia, studied at Trinity College, Toronto; founded, and for years edited, the Halifax Reporter; but in 1880 became Clerk of the Dominion House of Commons. He was one of the original members of the Royal Society of Canada, its president, and its honorary secretary.

He wrote largely on constitutional history, on parliamentary procedure and parliamentary government in Canada; a book on Cape Breton and one on Canada under British rule; The Story of Canada (in 'Story of the Nations' series, 1897); a monograph on Lord Elgin (1903); besides The Intellectual Development of the Canadian People (1880) and Canada's Intellectual Strength and Weakness (1893; originally printed in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Canada). He was made K.C.M.G. in 1898.

Charles Grant Allen (1848-99), born at Kingston, Ontario, graduated from Merton College, Oxford, in 1871. After four years at Queen's College, Jamaica, as Professor of Logic and Principal (1873-77), he returned to England, and, adopting a literary career, published Physiological Aesthetics (1877), Colour Sense, Evolutionist at Large, Darwin, Colin Clout's Calendar, Flowers and their Pedigrees, The Story of the Plants, mainly connected with the exposition and popularisation of the evolution theory. Failing to make a livelihood by scientific work, he turned to novel-writing, and showed a marvellous fertility and attained remarkable popularity under the circumstances. Babylon, In All Shades, Philistia, The Devil's Die, were written frankly to please the public; in The Woman who Did (1895), first of his 'Hill-top Novels,' he sought to expound and promote his views on life and society—in this case unconventional and startling views on marriage and the relation of the sexes. The Evolution of the Idea of God (1897) was an anti-Christian philosophy of religion. He wrote a series of admirable historical guide-books to Paris, Florence, and Belgium.

John Beattie Crozier (1849-1921), born of Scottish parents at Galt, Ontario, was educated at the Grammar School in Galt and at Toronto University; and having qualified as M.D. (1872), came to England and settled in practice in London. But he found time to produce as early as 1880 an important work on The Religion of the Future, first of a series of original and suggestive contributions to the history of civilisation and culture; Civilisation and Progress (1885) being followed in 1897-1901 by the first and third volumes of The History of Intellectual Development on the Lines of Modern Evolution. My Inner Life (1898) he described as 'a chapter on personal evolution and autobiography.' He wrote also on Lord Randolph Churchill, on political economy, sociology, and Last Words on Great Issues (1917).

William Henry Drummond (1854-1907), born at Currawn, Co. Leitrim, came to Canada when eleven, and went as telegraph operator to a typical mixed village, Bord-à-Plouffe, peopled by habitants and voyageurs, Indians, and half-breeds. In 1884 he graduated in medicine, in 1895 became Professor of Medical Jurisprudence at Bishop's College, Montreal, and in 1905 took up mining in Cobalt region. Drummond handles in a masterly manner the mixed patois of English and French spoken around him, and in his verse the grotesqueness of the combination strikes one less than the poetry and tenderness and fire of the narrative. The Habitant and other French-Canadian Poems made him known in 1897; Johnnie Courteau followed in 1901; The Voyageur in 1905. The posthumous The Great Fight (1908) has a memoir.

Sir Charles George Douglas Roberts, whose knighthood dates from 1935, was born at Douglas, New Brunswick, in 1860, studied at the University of New Brunswick, and was Professor of English Literature and of Economics in King's College, Windsor, Nova Scotia, from 1885 till 1895. His best-known work in poetry (collected in 1900) is contained in Orion and other Poems (1880), In Divers Tones (1887), an ode for the Shelley centenary, Songs of the Common Day, and The Book of the Native; New Poems appeared in 1919. A journalist and editor of biographical reference works, he has also written on a variety of subjects, from guide-books and histories of Canada, and Canada in Flanders (vol. iii. 1918), to novels and studies of wild life and the backwoods.

Archibald Lampman (1861-99), descended from a family of German loyalist-emigrants from Pennsylvania, was born at Morpeth in Ontario, studied at Trinity College, Toronto, and made a name for himself as a descriptive, nature-loving poet while holding an appointment in the Ottawa Post-Office. Among the Millet (1888) and Lyrics of Earth (1895) were his chief collections of verse; he was preparing another volume for the press—Alcyone—when he died; a memoir of him was prefixed to a collected edition of his Poems by D. C. Scott (1900).

(William) Bliss Carman (1861-1929), born at Fredericton in New Brunswick, studied at the university of his native province, at Edinburgh, and at Harvard, and was successively teacher and engineer, but after 1890 edited and contributed to papers in New York, Chicago, and Boston. When Low Tide on Grand Pré appeared in 1893 he was universally acclaimed as a lyric poet of power and originality. With his friend, Richard Hovey, he produced three series of exuberant Songs from Vagabondia (1894-1900), which heralded the 20th-century renaissance of poetry in America. Over a dozen volumes of verse followed—April Airs in 1916, Far Horizons in 1925—besides essays and 'poem-dances.' A collected edition (2 vols.) of the poems appeared in 1905.

(William) Wilfred Campbell (1861-1918), born at Berlin (afterwards Kitchener) in western Ontario, was the son of an Anglican clergyman, and educated in Toronto and Massachusetts, became rector of a church in St Stephen, New Brunswick. In 1891 he withdrew from clerical work and took a post in the Civil Service at Ottawa. Lake Lyrics and other Poems, fresh descriptive verses, won him a hearing as a poet in 1889; Beyond the Hills of Dreams (1899) contains vigorous patriotic lyrics, such as 'Victoria,' 'England,' and 'The World Mother.' Other works include verse tragedies, Sagas of Vaster Britain and like songs of empire, War Lyrics, historical romances, and books on Canada. He edited the Oxford Book of Canadian Verse (1913).

Charles William Gordon, born near Glangarry, Ontario, was for some time a teacher, but qualified at Toronto and in Edinburgh for the Presbyterian ministry, and in 1894 became minister of a church in Winnipeg. As 'Ralph Connor,' he wrote Black Rock, The Sky Pilot (1898; a tale of an evangelist on the Rockies), The Man from Glangarry, The Rock and the River, and Postscript to Adventure (1938). He died in 1937.

Sir Gilbert Parker (1862-1932), born in Ontario and educated at Trinity College, Toronto, travelled in Canada and in the Southern Seas, and for a time edited a Sydney paper. He published plays, a book on Australia (1892), and poems (1894). But it was with Pierre and his People (1892), a fine presentation of Canadian character, that he first tapped the mine that has proved so rich. Other stories of Canadian life, amongst habitants, half-breeds, and the rest, are When Valmond came to Pontiac, The Seats of the Mighty (a historical novel, dealing with Wolfe and the siege of Quebec), and The Lane that had no Turning (1900). The scene of later stories is laid in Jersey, England, and Egypt; but none of these appealed so strongly as his Canadian stories even to non-Canadian readers. In his historical work on Old Quebec (1903) he had the help of a collaborator. Sir Gilbert settled in England, and from 1900 to 1918 sat as Conservative M.P. for Gravesend. Knighted in 1902, he was made a Baronet in 1915, and a Privy Councillor in 1916.

Stephen Butler Leacock, born in 1869 at Swanmoor, Hants, was educated in Canada, taking his B.A. at Toronto. Later he added the Ph.D. degree of Chicago, and was appointed to the staff of M'Gill University, Montreal, where he became Head of the Department of Political Economy. His serious work, such as Elements of Political Science and monographs on Baldwin and La Fontaine in the 'Makers of Canada' series, is overshadowed in public appreciation by his delightful volumes of parodies and skits, beginning with Literary Lapses (1910) and Nonsense Novels (1911).

Robert William Service, poet, born at Preston, Lancashire, in 1874, was educated in Glasgow, and trained as a banker, but at twenty-one emigrated to Canada, where he was farmer, banker, rover, and writer in turn. In Yukon and the far north he spent eight years and gained experience for his first volumes of vigorous verse, Songs of a Sourdough and Ballads of a Cheechako, which went through many editions. Other stirring collections followed, such as Rhymes of a Rolling Stone, Rhymes of a Red-Cross Man, Ballads of a Bohemian—titles which tell their own tale. The Trail of '98 and The Pretender are novels.

Duncan Campbell Scott, born in 1862, of English-Scottish parentage, in Ottawa, rose high in the Canadian Civil Service. Secretary, and in 1921 President, of the Royal Society of Canada, he devoted his leisure to writing poetry marked by great felicity, freshness, finish, and feeling. Besides several volumes of verse, he published short stories, a memoir of his friend and fellow-poet, Lampman, and the Life of Simcoe in the 'Makers of Canada' series, of which he was joint editor.

Australasian Literature.

HE great southern island-continent we call Australia begins to take shape on French and German maps in the first half of the sixteenth century. The Portuguese may have seen Australian coasts by the middle of that century. But it is not till the beginning of the seventeenth that we know of Dutch ships actually in these waters; and by their enterprise the Dutch earned in that century the right to bestow their long-current names on New Holland and Van Diemen's Land. And Tasman invented the Dutch-Latin name Nova Zeelandia when he discovered the islands in 1642, but slightly (and not quite correctly) Anglicised when in 1840 New Zealand became definitively a British colony. The name Australia, of happy omen, dates only from the Voyage to Terra Australis published by Matthew Flinders in 1814. It was Cook's voyages in 1770 and later that made parts of Australia and New Zealand really well known to Europeans; and the first period of European settlement, associated with British penal stations, began in 1788. The interior of Australia was wholly unknown till after 1813. The discovery of gold in 1851 brought a flood of fresh blood and adventurous energy into the settlements; but it was the slower and soberer pastoral and agricultural colonisation that by 1901 had permanently secured wealth and well-being for the five Australian colonies, which, with Tasmania, in that year entered on a new epoch as the Commonwealth of Australia. At the inauguration of the Commonwealth its population (3,775,000, fully two-thirds native born) was less than that of the English county of Lancashire or of London, and was excelled by that of four several States of the American Union at the same date. But it was considerably more than the total white population of the thirteen United States at the first census in 1790 (3,172,000). New Zealand, with its white population of now over 1,500,000, has all the literary potentialities of another great and prosperous Dominion of English blood and speech.

To all the colonies the settlers, or a proportion of them, brought their love of the home literature, and ere long one and another began to write songs and stories in imitation of the poets of the mother-country and of America; Poe's influence has been traced as well as that of Wordsworth and Byron, of Tennyson and Browning. Among the first were

Barron Field, a judge of the Supreme Court in New South Wales, who as early as 1819 published a volume of poems, The First Fruits of Australian Poetry, reviewed by Charles Lamb in the Examiner; W. C. Wentworth; and the statesman Sir Henry Parkes. Some of what R. H. Horne wrote was inspired by his Australian experiences (page 413). Alfred Domett's principal poem was the Maori epic named below. Charles Harpur (1812-68) was even called 'the Australian Wordsworth'. Lionel Michael attracted notice in 1857 by his Songs without Music. By far the greater part of early Australian literature was the work of men born and bred in Great Britain. Henry Clarence Kendall was the first Australian-born writer to secure a permanent place in the affections of Australians. But even now Adam Lindsay Gordon's verse is oftener on Australian lips: and Gordon came from the old country. Kendall and Lindsay Gordon began a new and more important stage in Australian literature. J. Brunton Stephens, a Scotsman, became 'the Queensland poet.' But the most characteristically Australian native-born poets are the so-called 'Bulletin School,' whose gifts have been developed in and by the Sydney Bulletin—A. B. Paterson and Henry Lawson; John Farrell (1851-1904), author of How he Died (1895); Edward Dyson, author of Rhymes from the Mines (1896). Of the seventy-three poets represented in The Golden Treasury of Australian Verse (1912) only about half are Australasian born. Thomas Bracken (1843-98) was of Irish birth, like Victor James Daley (1858-1905); George Essex Evans (1863-1909) was a Welshman from London; Ethel Turner (Mrs H. R. Curlewis), poet and novelist, came from Yorkshire; William Henry Ogilvy (born 1869) returned to his native Scotland; but New Zealand claims as her own Arthur H. Adams (1872-1936), Miss Jessie Mackay (born 1864), the Hon. William Pember Reeves (1857-1932); and Daniel Henry Deniehy (1828-65), Bernard Patrick O'Dowd (born 1866), and John Bernard O'Hara (1864-1927) are among the Australian-born.

Like Canada and South Africa, Australia and New Zealand have produced more poets of merit than novelists. English novelists have, of course, often visited Australasia—Henry Kingsley, E. W. Hornung, Hume Nisbet, to mention no others—and written attractive novels of bush and pioneer life; others, like Charles Reade, have done so without leaving home. Much of R. L. Stevenson's later work was produced under the Southern Cross. Marcus Clarke is on the whole the most conspicuous prose writer of those who may fairly be called Australians though European by birth. 'Rolf Boldrewood' has been called the 'national novelist of Australia.' Ada Cambridge and 'Tasma' (Mme. Auguste Couvreur, née Jessie Catherine Huybers), both English born, and Mrs Campbell Praed, a colonial, are among the most eminent women writers. Mary Gaunt (Mrs Lindsay Miller) has done good work in short stories and longer novels. 'George Egerton,' also Australian born, is cosmopolitan in her works. Guy Newell Boothby (1867-1905), born in Adelaide, produced a score of stories, of which some are sufficiently Australian in subject. Long domiciled in England, however, he is rather identified with Dr Nikola and its continuations. George Louis Becke (1848-1913), born at Port Macquarie, New South Wales, stuck more exclusively to Southern subjects, and utilised in his stories his experiences as a super-cargo on shipboard amongst the South Sea Islands and as an Australian journalist. He collaborated with the naval historian Walter Jeffery (1861-1922), who, born in Portsmouth, went to sea, and in 1886 settled in Sydney, where in 1891 he became editor of a paper. Joseph Jacobs (1854-1916), born in Sydney, was educated partly there and partly at Cambridge, and became a first-rate authority on Jewish History. James Francis Hogan (1855-1924), author, journalist, and M.P. (1893-1900), was born in Tipperary and was in infancy taken by his parents to Melbourne, where he was educated, and whence he returned in 1887. Charles Haddon Chambers (1860-1921), who became journalist, story-writer, and dramatic author, was born at Stanmore near Sydney, and had been stock-rider and civil servant ere in 1882 he settled in England. Henry Brereton Marriott Watson (1863-1921), born near Melbourne, and educated at Christchurch, N.Z., in 1885 began literary work in England. Sir (George) Gilbert (Aimé) Murray was born in Sydney in 1866; Professor of Greek at Glasgow in 1889-99, at Oxford 1908-36, he showed true poetic power in his own plays and in masterly verse translations from Euripides. Katherine Mansfield (see p. 852) and Sir Hugh Walpole (see p. 848), were both born in New Zealand.

In the Australian novel the four main aspects of Colonial life have all been duly chronicled—the convict period, the pastoral development, the gold exploitation, and the triumphant democracy of industry and labour. A more recent tendency is away from a rather provincial nationalism, toward greater sophistication and conscious art in novel-writing. Outstanding names among the moderns are those of H. H. Richardson, Jack Lindsay, and 'M. Barnard Eldershaw.' Ion L. Idriess has achieved great popularity with his tales of Australia.

Records of explorations, lives of explorers, and histories of the colonies form another large section of the literary output: of Australasian historians George William Rusden (1819-1903) is perhaps the most comprehensive and voluminous. A disproportionate amount of talent and energy is absorbed in journalism; and it should be added that many of the daily papers and the magazines of Australia are very ably written. Francis William Lauderdale Adams (1862-93) made some stir in Australia by his verse and his prose while on the staff of the Sydney Bulletin, wrote novels of Australian life and criticisms of things Australian, and a notable autobiographical novel, The Child of the Age. Born in Malta, an army doctor's son, he shot himself at Margate, already doomed to death by lung disease. Charles Henry Pearson (1830-94), author of National Life and Character, spent twenty years in Australia, sat in the colonial parliament, and in 1886-90 was Victorian Minister of Education. Sir Charles Gavan Duffy (page 583) may also here be named. Samuel Butler's Erewhon (page 624) seems to have taken shape in New Zealand.

In New Zealand as in Australia, literary impulses have found vent mainly in journalism. There are many books on the country, its geology, ornithology, and history. Probably those which most distinctly deserve to rank as literature are Old New Zealand (1863), a description of Maori life by an Englishman, Frederick Edward Maning (1812-83), who married a Maori, and who for his humour has been called the 'Charles Lever of New Zealand'; and The Long White Cloud (1898), so entitled by its author, the Hon. William Pember Reeves, from the poetical Maori name for the Dominion, admirably written throughout.

See Douglas Sladen, Australian Poets (1888) and Australian Ballads and Rhymes (1888), and Bertram Stevens, Golden Treasury of Australian Verse (1912), anthologies; Desmond Byrne, Australian Writers (on seven authors; 1896); Turner and Sutherland, The Development of Australian Literature (New York, 1898); A. Patchett Martin, Beginnings of an Australian Literature (1898); and the relevant chapters in Percy F. Rowland's The New Nation (1903), and in the Cambridge History of Literature.

Adam Lindsay Gordon, born at Fayal in the Azores in 1833, was the son of a retired army-captain of Scottish family, who latterly taught Hindustani at Cheltenham College. Meant also to be a soldier, Adam was sent to school at Cheltenham and to Woolwich, and kept several terms at Merton College, Oxford. But already an inordinate passion for horsemanship and open-air sports overbore all other interests, and led him into various irregularities. At twenty he sailed to Adelaide. For two years he served as a police-trooper. In the South Australian bush he led an adventurous life, yet at odd times read the classics and English poets. He wrote a good deal of verse, and, falling heir to a quickly-spent sum of £7000, even sat for a spell (1865-66) in the provincial legislative assembly. Neither here nor in Victoria, where in 1867—at Ballarat—he opened a livery-stable, was he sedulous enough to make a steady livelihood. His fame as a steeplechase-rider was widespread. Sensitive, proud, solitary, and melancholy in temperament, he had married a domestic servant and believed himself to have lost caste—most unreasonably, for there is evidence that he retained to the last the affection and respect of his friends, avoided the grosser excesses not uncommon in the bush, was chivalrous to women, and had no sordid interests in the turf. He was severely disappointed when his hopes of securing the succession to the Scottish estate of Esslemont in Aberdeenshire turned out to be barred by legal obstacles. Financial worries and a bad fall unhinged his mind, and on 24th June 1870 he shot himself at Brighton, a seaside suburb of Melbourne. He had earned the love of all lovers of poetry amongst his countrymen by Sea-spray and Smoke-drift (1867), Ashtaroth (1867), and Bush Ballads and Galloping Rhymes (1870). 'The Sick Stock-rider' is a marvellously vivid transcript from the bush-life he knew; and 'How we beat the Favourite' is perhaps the best ballad of the turf in English. 'From the Wreck' and 'Wolf and Hound' are colonial experiences, so that his subjects are occasionally Australian. But on the whole the spirit and temper are, as in the bulk of Australian verse and prose, those of a typical and representative Briton. Unlike Kendall, he never made Australian scenery the sole subject of any poem; even 'Whispering in the Wattle Boughs' is not the voice of the Australian forest, but, like 'An Exile's Farewell,' 'Early Adieux,' 'Wormwood and Nightshade,' the echo of his own sad memories, not unmingled with sense of failure and remorse. He glorified the horse and his rider in such a way as to secure local enthusiasm; but he owed more to Byron and Browning, Tennyson and Swinburne, than to Australia or anything Australian. He was fond of short dramatic romances based on mediæval literature, as in 'The Rhyme of Joyous Garde' and 'The Romance of Britomarte'; Ashtaroth, a dramatic lyric, suggests the influence of Faust and Manfred. It is not the specifically Australian element that commends him to his readers, but the vitally human utterance of manhood, gallantry, energy, and pathos. Douglas Sladen arranged his Poems (1912: with Life 1934), and with E. Humphris wrote Adam Lindsay Gordon and his Friends (1912).

Henry Clarence Kendall (1841–82) was born in a poverty-stricken hut at Ulladulla in New South Wales, and was brought up in the solitudes of the bush. His father, the son of a missionary, had fought in Chili under Dundonald; his mother was a granddaughter of Leonard MacNally, Irish playwright and informer. From cabin-boy and shop-assistant he turned solicitor's clerk; in his employer, James Lionel Michael (1824–65) of Sydney and Grafton, he found a poet and a discerning patron. From his office Henry passed to a clerkship in the government service. From boyhood he had written verses, and he found time to do a good deal of journalistic work. The Athenæum gave him welcome encouragement. He struggled ineffectually against his dipsomaniac heredity, resigned his post in the Colonial Secretary's office in 1869, was seven years in Messrs Fagan Brothers' timber-yards, then secured a post as inspector of forests. Unlike Lindsay Gordon, he had a keen feeling for nature as revealed in Australian scenery and life in the bush, and sang of Australian mountains, streams, and forests with a wistful charm. In virtue of this and of his odes he has been called the national poet of Australia, and he has earned a permanent place in the esteem of Australians; but he has not come home to their hearts as Lindsay Gordon did, though his verse is more carefully finished and melodious. What glimpses he gives of his own life experiences are sad and depressing; and confessedly he has not Gordon's force or verve. Yet 'September in Australia,' 'The Hut by the Black Swamp,' 'Death in the Bush,' 'The Grave of Leichardt,' and many others of his poems show true poetic gifts. His most sustained effort is 'Orara,' a narrative poem of tragedy and adventure in the bush. His best work is found in his Leaves from Australian Forests (1869), eminently racy of the soil; his earliest in Poems and Songs (1862); his last in Songs from the Mountains.

Marcus Andrew Hislop Clarke (1846–81), the son of a London barrister, after an undisciplined and precocious youth emigrated to Australia when he was eighteen, and failed to interest himself in his work either in a Melbourne bank or an up-country sheep-station. But from the time that he secured an appointment on the Melbourne Argus it was plain he had found his true life-work; and though he remained an erratic Bohemian, he was recognised as having the makings of a brilliant journalist and man of letters. In Long Odds, a pessimistic study of a mésalliance, he had to get friends to help in supplying instalments for serial publication. He wrote much for magazines; composed verse; produced pantomimes, burlesques, and controversial pamphlets; and succeeded admirably with some short realistic tales, such as Pretty Dick and Gentleman George's Bride; but it is mainly as author of For the Term of his Natural Life (1870; rewritten 1874) that he has been called the most notable Australian prose writer. His chef-d'œuvre is a powerful but painful story expressly meant to bring out the appalling brutalities that—almost inevitably—accompanied and flowed from the hap-hazard system of transportation of criminals and the hiring out of convict labour in the settlements. The realism is relieved by a humour only too savage and cynical, and an occasional touch of romance. The ingenuity of the plot is perhaps less satisfactory than the dramatic power of the development and the life-like reality with which the characters are endowed. His extravagant and improvident ways forced him to write so much and to have so many irons in the fire that he failed to do justice to his powers. A Marcus Clarke Memorial Volume appeared in 1884.

Alfred Domett (1811-87), Browning's 'lost Waring,' was, like Browning, a Camberwell man, studied at St John's, Cambridge, and after being called to the Bar, migrated to New Zealand in 1842. In swift succession he occupied the principal public posts in the colony, that of Prime Minister (1862) amongst the rest. The year after his return to England (1871) he published his famous—but too lengthy—Maori epic, Ranolf and Amohia, a South Sea Day Dream. He had contributed verses to Blackwood in 1837; his Flotsam and Jetsam (1877) was dedicated to Browning.

James Brunton Stephens (1835-1902), born at Borrowstounness in Scotland and educated at Edinburgh University, emigrated in 1866, and for over thirty years was closely associated with the intellectual life of Australia. His Convict Once (1871), an elaborate poem in hexameters on a sad story, was written while he was a tutor in a Queensland squatter's family. He subsequently held a post in the Civil Service, and in virtue as much of his shorter humorous pieces ('The Chinese Cook,' 'Ode to a Black Gin') as of his more serious and finished work ('The Angel of the Doves,' 'Mute Discourse'), was commonly known as the Queensland poet.

Thomas Alexander Browne (1826-1915), under the pen-name of 'Rolf Boldrewood,' wrote Robbery under Arms (1888), A Colonial Reformer, The Miner's Right, The Squatter's Dream, and other Australian tales of adventure. Born in London, he was taken to Australia in 1830 by his father, Captain Sylvester John Browne, a founder of Melbourne; and there, after a good education and a varied experience in stock-farming and other vocations, he served as a police-magistrate and gold-fields commissioner in New South Wales till 1895. His best stories, if loosely woven, are vigorous and convincing. His Old Melbourne Memories contain vivid sketches of up-country life on the cattle-stations in 'the days before the gold.'

Benjamin Leopold Farjeon (1838-1903), born in London, at seventeen sailed steerage to Australia to try his luck at the gold-diggings, but settled in New Zealand, wrote a story or two, and at Dunedin was manager and part-proprietor of the first daily newspaper published in New Zealand. In 1868, encouraged by Dickens, he returned to London, where he worked hard as novelist and dramatist. His first success, Grif (1866), was followed by Blade-o'-Grass, Joshua Marvel, Devlin the Barber, The Mystery of the Royal Mail (1902), and other stories, some with colonial scenes.

Andrew Barton Paterson, born in 1864 near Molong (N.S.W.), after practising as a solicitor in Sydney, acted as war correspondent in South Africa and the Philippines, rose to major's rank in the Australian Remount Department in the Great War, then returned to editorial work in New South Wales. The Bulletin introduced him as a poet, and when The Man from Snowy River was published in Sydney in 1895 it had a remarkable sale. Together with a novel, short stories, and other collections of verse—Rio Grande's Last Race, Saltbush Bill, J.P., and Old Bush Songs—it ranks him in the estimation of many as the most distinctively Australian writer of the day. In sincere, forcible, galloping verses Mr Paterson glorifies the free life of

The good old land of 'never mind'
And old Australian ways.

Henry Hertzberg Lawson (1867-1922), born near Grenfell (N.S.W.), farmed with his father, Peter H. Larsen, a Norwegian, but soon took to verse-writing and journalism. He travelled far in Australia and New Zealand, and was in London from 1900 to 1903. The Sydney Bulletin brought out his poems and sketches. These were collected in Short Stories in Prose and Verse (1895), In the Days when the World was Wide (verse, 1896), While the Billy Boils (prose, 1898), The Skyline Riders (verse, 1910), and other volumes. Like A. B. Paterson he sings robustly in rough and swinging lines, of his native land and the 'good old days;' and he has been described as the most representative writer Australia has yet produced.

Ada Cambridge (1844-1926), born at St Germans in Norfolk, sailed in 1870 with her husband, the Rev. G. F. Cross, for Victoria. Under her maiden name Mrs Cross after 1891 became famous as a novelist—The Three Miss Kings, the story of three bush-bred girls, being followed by over a dozen other novels, besides poems and Thirty Years in Australia (1903), reminiscences of Victorian life. In most of her stories the interest depends but little on 'local colour.' She is strong in pathetic scenes; her style is simple and natural.

Mrs Campbell Praed (1851-1935), born Rosa Caroline Prior, daughter of a Postmaster-General of Queensland, wrote some thirty novels dealing largely with the political and social life of well-to-do colonials. Notable amongst her thirty stories—in which a pessimistic tone is evident—are Policy and Passion (1881), Nadine, Miss Jacobsen's Chance, The Romance of a Station, The Insane Root, and Lady Bridget in the Never-Never-Land (1915). She married Mr Campbell Mackworth Praed in 1872. In 1902 she published My Australian Girlhood, autobiographical reminiscences. With Justin McCarthy she wrote Our Book of Memories and several novels.

George Egerton is the pen-name of Mrs Golding Bright, bred an artist, but a novelist by profession. Born in Melbourne about 1870 (her maiden name Dunne), she has been thrice married, and has lived in America, London, and elsewhere. Her works include Keynotes (1893), Discords, Symphonies, Fantasias, The Wheel of God, Rosa Amorosa, Flies in Amber (1907), and plays.

English Literature in South Africa.

CAPE COLONY, destined to be the nucleus of a vaster British South Africa, did not become permanently a British possession till 1814. What has been written by Dutch Africaners in Dutch or in the Cape Taal is rarely of literary value, and lies outside the scope of the present work. The earlier literature in English connected with South Africa is rather about it than of it, consisting mainly of books that are no books, such as government reports, or of the experiences of administrators, missionaries, hunters, explorers, or shipwrecked sailors, all of them born in Britain and European in culture and outlook. The Rev. John Campbell's Travels in South Africa was in 1814 a notable contribution to a series that included Dr Livingstone's first volume of Missionary Travels (1857), and later records of exploration, travel, and adventure. To another category belong the letters sent from Africa in 1797-1801 by the lady ever dear to Scotsmen as the author of Auld Robin Gray, Lady Anne Barnard, who as wife of the Colonial Secretary had exceptional advantages—and disadvantages—for studying life at the Cape (see Vol. II. p. 804).

Thomas Pringle, also Scottish, was not much longer—hardly six years—in Africa, but in his verses written there struck an actually African note, and by his African Sketches awakened interest in the small and troubled colony, which already in vision he saw extending northward to, and even 'peradventure, in after days' beyond, the equator (Vol. II. p. 791). The autobiography (1901) of Sir Harry Smith, whose governorship is commemorated in the names of Harrismith and Lady-smith, gives a vivid picture of mid-nineteenth-century colonial conditions, as do Lady Duff Gordon's Letters from the Cape (1864). Bishop Colenso's famous book on the Pentateuch was not merely written in South Africa, but originated in problems raised by a Zulu anxious inquirer (Vol. II. p. 452). The outstanding contributors to South African literature have hitherto been mainly incomers from the Mother Country like Kipling and Rider Haggard; Charles Murray, of 'Hamewith' fame (p. 846); Perceval Gibbon (1879-1926), novelist and poet; Mr William Charles Scully, verse and prose writer; Gertrude Page (died 1922) and Miss Clotilde Graves ('Richard Dehan,' 1864-1932), the novelists; and the poet Arthur Shearly Cripps, the Mashonaland missionary. Notable exceptions are, in prose, Olive Schreiner, Sir Percy Fitzpatrick (1862-1931: born at King Williamstown), author of Jock of the Bushveld, a charming dog story, the Rt. Hon. Jan Christiaan Smuts (p. 847), and Mrs Sarah Gertrude Millin; and the poets William Rodger Thomson (died 1867), Cullen Gouldsbury, who died on active service at Tanga (East Africa) in 1916, and Roy Campbell (see p. 849).

S. Mendelssohn's South African Bibliography (1910); E. H. Crouch's A Treasury of South African Verse (1907); and M. Nathan, The South African Commonwealth (1918), George McCall Theal (1837-1919), born at St John, New Brunswick, went in youth to South Africa, and became an authority on Bantu history, customs, and folklore. For fourteen years he was chief clerk in the Department of Native Affairs; and having for a time been Keeper of the Archives of the Colony, he was ultimately made Colonial Historiographer. His History of South Africa for comprehensiveness and conscientious research takes rank with our greater European histories, and was his main preoccupation for fully half a century. His first work, South Africa as it Is, appeared in 1871; his last works, published just after his death, were volumes x. and xi. of their series, and carry the history of South Africa down to 1884. He published many volumes of South African Records; short histories of the colony; Progress of South Africa in the Nineteenth Century (1902); and a volume on Kaffir folklore.

Mrs Olive Cronwright-Schreiner (1859-1920), probably the most original author to whom South Africa has yet given birth, was the daughter of a missionary of German family in Basutoland (her mother a Londoner) and sister of the Hon. Wm. P. Schreiner, Prime Minister of Cape Colony (1898-1900), and High Commissioner for South Africa in London (1914-19). In 1883 she startled the conventional English world of letters by her Story of an African Farm, a powerful series of imperfectly finished pictures of life on a Boer farm, and of the spiritual problems and struggles that rend an inquiring soul. It was professedly by 'Ralph Iron'; but when it was known to be the first work of Miss Olive Schreiner, a brilliant literary future was prophesied for her. Dreams (1890), a group of spiritual allegories, hardly increased her reputation. Dream Life and Real Life (1893) is a touching little story of life in the veld. When, after her marriage (1894) to Mr S. C. Cronwright (who added his wife's name to his own), the controversial note became dominant, her work lost in charm and interest as well as in power. Trooper Peter Halket (1897) is a story of the occupation of Mashonaland. More explicitly polemical were The Political Situation (jointly with her husband, 1895) and An English South African's View of the Situation (1899), on the problems that issued in the Boer War. She was a stout champion of women's rights.

AMERICAN LITERATURE.

HE 'slender beginnings' of American literature (see Vol. I. p. 832), in the main written by authors of English birth and published in the mother-country, yielded little of even antiquarian memory beyond Roger Williams's The Bloudy Tenent of Persecution, Anne Bradstreet's poems, and the Bay Psalm Book. Life in the colonies was, indeed, further illustrated by sermons, diaries, letters, and other records either then issued or collected since and made accessible by historical societies; but their importance is rather social than literary, and the same is true also of the most popular poem of the New England colonies, Michael Wigglesworth's The Day of Doom, or a Poetical Description of the Great and Last Judgment (1662), which for more than a century was in the place of a church classic for the Puritan Commonwealths. There was plenty of scholarly learning of the ecclesiastical sort then flourishing among the English Nonconformists; intellectual activity was vigorous among the leaders; the people at large enjoyed a mental and spiritual life; but nothing of literary permanence was produced.

The writers of the first generations born upon the soil, whose books characterise the scattered communities then conglomerating into groups of colonies along the seaboard in the later seventeenth and earlier eighteenth centuries, departed but slightly from the pattern set by their fathers. The north-eastern colonies, and, in particular, those of New England, were the chief, and, in fact, almost the exclusive sources of such literature as there was. Sermons and writings of a cognate kind made up its bulk; annals and personal narratives of all sorts gave way to books of a more formal historical nature dealing with the colonial past and the relations of the people with the Indians and the home Government; meagre scientific observations were recorded; but of polite literature there was at best only a small product, and that consisted of the most feeble, awkward, and inane imitation of the reigning English schools. Touches of originality have been sought for in the way of looking at things disclosed by observers of manners, but such traces of a rising American spirit are practically imperceptible; or if a subtle analysis seems to find them, they are unimportant in the general mass. Tradition governed the form and substance of all that was written; the matter and method of the Puritan mind constituted the main stream; originality—a new life—stirred only in the secular and political fields, and there did not at once find literary expression. Men rather than books are the landmarks of the time to the eye of memory; titles are but the shadows of personalities, and these are memorable rather as high-water marks of certain Puritan forces in the region of character than for the value of what they bequeathed by their pens.

In the earlier part of the period under review, during which the ecclesiastical mind remained dominant, two names only definitely survive—Cotton Mather and Jonathan Edwards. Mather, the third of the name, represents the consummation of the elder conservative Puritan clergy, and his great work, Magnum Christi Americana (1702), is the chief monument of the seventeenth-century New England which it records, as well as the most important literary achievement of the New World up to that time. Its author was prepared for this and his other labours by heredity. His grandfather, Richard Mather, was a joint-author, with Thomas Welde and John Eliot, the translator of the Indian Bible, of the Bay Psalm Book. His father, Increase Mather, a graduate of Harvard and of Trinity College, Dublin, and President of Harvard, is credited with one hundred and thirty-six titles, of which the major part was, of course, sermons; but he is historically remembered as the forerunner of Franklin in representing the colonies at London, where he secured the new charter, and also as the head, though not without strenuous and successful opposition, of the clerical hierarchy of New England. In succession to him Cotton Mather took the post of the conservator of the old ways, but in his time the power of the clergy was already weakened, and he was less powerful in the State than his father had been, though he was more highly distinguished as a writer and also as an ascetic and visionary saint of his caste. Jonathan Edwards in the next generation shows the onward course of time by the fact that he dealt not at all with affairs, but retiring into the intellectual sphere of dogmatic theology, won lasting fame as a metaphysical schoolman applying the logic of the reason with marvellous efficiency to the matter of Calvinism.

and carrying that particular theory of God's nature and ways to the final stage of its development. His reputation for intellectual force has never failed to be recognised, and is now widespread; but it is the faculty, and not its fruits in thought, that is admired.

Apart from these two celebrated men, one the example of the contents and the other of the power of the Puritan mind in the colonies, the literary works of the early eighteenth century have no more than parochial value, and they are without interest except for the antiquarian reader. A very human picture of life in the community about Massachusetts Bay is contained in Samuel Sewall's Diary (published only in 1878-82), of especial importance for the time of the witchcraft delusion at Salem, in which he bore a prominent part; he is also historically remembered as the author of the first anti-slavery tract, The Selling of Joseph (1700). He was Chief-Justice of Massachusetts, and of the highest layman type of character, with curious foibles of human nature about him, and a touch of poetic susceptibility to the beauty of nature rarely to be found in that age. A document hardly inferior to The Day of Doom in its revelation of the everyday religious state of mind of the Puritan people is The New England Primer, which from about the year 1690 was for a century and a half current in New England households, and for the greater part of that time dominant in the teaching of the young. Its contents varied in successive editions, but its substance remained unimpaired through all changes. It was known among its readers as the 'Little Bible.' The natural democracy of New England, which was so inbred that it was lodged even in the heart of the autocratic clergy, found its most significant expression in the writings of John Wise, a neighbour of Sewall's, the pastor of Chebacco, an opponent of the Mathers. His Vindication of the Government of New England Churches (1717), together with other works, contained principles and declarations in which the political thought of the Revolution could be heard labouring up the horizon; he was perhaps the chief precursor of the students of government. History, to which the founders, Bradford and Winthrop, had given just attention, was cultivated for Massachusetts Bay by William Hubbard, and more conspicuously by Thomas Prince, and later by the last of the royal governors, Thomas Hutchinson; and in Virginia by Robert Beverly and William Stith. Virginia also produced a gentleman of broad culture in William Byrd, a Fellow of the Royal Society, whose writings, illustrative of life and affairs in that colony, have been recently collected; but, like Daniel Denton's Brief Description of New York (1670) and George Alsop's Character of the Province of Maryland (1666), they appeal only to students of colonial life. In New England similar books were produced in plenty. A vein of satire, as thin as that of belles-lettres, both so insignificant as to leave neither author nor title worthy of mention, is noticeable; nor, indeed, had satire ever been wholly silent under the theocracy from the time of Morton of Merry-mount. These various intellectual activities, in the regions of observation, chronicle, political thought, and illustration of times and manners, exhaust the minor history of the literature of the colonists up to the time when secular interests displaced theology and the religious life as the dominant elements of society, a change coincident with the emergence of the name of Benjamin Franklin as the typical American of the age.

Franklin, the foremost man of his people and the first American to obtain international fame, was born in Boston; but on his early removal to Philadelphia he found an environment better fitted to his own temperament, and also a centre more characteristic of the growing common life of the colonies. The power of the clergy in New England had become relaxed, but it was still strong, and the life for which they stood survived their personal status and privilege. The high moral strain, which, originally planted there, had been sedulously fostered, became a permanent trait of those communities; but in the middle colonies, and in those to the south also, the human characteristics which would naturally flourish most abundantly in response to the opportunities of a vigorous race in a new country had a freer course of development. Commercialism and the worldly spirit, the materialism of a burgher class, the vanities of new riches, were all rampant about Massachusetts Bay, and went to the making of the Tories as a class; but the temper of the things of this world and the lovers of them were much held in check by what in those days were the things of the spirit and their servants. The neighbourhood of Harvard College operated, together with its tradition, as a restraint on the new worldliness, and as a refuge and fostering-place of the older types; the New England communities would be slowly secularised, and would always bear traces of their origin as plantations of God for conscience' sake in the wilderness. The middle colonies were without this past; they had flourished and were prosperous; life in them was more frankly an enjoyment of the present good; and though Quakerism was at the root of Philadelphia, it has never disclosed any incompatibility with commercialism in any of its forms of the acquisition of wealth by prudence. Franklin's world was one well within the limits of the present life; his wisdom was thrift, an eye to the main chance, a yielding to the will of social circumstance and human nature, a compromise with things, an abandonment of those ideal rigours of the spirit which in the earlier New England were esteemed the first necessities. The centre of life for him had definitely swung back into the world that is, with its prizes and pleasures. Common-sense was the law and the prophets; and his intelligence was so enlightened, so broad, so quick in apprehension and catholic in sympathy, so superb in curiosity, that in him the whole eighteenth-century spirit seemed to come at a birth in a form of marvellous mental freedom and practical material efficiency. Being all this by native genius, he found in his environment just the world in which such qualities would shine with most illumination. He was fed from the beginning on books and printed matter, and his main business was producing more of the same sort and disseminating it. The list of his own imprints is a principal index to the reading of his compatriots, like the catalogue of the library he founded, whose exemplary influence has been so great in providing public reading for a whole nation. He fertilised the community with reading matter and the spirit of reading; he was a vast promoter of book-power, if one may use the phrase, in the new country. The sort of reading that he made prevail, too, was of the prudent, matter-of-fact, scientific, encyclopædic kind: information for the mind, maxims for the conduct. In the two books by which he is remembered in his own right, the Autobiography (1817) and Poor Richard's Almanack (1733), the character of the man and of his counsel for life are plainly set forth. His position and labours, however, are something more and other than his books. His is one of the illustrious names of the world, and his place in American literature is only a small incident of his fame. The coincidence of such a supreme intelligence with that moment when the worldly interests of a young nation first came to the fore in its own consciousness, and became the goal of its intense effort, makes Franklin's American greatness, and his long life-enabled him to foster the play of those consolidating forces of which at their climax of danger he was to be so great a servant in the eye of the world.

The secular spirit of the colonies, of which Franklin was the conspicuous representative, belonged to all of them in a greater or less degree, and was developed out of their material interests, rapidly increasing; it prepared the diverse settlements for the federating impulses preceding the Revolution, and facilitated the imperfect union of the first stage of independence. It left slight traces in literature. Only when the struggle had fairly begun, and principles and policies were necessarily declared and the cause pleaded in the public forum of church and newspaper and pamphlet, did the colonial power of literary expression again become vigorously alive. Sermons on the topics of the Revolution were innumerable everywhere; and the secular press was busily employed by the pens of laymen. Lawyers naturally took a leading part in the discussion. The spring of the Revolution has been found in the maintenance of old English rights, in the absorption of French philosophical generalisations, and in the habit of the transplanted law to resort to broad principles in establishing the new customs of the country. Whether or not these were all co-operating causes, in any aspect of the matter legal thinkers would have the first place in the literature of the Revolution. A brief and distinguished era of political writing resulted. Its most shining name is Thomas Jefferson. The Declaration of Independence is its great State-paper. But, just as in Franklin's case, Jefferson's place in literature is an incident only in a much larger career that belonged to him as a man of affairs, whose utilitarian social services were various and important over and above his work as a lifelong statesman. Jefferson's writings, apart from the Declaration, have no element of literary greatness. The Constitution gave birth to the one book of power in the same field, The Federalist (1788), the work of Alexander Hamilton and James Madison, a treatise in which the essentials of free government are memorably handled. It is customary for the American mind, at least, to add to these prized and celebrated documents Washington's Inaugurals (1789-93) and Farewell Address (1796). The political writings of the period also include speeches and pamphlets of the patriots James Otis, Samuel Adams, Joseph Warren, John Adams, and Thomas Paine (Vol. II. p. 559). The period was one of great distinction for oratory, rhetoric, and thought, as well as for the remarkable persons who were engaged in the conduct of its affairs.

The titles of polite literature that survive by courtesy from the eighteenth century are certainly more substantial than those that illustrate the sterility of the ecclesiastical era in New England. The first place is held by Philip Freneau, a patriot in whose verse revolutionary sentiment and incident are embalmed in his British Prison-ship (1781), and in several brief pieces which, together with poems of a more conventional inspiration, appeared in two volumes (1786-88), forming the most considerable poetic work then done in America. The abundant source of the verse of the period, however, was Yale College, from whose young graduates issued John Trumbull's M'Fingal (1782), a revolutionary satire in imitation of Hudibras; Timothy Dwight's Conquest of Canaan (1785), an artificial epic; and Joel Barlow's Vision of Columbus (1787), afterwards elaborated into The Columbiad. These aspirants for the large honours of the poetic art are known as the Hartford wits, though the name more properly belongs to the young men of still inferior literary talent who drew about them. These were the beginnings of American verse; in them the presence of the national spirit is plain, whose most striking manifestation, however, was the popular song, 'Hail, Columbia!' (1798), the work of Joseph Hopkinson. In prose, John Woolman's Journal (1774) stands alone.

The foregoing sketch of the fortune of literature in the American colonies, though brief, is abundant for its meagre material. Literature in a true sense did not exist in the first two centuries of life there. A few sporadic books cannot assume that title; and the interest of these, the Magnalia, Franklin's Autobiography, Woolman's Journal, is not literary. The printed word was used as a social instrument with great power, but not for literary ends; it was in the service of theology, history, government, the practical or pious life; it was primarily speculative, religious, legal, employed for discussion and record. There was no literary class, nor any room for one, in the scheme of life; there was no market for their works. Yet the community, especially in the north, was a lettered one: it read much; it had school and college and a learned class; it maintained and continued high respect for the intellectual and scholarly life and the power of the mind. Its leaders had the classics of learning, which they knew thoroughly, and the urban literature of England, and later of France, for their leisure; its people had, in New England especially, the Bible, their one great book. The rise of a literature of high, if not the first, rank in the next century is not surprising; but such a literature was impossible in the preceding conditions of the colonies, north or south. The intellectual history of the colonies, ecclesiastical and governmental, is summed up in a few notable figures.

For the whole period of colonial literature, Stedman's Library of American Literature (11 vols. 1888-90) is invaluable. The excellent Cambridge History of American Literature (4 vols. 1918-21) carries the story from colonial times to the present generation. Trent's Colonial Prose and Poetry (3 vols. 1901), and American Literature (1903) and Pattee's First Century of American Literature (1935) should also be consulted. Tyler's History of American Literature, 1607-1765 (2 vols. 1878), and Literary History of the American Revolution (2 vols. 1897) are still among the best authorities on the whole subject-matter.

G. E. WOODBERRY.

Cotton Mather (1663-1728), born at Boston, son of Increase Mather and grandson of the celebrated Puritan minister, John Cotton, was the most distinguished clerical writer of his time, and the head of the conservative party in the Church. He was precocious as a child, a graduate of Harvard at the age of fifteen, and co-pastor with his father at the North Church, where he remained through life. He had extraordinary capacity for mental labour, was indefatigably industrious, and acquired immense erudition. He was gifted also with extraordinary curiosity, and is found exerting himself in unusual fields. His range is indicated by the contrasted facts that he was a chief persecutor of the witches and also an early advocate of the practice of inoculation for the smallpox. In private life he was an ascetic, gave himself to fasting and similar exercises of the religious rule, and saw visions. He appears to have spent no inconsiderable fraction of his time prostrated upon the floor of his study. His fruitfulness was prodigious even for those days, and nigh five hundred titles are credited to him. Of these the Magnalia Christi Americana, or the Ecclesiastical History of New England from its First Planting, in the Year 1620, unto the Year of our Lord 1698, is the chief. It is an immense work of many hundred pages, and contains the history of the settlement, the lives of the governors, the lives of sixty famous divines, the history of Harvard College, creeds, disciplines, remarkable providences, wars with the devil in many forms of sectarianism, and much other like multifarious matter. The work, with all its necessary defects, is an invaluable illustration of colonial life and thought. Other important works are Late Memorable Providences relating to Witchcrafts and Possessions (1689), The Wonders of the Invisible World (1693), Parentator (1724), and the Manuductio ad Ministerium (1726). The traits of his writing are described by Tyler as 'the expulsion of the beautiful from thought, from sentiment, from language; a lawless and a merciless fury for the odd, the disorderly, the grotesque, the violent; strained analogies, unexpected images, pedantries, indelicacies, freaks of allusion, monstrosities of phrase.' The same authority describes him as in character 'a person whose intellectual endowments were quite remarkable, but inflated and perverted by egotism; himself imposed upon by his own moral affectations; completely surrendered to spiritual artifice; stretched, every instant of his life, on the rack of ostentatious exertion, intellectual and religious, and all this partly for vanity's sake, partly for conscience' sake.' He, nevertheless, filled a great place in the world that knew him; he was in correspondence with many persons of distinction abroad, and was a Fellow of the Royal Society. He failed of the presidency of Harvard College, and the fact showed that he belonged to the dying past which he embodied in both his own spirit and his works.

The Design of the 'Magnalia.'

I write the wonders of the Christian religion, flying from the depravations of Europe to the American strand: and, assisted by the Holy Author of that religion, I do, with all conscience of truth required therein by Him, who is the truth itself, report the wonderful displays of His infinite power, wisdom, goodness, and faithfulness, wherewith His Divine Providence hath irradiated an Indian wilderness.

I relate the considerable matters that produced and attended the first settlement of colonies which have been renowned for the degree of reformation professed and attained by evangelical churches erected in those ends of the earth: and a field being thus prepared, I proceed unto a relation of the considerable matters which have been acted thereupon.

I first introduce the actors that have, in a more exemplary manner, served those colonies; and give remarkable occurrences in the exemplary lives of many magistrates, and of more ministers, who so lived as to leave unto posterity examples worthy of everlasting remembrance.

I add hereunto the notables of the only Protestant University that ever shone in that hemisphere of the New World; with particular instances of Criolians, in our biography, provoking the whole world with virtuous objects of emulation.

I introduce, then, the actions of a more eminent importance that have signalized those colonies: whether the establishments, directed by their synods, with a rich variety of synodical and ecclesiastical determinations; or, the disturbances with which they have been from all sorts of temptations and enemies tempestuated, and the methods by which they have still weathered out each horrible tempest.

And into the midst of these actions I interpose an entire book, wherein there is, with all possible veracity, a collection made of memorable occurrences and amazing judgments and mercies befalling many particular persons among the people of New England.

Let my readers expect all that I have promised them in this bill of fare, and it may be that they will find themselves entertained with yet many other passages, above and beyond their expectations, deserving likewise a room in history: in all which there will be nothing but the author's too mean way of preparing so great entertainments, to reproach the invitation.

(From Magnalia Christi Americana, 1702.)

His Father's Manner of Life.

The Dr still had many opportunities for special service continued unto him, and he approved himself a prudent and faithful steward of his talents. He grew in the exercises of repentance and of patience, and of all piety and communion with God, and in the painful discharge of his ministry, and watchfully laid hold on all opportunities to bear testimonies for the cause of God, and of his people, as the matter might require. But if I cut the chapter into little sections, it may add something to the relish of it.

His purpose and manner of life is exactly described in a book about holiness which was written by him twenty years before he died. In that book he offers admirable rules for growth towards a perfection of holiness, in the fear of God: Which he introduces with saying, I shall not set before you directions impossible to be followed, or heavy burdens which I would be loth myself to touch. No; we saw his rules lively exemplified. But his daily course may be inquired after. Besides his patient continuance in that stroke of well-doing which lay in his course of setting apart whole days for the religion of the closet, and which he continued until the last year of his life was coming on, his daily course was this: And what a grateful spectacle to angels in it!

In the morning repairing to his study (where his custom was to sit up very late, even until midnight and perhaps after it), he deliberately read a chapter, and made a prayer and then plied what of reading and writing he had before him. At nine o'clock he came down, and read a chapter and made a prayer, with his family. He then returned unto the work of the study. Coming down to dinner, he quickly went up again, and began the afternoon with another prayer. There he went on with the work of the study till the evening. Then with another prayer he again went unto his Father; after which he did more at the work of the study. At nine o'clock he came down to his family sacrifices. Then he went up again to the work of the study, which anon he concluded with another prayer; And so he betook himself unto his repose.

In the prayers of the day, what there fell short of the number in the hundred and sixty fourth verse of the hundred and nineteenth psalm was doubtless made up with numberless ejaculations—Of such ejaculatory prayers, no doubt, is to be understood, what antiquity reports of the apostle Bartholomew, That he prayed one hundred times in a day; and of one Paulus, That he did it three hundred times. I can't say, That this our Eusebius had so many ejaculatory prayers as these come to; But he was the happy man, that had his quiver full of them!

He commonly spent sixteen hours of the four-and-twenty in his laborious hive! Being very much of Thomas à Kempis his mind, Nusquam requiem invenio nisi in libro et in claustro. He was there, some thought, even to a fault. More of his pastoral visits were wished for.

(From Parentator: Memoirs of Remarkables in the Life and Death of the Ever-Memorable Dr Increase Mather, 1724.)

See Tyler's History of American Literature (1878) and A. P. Marvin's Life and Times of Cotton Mather (1892). The most sympathetic and able study of him is Barrett Wendell's Cotton Mather, the Puritan Priest (1891). A more recent life is that by R. and L. Boas (1929).

G. E. W.

Jonathan Edwards (1703–58) was born at East Windsor, Connecticut. His boyhood was remarkable for precocity, showing not only in metaphysical interest but in physical research; and the mind which so announced itself has been deemed capable of greatness in any intellectual career he might have chosen. He was a graduate of Yale College, and then a tutor there, but spent his life as pastor of the church at Northampton from 1727 to 1750, and for eight years thereafter as missionary to the Indians near Stockbridge; after which he held for a few weeks the presidency of Princeton, in which office he died of the smallpox. His moral and spiritual character was on a plane equal to his mental endowments; though he was not an orator, he was an impressive speaker, and succeeded by the intensity of his nature perhaps as much as by the terror of his subject. His power of logical thought, however, surpassed his talent for description, minute and imaginative as the latter was; and the works on which his great reputation as the ablest American theologian rests are distinguished by reasoning only. His three important works are Treatise concerning the Religious Affections (1746), On the Freedom of the Will (1754), Treatise on Original Sin (1758). His most famous sermon is Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God (1741). The first extract illustrates the vivid directness of his sermons, the second his metaphysical style.

The Wrath of the Almighty.

Thus it will be with you that are in an unconverted state, if you continue in it; the infinite might, and majesty, and terribleness of the Omnipotent God shall be magnified upon you in the ineffable strength of your torments: you shall be tormented in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb; and when you shall be in this state of suffering, the glorious inhabitants of heaven shall go forth and look on the awful spectacle, that they may see what the wrath and fierceness of the Almighty is; and when they have seen it, they will fall down and adore that great power and majesty. 'And it shall come to pass, that from one moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.'

It is everlasting wrath. It would be dreadful to suffer this fierceness and wrath of Almighty God one moment; but you must suffer it to all eternity: there will be no end to this exquisite, horrible misery: when you look forward you shall see a long forever, a boundless duration before you, which will swallow up your thoughts and amaze your soul; and you will absolutely despair of ever having any deliverance, any end, any mitigation, any rest at all; you will know certainly that you must wear out long ages, millions and millions of ages, in wrestling and conflicting with this Almighty merciless vengeance; and then, when you have so done, when so many ages have actually been spent by you in this manner, you will know that all is but a point to what remains. So that your punishment will indeed be infinite. Oh, who can express what the state of a soul in such circumstances is! All that we can possibly say about it gives but a very feeble, faint representation of it; it is inexpressible and inconceivable: for 'who knows the power of God's anger?'

How dreadful is the state of those that are daily and hourly in danger of this great wrath and infinite misery! But this is the dismal case of every soul in this congregation that has not been born again, however moral and strict, sober and religious, they may otherwise be. Oh that you would consider it, whether you be young or old! There is reason to think that there are many in this congregation, now hearing this discourse, that will actually be the subjects of this very misery to all eternity. We know not who they are, or in what seats they sit, or what thoughts they now have. It may be they are now at ease, and hear all these things without much disturbance, and are now flattering themselves that they are not the persons; promising themselves that they shall escape. If we knew that there was one person, and but one, in the whole congregation, that was to be the subject of this misery, what an awful thing it would be to think of! If we knew who it was, what an awful sight would it be to see such a person! How might all the rest of the congregation lift up a lamentable and bitter cry over him! But alas! Instead of one, how many is it likely will remember this discourse in hell! And it would be a wonder if some that are now present should not be in hell in a very short time, before this year is out. And it would be no wonder if some persons that now sit here in some seats of this meeting-house in health, and quiet and secure, should be there before to-morrow morning.

From 'The Freedom of the Will.'

The plain and obvious meaning of the words Freedom and Liberty, in common speech, is power, opportunity, or advantage that any one has, to do as he pleases. Or, in other words, his being free from hindrance or impediment in the way of doing, or conducting in any respect, as he wills. (I say not only doing, but conducting; because a voluntary forbearing to do, sitting still, keeping silence, &c., are instances of persons' conduct about which Liberty is exercised; though they are not so properly called doing). And the contrary to Liberty, whatever name we call that by, is a person's being hindered or unable to conduct as he will, or being necessitated to do otherwise.

If this which I have mentioned be the meaning of the word Liberty, in the ordinary use of language; as I trust that none that has ever learned to talk, and is unprejudiced, will deny: then it will follow that in propriety of speech neither Liberty nor its contrary can properly be ascribed to any being or thing but that which has such a faculty, power, or property as is called will. For that which is possessed of no such thing as will cannot have any power or opportunity of doing according to its will, nor be necessitated to act contrary to its will, nor be restrained from acting agreeably to it. And therefore to talk of Liberty, or the contrary, as belonging to the very will itself is not to speak good sense, if we judge of sense and nonsense by the original and proper signification of words. For the will itself is not an agent that has a will: the power of choosing itself has not a power of choosing. That which has the power of volition or choice is the man or the soul, and not the power of volition itself. And he that has the Liberty of doing according to his will is the agent or doer who is possessed of the will, and not the will which he is possessed of. We say with propriety that a bird let loose has power and Liberty to fly, but not that the bird's power of flying has a power and Liberty of flying. To be free is the property of an agent who is possessed of powers and faculties, as much as to be cunning, valiant, bountiful, or zealous. But these qualities are the properties of men or persons and not the properties of properties.

There are two things that are contrary to this which is called Liberty in common speech. One is constraint; the same is otherwise called force, compulsion, and coercion; which is a person's being necessitated to do a thing contrary to his will. The other is restraint; which is his being hindered, and not having power to do according to his will. But that which has no will cannot be the subject of these things. I need say the less on this head, Mr Locke having set the same thing forth with so great clearness in his Essay on the Human Understanding.

But one thing more I would observe concerning what is vulgarly called Liberty; namely, that power and opportunity for one to do and conduct as he will, or according to his choice, is all that is meant by it; without taking into the meaning of the word anything of the cause or original of that choice, or at all considering how the person came to have such a volition; whether it was caused by some external motive or internal habitual bias; whether it was determined by some internal antecedent volition, or whether it happened without a cause; whether it was necessarily connected with something foregoing, or not connected. Let the person come by his volition or choice how he will, yet, if he is able, and there is nothing in the way to hinder his pursuing and executing his will, the man is fully and perfectly free, according to the primary and common notion of freedom.

Edwards's works are found in Bohn's edition. See for his biography A. V. G. Allen's Jonathan Edwards (1889), and the admirable paper by Sir Leslie Stephen in Hours in a Library, second series.

G. E. W.

Benjamin Franklin (1706-90) was born at Boston, but his life is rather associated with Philadelphia, to which city he early migrated. He followed the printer's trade, and became a publisher of newspapers and books. He had a political career from 1736, and his public activities grew more diversified and more important till he had become the most useful citizen of the State, and the most profitable servant of the colonies abroad as their agent at London and, during the Revolution, at Paris. He was illustrious in science from the time of his discoveries in electricity. The reputation his name still enjoys is that of one of the great citizens of the world. He was primarily a citizen, not a writer; and the list of his inventions, foundations, and organisations is a long one. In the formative period of American society he was the principal suggester of new methods and ends and the chief organiser of new activities (see above at page 735). Most of his writings have consequently to do with practical affairs, but the Autobiography stands apart from the others, and is the work by which he is universally known. The style he used is one of the best of that day of excellent prose.

His Religious Views.

I had been religiously educated as a Presbyterian; and, though I early absented myself from the public assemblies of the sect, Sunday being my studying day, I never was without some religious principles. I never doubted, for instance, the existence of the Deity; that He made the world, and governed it by His providence; that the most acceptable service of God was the doing good to man; that our souls are immortal; and that all crime will be punished and virtue rewarded either here or hereafter. These I esteemed the essentials of every religion; and being to be found in all the religions we had in our country, I respected them all, though with different degrees of respect as I found them more or less mixed with other articles which, without any tendency to inspire, promote, or confirm morality, served principally to divide us and make us unfriendly to one another. This respect to all, with an opinion that the worst had some good effects, induced me to avoid all discourse that might tend to lessen the good opinion another might have of his own religion; and as our province increased in people, and new places of worship were continually wanted, and generally erected by voluntary contribution, my mite for such purpose, whatever might be the sect, was never refused.

Though I seldom attended any public worship, I had still an opinion of its propriety and of its utility when rightly conducted, and I regularly paid my annual subscription for the support of the only Presbyterian minister or meeting we had in Philadelphia. He used to visit me sometimes as a friend, and admonish me to attend his administrations; and I was now and then prevailed on to do so, once for five Sundays successively. Had he been in my opinion a good preacher, perhaps I might have continued, notwithstanding the occasion I had for the Sunday's leisure in my course of study; but his discourses were chiefly either polemic arguments or explications of the peculiar doctrines of our sect, and were all to me very dry, uninteresting, and unedifying, since not a single moral principle was inculcated or enforced, their aim seeming to be rather to make us Presbyterians than good citizens.

At length he took for his text that verse of the fourth chapter of Philippians: 'Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things;' and I imagined, in a sermon on such a text, we could not miss of having some morality. But he confined himself to five points only, as meant by the apostle: 1. Keeping holy the Sabbath-day. 2. Being diligent in reading the holy Scriptures. 3. Attending duly the public worship. 4. Partaking of the sacrament. 5. Paying a due respect to God's ministers. These might be all good things; but, as they were not the kind of good things that I expected from that text, I despaired of ever meeting with them from any other, was disgusted, and attended his preaching no more. I had some years before composed a little liturgy, or form of prayer, for my own private use [in 1728], entitled 'Articles of Belief and Acts of Religion.' I returned to the use of this, and went no more to the public assemblies. My conduct might be blamable, but I leave it without attempting further to excuse it, my present purpose being to relate facts, and not to make apologies for them.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

From the Portrait in the National Portrait Gallery painted by F. Baricolo after a Portrait by J. S. Duplessis.

The Way to Wealth.

Courteous Reader: I have heard, that nothing gives an author so great pleasure as to find his works respectfully quoted by other learned authors. This pleasure I have seldom enjoyed; for, though I have been, if I may say it without vanity, an eminent author (of almanacs) annually, now a full quarter of a century, my brother authors in the same way, for what reason I know not, have ever been very sparing in their applauses and no other author has taken the least notice of me; so that, did not my writings produce me some solid pudding, the great deficiency of praise would have quite discouraged me.

I concluded at length that the people were the best judges of my merit, for they buy my works; and, besides, in my rambles where I am not personally known, I have frequently heard one or other of my adages repeated with 'As Poor Richard says' at the end of it. This gave me some satisfaction, as it showed not only that my instructions were regarded, but discovered likewise some respect for my authority; and I own that, to encourage the practice of remembering and reading those wise sentences, I have sometimes quoted myself with great gravity.

Judge, then, how much I must have been gratified by an incident I am going to relate to you. I stopped my horse lately where a great number of people were collected at an auction of merchants' goods. The hour of the sale not being come, they were conversing on the badness of the times; and one of the company called to a plain, clean old man with white locks, 'Pray, Father Abraham, what think you of the times? Will not these heavy taxes quite ruin the country? How shall we ever be able to pay them? What would you advise us to do?' Father Abraham stood up and replied, 'If you would have my advice, I will give it to you in short; for A word to the wise is enough, as Poor Richard says.' They joined in desiring him to speak his mind, and gathering round him, he proceeded as follows:

'Friends,' said he, 'the taxes are indeed very heavy, and if those laid on by the Government were the only ones we had to pay, we might more easily discharge them; but we have many others, and much more grievous to some of us. We are taxed twice as much by our idleness, three times as much by our pride, and four times as much by our folly; and from these taxes the commissioners cannot ease or deliver us by allowing an abatement. However, let us hearken to good advice, and something may be done for us; God helps them that help themselves, as Poor Richard says.

'It would be thought a hard Government that should tax its people one tenth part of their time, to be employed in its service; but idleness taxes many of us much more; sloth, by bringing on diseases, absolutely shortens life. Sloth, like rust, consumes faster than labour wears, while The used key is always bright, as Poor Richard says. But dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of, as Poor Richard says. How much more than is necessary do we spend in sleep, forgetting that the sleeping fox catches no poultry, and that there will be sleeping enough in the grave, as Poor Richard says. If time be of all things the most precious, wasting time must be, as Poor Richard says, the greatest prodigality; since, as he elsewhere tells us, Lost time is never found again, and what we call time enough always proves little enough. Let us, then, be up and be doing, and doing to the purpose; so by diligence shall we do more with less perplexity. Sloth makes all things difficult, but industry, all easy; and, He that riseth late must trot all day and shall scarce overtake his business at night; while Laziness travels so slowly that Poverty soon overtakes him. Drive thy business, let not that drive thee; and, Early to bed, and early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise, as Poor Richard says.'

(From Poor Richard Improved.)

Franklin's Works were edited by John Bigelow (10 vols. 1887-89) and by Prof. Albert H. Smyth, with a Life (10 vols. 1907). Other Lives are by M'Master (1887), Morse (1889), and Fay (1930).

G. E. W.

John Woolman (1720-72) was born at Northampton in New Jersey, and after a humble beginning, he began to teach poor children and to preach as an itinerant among the Quakers. For a quarter of a century he travelled extensively in the Atlantic States, and was from the start an abhorrer of slavery. His Journal tells the story of his journeys, and in the narrative discloses a pious soul simply and sincerely. It owes something of its vogue to Charles Lamb's love of it, and to Whittier's eulogy. A brief extract shows its quality. *

An Angello Vision.

In a time of sickness with the pleurisy, a little upward of two years and a half ago, I was brought so near the gates of death that I forgot my name. Being then desirous to know who I was, I saw a mass of matter of a dull, gloomy colour, between the south and the east; and was informed that this mass was human beings in as great misery as they could be and live; and that I was mixed in with them, and that henceforth I might not consider myself as a distinct or separate being. In this state I remained several hours. I then heard a soft, melodious voice, more pure and harmonious than any I had heard with my ears before; I believed it was the voice of an angel, who spake to the other angels. The words were: 'John Woolman is dead.' I soon remembered that I once was John Woolman, and being assured that I was alive in the body, I greatly wondered what that heavenly voice could mean. I believed beyond doubting that it was the voice of an holy angel; but as yet it was a mystery to me.

I was then carried in spirit to the mines, where poor, oppressed people were digging rich treasures for those called Christians, and heard them blaspheme the name of Christ, at which I was grieved, for His name to me was precious. Then I was informed that these heathen were told that those who oppressed them were the followers of Christ; and they said amongst themselves, if Christ directed them to use us in this sort, then Christ is a cruel tyrant.

All this time the song of the angel remained a mystery; and in the morning my dear wife and some others coming to my bedside, I asked them if they knew who I was; and they telling me I was John Woolman, thought I was light-headed, for I told them not what the angel said, nor was I disposed to talk much to any one, but was very desirous to get so deep that I might understand this mystery. My tongue was often so dry that I could not speak till I had moved it about and gathered some moisture, and as I lay still for a time, at length I felt divine power prepare my mouth that I could speak, and then I said, 'I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ that liveth in me; and the life I now live in the flesh is by faith in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me.' Then the mystery was opened, and I perceived there was joy in heaven over a sinner who had repented, and that that language, 'John Woolman is dead,' meant no more than the death of my own will. Soon after this I coughed and raised much bloody matter, which I had not done during this vision, and now my natural understanding returned as before.

Here I saw that people getting silver vessels to set off their tables at entertainments were often stained with worldly glory, and that in the present state of things I should take heed how I fed myself from out of silver vessels. Soon after my recovery, I, going to our monthly-meeting, dined at a Friend's house where drink was brought in silver vessels, and not in any other; and I, wanting some drink, told him my case with weeping, and he ordered some drink for me in another vessel. The like I afterward went through in several Friends' houses in America, and have also in England, since I came here; and have cause, with humble reverence, to acknowledge the loving-kindness of my heavenly Father who hath preserved me in such a tender frame of mind that none, I believe, have ever been offended at what I have said on that occasion.

G. E. W.

George Washington (1732-99) has been referred to above (page 736) as a conspicuous representative of the political literature of this period. The writings of Jefferson and Washington were incidental to their public life, and though the style of one is censured as rhetorical and that of the other as cold, the inspiration is felt in the first and dignity in the second with a fire and weight that make their sentences imperishable. The language of the Declaration is well known. His Farewell Address is a noble example of Washington's power to utter character in words, putting himself into his wisdom; veneration for the man is a part of the impressiveness of what he says.

From Washington's 'Farewell Address.'

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have with good intentions contributed towards the organisation and administration of the government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious, in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services, they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my public life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honours it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead, amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging, in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a People. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of Government, which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very Liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters, much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national Union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the Palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens, by birth or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of Patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together; the Independence and Liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes. But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the Union of the whole.

G. E. W.

Lindley Murray (1745–1826), the grammarian, was born of Quaker parentage, the eldest of twelve children, at Swatara, Pennsylvania, and was educated at Philadelphia, New York, and Burlington, having at fourteen run away to school from his father's counting-house. He studied law at New York, and was called to the Bar in 1763. At twenty-two he married, and in 1770–71 first visited England, where from 1785 he made his home at Holgate, York, for the last sixteen years never leaving the house. In 1787 he published his Power of Religion on the Mind; and his English Grammar (1795), long a standard on both sides of the Atlantic, was followed by A Compendium of Faith and Practice, The Duty of a Daily Perusal of the Scriptures, and Memoirs, written in a series of six letters by himself, and concluded by Elizabeth Frank (1826). Spite of his proverbial credit as an authority, his own style was by no means a model of excellence; it was not impeccable even on grammatical grounds, the 'misallied participle' being only too frequent.

Joel Barlow (1754–1812), born at Redding in Connecticut, studied at Dartmouth and Yale Colleges, and served as a military chaplain during the war of independence. In 1788 he came to France as agent for a land company; in 1792 published in London a poem entitled The Conspiracy of Kings; spent some years on the Continent in political, literary, and mercantile pursuits, in which he made a fortune; served as American consul at Algiers; and was appointed ambassador to France in 1811. He died near Cracow when on his way to a conference with Napoleon. His Columbiad (1807) is a historical review of events from the time of Columbus to the French Revolution. Other works are his intemperate Advice to the Privileged Orders (1791–95) and the would-be humorous poem, Hasty Pudding. See Todd's Life and Letters of Joel Barlow (1886).

Charles Brockden Brown (1771–1810) was born of Quaker stock in the Quaker city of Philadelphia, yet, bred for law, deliberately chose literature as a profession, and ranks as the first American to make this choice. The French Revolution and Godwin's influence, political and literary, drew him wholly away from Quaker sympathies, and it was in New York that he wrote Alcuin (1797) on the rights of women. His first novel, Wieland, or Transformation (1798), turned on ventriloquism. In the next three years he produced four more novels—Arthur Mervyn, Ormond, Edgar Huntly, and Clara Howard—and secured the proud position he maintained for twenty years as first of American novelists, until his star paled before Fenimore Cooper's. Much of his early work consisted of tales of terror and horror, morbid and improbable enough, and showing Godwin's influence all too plainly, but with passages of real intensity and power, and characteristic touches all his own. He anticipated Cooper in exploiting the forest life of the continent, and patriotic critics have discovered in him suggestions of Poe, of Hawthorne, and even of later Americanism. His first magazine ran only a year; his second Literary Magazine lived from 1803 till 1805, and the half-yearly American Register was thriving at his death, when he was engaged on a system of geography and a treatise on Rome under the Antonine emperors. His last novel, Jane Talbot, had appeared in 1801; and he had written in defence of the Justice of Restrictions on Foreign Commerce. His Life by Dunlap (2 vols. 1815) was reissued with the seven-volume edition of his novels (1827); there were reprints of his works in 1857 and 1887; and on his life and work, see Prescott's Biographical and Critical Miscellanies (1867).

James Kirke Paulding (1779–1860) was born in Dutchess county, New York, and, though strongly drawn to literature, was mainly self-educated. A friend of Washington Irving, he wrote part of the wonderfully popular Salmagundi. During the war of 1812 he published the Diverting History of John Bull and Brother Jonathan, an effective satire, and in 1814 a more serious work, The United States and England, which gained him an appointment on the Board of Naval Commissioners. A continuation of Salmagundi by his own pen was a failure. But he produced a very successful romance of old New York, The Dutchman's Fireside (1831), and a Kentuckian story, Westward Ho! (1832)—not to speak of a good deal of poetry, a Life of Washington (1835), and a defence of Slavery in the United States (1836). In 1837 he became Secretary of the Navy. Even at his best he had been overshadowed by Irving and Cooper, and he is now but little read. See his Literary Life by his son (1867), and Grant Wilson's Bryant and his Friends (1886).

William Ellery Channing (1780–1842), preacher and writer, was born at Newport in Rhode Island, graduated at Harvard in 1798, and in 1803 was ordained minister of a Congregational church in Boston, where his sermons were famous for their 'fervour, solemnity, and beauty.' He was somewhat of a mystic, held Christ to be more than man, but was ultimately the leader of the Unitarians, though to the end he shrank from dogmatic definitions and one-sided apprehension of Christian truth. In 1821 he was made D.D. of Harvard for his works on the Christian evidences, his address on war, and his sermons; and next year he visited Europe, and made the acquaintance of Wordsworth and Coleridge. Among his Works (6 vols. 1841-46) are treatises on national literature, on Milton, on Fénelon, on slavery, and on self-culture. It was of him that Coleridge said, 'He has the love of wisdom and the wisdom of love.' His character was as attractive as his eloquence, and almost as influential as the vigour, pure taste, and infectious earnestness of his literary work. He laboured zealously in all good causes, social and philanthropic; and pled for peace, charity, temperance, and the cause of the slaves (though never an extreme abolitionist), and a higher tone in political life. In virtue of his personal influence as well as through his published works, he ranks almost along with Emerson as one of the intellectual leaders of New England in the early nineteenth century. There are Lives of him by his nephew, W. H. Channing (3 vols. 1848; new ed. 1880), by Frothingham (1887), and by the Rev. J. White Chadwick (1903).

Daniel Webster (1782-1852) was the son of a farmer at Salisbury (now Franklin) in New Hampshire, graduated at Dartmouth College, and after eight years at the Bar, was sent to Congress in 1813. From 1816 he was eminent as an advocate in Boston, and as orator became famous by his oration at the Pilgrim Fathers' bicentenary. Massachusetts representative in Congress from 1823, he found few rivals there; in 1827 he was transferred to the Senate. He had favoured free trade, but in 1828 he vigorously defended the new protective tariff. He was called into Harrison's Cabinet as Secretary of State, and under Tyler negotiated the Ashburton treaty with Great Britain. In the Senate in 1845 he helped to avert a war with Britain over the north-west boundary; he opposed the war with Mexico; but though he said that he abhorred slavery, he refused on that score to risk breaking up the Union. Careless in money matters, he accepted pecuniary assistance from political friends, but easily repelled a charge of corruption (1846). Under Fillmore he was called to his former post as Secretary of State to settle differences with Britain, and he was deeply disappointed at not receiving the Whig nomination for the presidency in 1852, the year of his death. At all times he showed too great deference to established institutions, and on the slavery question his conscience but very imperfectly matched his intellect. He fell short of the first rank amongst American statesmen, but was unquestionably foremost of American orators. See his Writings and Speeches (with memoir by E. Everett, 18 vols. 1903). Other Lives are by G. T. Curtis (1869), H. C. Lodge (1884), N. Hapgood (1899), S. W. McCall (1900), S. G. Fisher (1911), and F. A. Ogg (1914).

The British Drum-Beat.

The question is, therefore, whether, upon the true principles of the Constitution, this exercise of power by the President can be justified. Whether the consequence be prejudicial or not, if there be an illegal exercise of power, it is to be resisted in the proper manner. Even if no harm or inconvenience result from transgressing the boundary, the intrusion is not to be suffered to pass unnoticed. Every encroachment, great or small, is important enough to awaken the attention of those who are entrusted with the preservation of a constitutional government. We are not to wait till great public mischiefs come, till the government is overthrown, or liberty itself put into extreme jeopardy. We should not be worthy sons of our fathers were we so to regard great questions affecting the general freedom. Those fathers accomplished the Revolution on a strict question of principle. The Parliament of Great Britain asserted a right to tax the Colonies in all cases whatsoever; and it was precisely on this question that they made the Revolution turn. The amount of taxation was trifling, but the claim itself was inconsistent with liberty; and that was, in their eyes, enough. It was against the recital of an act of Parliament, rather than against any suffering under its enactments, that they took up arms. They went to war against a preamble. They fought seven years against a declaration. They poured out their treasures and their blood like water, in a contest against an assertion which those less sagacious and not so well schooled in the principles of civil liberty would have regarded as barren phraseology or mere parade of words. They saw in the claim of the British Parliament a seminal principle of mischief, the germ of unjust power; they detected it, dragged it forth from underneath its plausible disguises, struck at it; nor did it elude either their steady eye or their well-directed blow till they had extirpated and destroyed it, to the smallest fibre. On this question of principle, while actual suffering was yet afar off, they raised their flag against a power to which, for purposes of foreign conquest and subjugation, Rome, in the height of her glory, is not to be compared; a power which has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drum-beat, following the sun, and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

After a Portrait by A. H. Ritchie.

(From a Speech in the Senate in May 1834.)

Washington Irving

was born in the city of New York on 3rd April 1783, the son of a Presbyterian Scotsman from Shapinshay in Orkney, who claimed descent from William de Irwyn, armour-bearer of Robert Bruce; his mother, from Falmouth in Cornwall, a woman of a sunny, loving temper, was attached to the Episcopal Church. His education was scanty and desultory. His brothers were sent to college, but he showed no inclination to study, being 'a dreamer and a saunterer'—owing doubtless to a hereditary tendency to pulmonary disease. He was named after the father of the country, from whom as a child he received a personal blessing. Whilst at four schools he versified a bit and wrote a play; at sixteen he entered a law-office, at nineteen contributed humorous articles to a paper as 'Jonathan Oldstyle.' Threatened with consumption, he sailed for Europe, landed at Bordeaux in 1804, and went by Marseilles to Italy, escaping with difficulty from Bonaparte's police, who persisted in regarding him as an English spy. At Rome he was intoxicated by Italian art, and having met Allston the American painter, was tempted to become an artist. He visited Paris and the Netherlands, and at London saw John Kemble and Mrs Siddons. In 1806 he returned to New York in improved health, and was admitted to the Bar. Those were 'Corinthian days,' and he led a rather idle life, much in society, and greatly admired.

His first writing was in the Salmagundi, a semi-monthly sheet in imitation of the Spectator, conducted jointly by himself, his brother William, and J. K. Paulding. It ran for twenty numbers, and then stopped without explanation in the fullness of success. There was considerable merit of a superficial sort in those early attempts, but there was no evidence of serious literary purpose; the papers were apparently written with a view only to social distinction. His first characteristic work, that by which he will be best remembered, was A History of New York, by Diedrich Knickerbocker, published in 1809. Everybody knows the little man in knee-breeches and cocked hat as one of the permanent figures in the gallery of literary portraits. The History has a substratum of truth, but is openly a good-natured burlesque upon the old Dutch settlers of Manhattan Island. The humour and the gravity which mask it are alike irresistible; it may be doubted if there is in the language a more delightful or more perfectly sustained piece of drollery. Readers of Scott will remember his warm praise of the book, written while 'his sides were sore with laughing.' In the United States it was universally read; and even now it is to the American people as real in its way as the Pilgrim's Progress.

For eight years after this Irving was in partnership with his two elder brothers in a business that had relations on both sides of the Atlantic, but in the end was unsuccessful; and when later he had won his place among authors and was receiving a good income, he supported two of his brothers and five nieces with unselfish devotion. In May 1815 he went to Europe for the second time, and did not return for seventeen years; in August 1817 he visited Scott at Abbotsford. It was in 1818 that the misfortunes of his firm culminated in bankruptcy, and thereafter he turned his whole attention to literature. He declined liberal offers for magazine work, and would undertake nothing that was to interfere with his plans. The Sketch Book, of which the first number appeared in New York in 1819, and the last in 1820, was received in the United States with universal delight; its early success in Great Britain was largely due to the powerful support of Scott. All the pieces in this miscellany have a certain charm—if for nothing more, for their felicitous touch and purity of style. But the chief interest centres in 'Rip Van Winkle,' 'The Legend of Sleepy Hollow,' and 'Westminster Abbey.' The last is one of the most finished descriptive essays of the century, though perhaps a little lacking in simplicity. The two legendary tales are in a way related to the History of New York, and have had a currency and an influence difficult to measure. 'Rip Van Winkle' is a distinct creation of genius, and with its fellow has made the lower reach of the Hudson classic ground; for the first time there had been produced in the United States a literary work on the highest level of contemporary excellence. Bracebridge Hall (1822) fairly maintained but did not raise the author's reputation—'Geoffrey Crayon, Gent.,' was already at the summit of favour. After a few years passed on the Continent he published (1824) Tales of a Traveller, a work he thought his best in regard to style, but which some critics think over-refined.

In 1826 he went to Spain and began the long and arduous studies which were the foundation of his more important serious works. These were The Life of Columbus (1828), The Conquest of Granada (1829), Voyages of the Companions of Columbus (1831), The Alhambra (1832), Legends of the Conquest of Spain (1835), Mahomet and his Successors (1850); but the two or three works last named were only sketched or partly written before his return to the United States in 1832. It was Irving who first revealed to English readers the rich stores of Spanish history and romance; and whatever may have been done to correct or expand his narratives, to him must be given the praise of having produced some of the most fascinating books in existence. He had intended to write the history of the conquest of Mexico, for which he had collected materials, but generously, and to his own loss, relinquished his design to Prescott when he learned that the latter proposed to undertake it. The sums obtained by Irving for his copyrights in England form an interesting item in literary history. Mr Murray gave £200 for the Sketch Book, but afterwards doubled the sum; for Bracebridge Hall he gave 1000 guineas; for Columbus, 3000 guineas; and for the Conquest of Granada, £2000. At the end of this sojourn in Spain, Irving was for a short time secretary to the United States Legation in London. On his return to his native city (1832) he was received with great enthusiasm; but he declined political honours, and continued his literary work. After an excursion in the then Far West, he published (1835) A Tour on the Prairies. In the same year he issued Recollections of Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey; he was also at work upon the last of the books in the Spanish series. In writing Astoria (1836) he was assisted by his nephew, his future biographer. The Adventures of Captain Bonneville (in the Rocky Mountains) appeared in 1837. His biography of Goldsmith was mainly written about this time, though not published until 1849. He remodelled for his home an old Dutch house in Tarrytown, New York, near his 'Sleepy Hollow'; but his intended retirement to 'Sunnyside' was postponed by his appointment in 1842 as United States minister to Spain. He returned in 1846, and once more set himself to work. Goldsmith and Mahomet appeared as already mentioned; then, in 1855, Wolfert's Roost, a miscellany. His last work was the Life of George Washington (5 vols. 1855-1859); he died at Sunnyside, 28th November 1859, and in Sleepy Hollow at Tarrytown he lies buried.

Irving was never married. In his youth he was betrothed to Miss Hoffman, a beautiful girl of eighteen, daughter of the lawyer with whom he pursued his studies; and separated from her by her untimely death, he remained all his life faithful to her memory. In all his works there is chivalrous deference and tenderness towards women; he was exceedingly fond of children, and was always beloved by them. In his youth he was well made and handsome, and then, as afterwards, was courted by the best society. Tender feeling and abundant humour mark his writings; he had a quite exceptional power to seize the attention of cultivated readers by his keen observation, his graphic touches of description, and his limpid and musical style. The early books which first gave him fame and those which came from his studies in Spain are his best claims to permanent remembrance; his later works would not have given him the high rank he deservedly holds. His was a fortunate and honourable life; and, on the whole, though inferior in genius to more than one American author, he must be accounted the most successful writer of his day in the New World.

The American in England.

England is as classic ground to an American as Italy is to an Englishman, and old London teems with as much historical association as mighty Rome.

But what more especially attracts his notice are those peculiarities which distinguish an old country and an old state of society from a new one. I have never yet grown familiar enough with the crumbling monuments of past ages to blunt the intense interest with which I at first beheld them. Accustomed always to scenes where history was, in a manner, in anticipation; where everything in art was new and progressive, and pointed to the future rather than the past; where, in short, the works of man gave no ideas but those of young existence and prospective improvement—there was something inexpressibly touching in the sight of enormous piles of architecture, gray with antiquity and sinking to decay. I cannot describe the mute but deep-felt enthusiasm with which I have contemplated a vast monastic ruin like Tintern Abbey, buried in the bosom of a quiet valley, and shut up from the world, as though it had existed merely for itself; or a warrior pile, like Conway Castle, standing in stern loneliness on its rocky height, a mere hollow yet threatening phantom of departed power. They spread a grand and melancholy, and, to me, an unusual, charm over the landscape. I for the first time beheld signs of national old age and empire's decay; and proofs of the transient and perishing glories of art, amidst the ever-springing and reviving fertility of nature.

But, in fact, to me everything was full of matter; the footsteps of history were everywhere to be traced; and poetry had breathed over and sanctified the land. I experienced the delightful feeling of freshness of a child to whom everything is new. I pictured to myself a set of inhabitants and a mode of life for every habitation that I saw, from the aristocratical mansion, amidst the lordly repose of stately groves and solitary parks, to the straw-thatched cottage, with its scanty garden and cherished woodbine. I thought I never could be sated with the sweetness and freshness of a country so completely carpeted with verdure; where every air breathed of the balmy pasture and the honeysuckled hedge. I was continually coming upon some little document of poetry in the blossomed hawthorn, the daisy, the cowslip, the primrose, or some other simple object that has received a supernatural value from the muse. The first time that I heard the song of the nightingale, I was intoxicated more by the delicious crowd of remembered associations than by the melody of its notes; and I shall never forget the thrill of ecstasy with which I first saw the lark rise, almost from beneath my feet, and wing its musical flight up into the morning sky.

(From Bracebridge Hall.)

A Rainy Sunday in an Inn.

It was a rainy Sunday in the gloomy month of November. I had been detained in the course of a journey by a slight indisposition, from which I was recovering; but I was still feverish, and was obliged to keep within doors all day, in an inn of the small town of Derby. A wet Sunday in a country inn! Whoever has had the luck to experience one can alone judge of my situation. The rain pattered against the casements; the bells tolled for church with a melancholy sound. I went to the windows in quest of something to amuse the eye, but it seemed as if I had been placed completely out of the reach of all amusement. The windows of my bedroom looked out among tiled roofs and stacks of chimneys, while those of my sitting-room commanded a full view of the stable-yard. I know of nothing more calculated to make a man sick of this world than a stable-yard on a rainy day. The place was littered with wet straw, that had been kicked about by travellers and stable-boys. In one corner was a stagnant pool of water surrounding an island of muck; there were several half-drowned fowls crowded together under a cart, among which was a miserable crestfallen cock, drenched out of all life and spirit, his drooping tail matted, as it were, into a single feather, along which the water trickled from his back; near the cart was a half-dozing cow chewing the cud, and standing patiently to be rained on, with wreaths of vapour rising from her reeking hide; a wall-eyed horse, tired of the loneliness of the stable, was poking his spectral head out of a window, with the rain dripping on it from the eaves; an unhappy cur, chained to a dog-house hard by, uttering something every now and then between a bark and a yelp; a drab of a kitchen-wench tramped backwards and forwards through the yard in pattens, looking as sulky as the weather itself: everything, in short, was comfortless and forlorn, excepting a crew of hard-drinking ducks, assembled like boon companions round a puddle, and making a riotous noise over their liquor.

I sauntered to the window, and stood gazing at the people picking their way to church, with petticoats hoisted mid-leg high, and dripping umbrellas. The bells ceased to toll, and the streets became silent. I then amused myself with watching the daughters of a tradesman opposite, who, being confined to the house for fear of wetting their Sunday finery, played off their charms at the front windows, to fascinate the chance tenants of the inn. They at length were summoned away by a vigilant vinegar-faced mother, and I had nothing further from without to amuse me.

The day continued lowering and gloomy; the slovenly, ragged, spongy clouds drifted heavily along; there was no variety even in the rain; it was one dull, continued, monotonous patter, patter, patter, excepting that now and then I was enlivened by the idea of a brisk shower, from the rattling of the drops upon a passing umbrella. It was quite refreshing—if I may be allowed a hackneyed phrase of the day—when in the course of the morning a horn blew, and a stage-coach whirled through the street with outside passengers stuck all over it, cowering under cotton umbrellas, and seethed together, and reeking with the steams of wet box-coats and upper benjamins. The sound brought out from their lurking-places a crew of vagabond boys and vagabond dogs, and the carrot-headed hostler and that nondescript animal yclept Boots, and all the other vagabond race that infest the purlieu of an inn; but the bustle was transient; the coach again whirled on its way; and boy and dog, and hostler and Boots, all slunk back again to their holes; the street again became silent, and the rain continued to rain on.

The evening gradually wore away.

The travellers read the papers two or three times over. Some drew round the fire, and told long stories about their horses, about their adventures, their overturns, and breakings-down. They discussed the credits of different merchants and different inns, and the two wags told several choice anecdotes of pretty chamber-maids and kind landladies. All this passed as they were quietly taking what they called their nightcaps—that is to say, strong glasses of brandy and water or sugar, or some other mixture of the kind; after which they one after another rang for Boots and the chamber-maid, and walked off to bed in old shoes cut down into marvellously uncomfortable slippers. There was only one man left—a short-legged, long-bodied, plethoric fellow, with a very large, sandy head. He sat by himself with a glass of port-wine negus and a spoon, sipping and stirring, and meditating and sipping, until nothing was left but the spoon. He gradually fell asleep bolt upright in his chair, with the empty glass standing before him; and the candle seemed to fall asleep too, for the wick grew long and black, and cabbaged at the end, and dimmed the little light that remained in the chamber. The gloom that now prevailed was contagious. Around hung the shapeless and almost spectral box-coats of departed travellers, long since buried in deep sleep. I only heard the ticking of the clock, with the deep-drawn breathings of the sleeping toper, and the drippings of the rain—drop, drop, drop—from the eaves of the house.

WASHINGTON IRVING.

After the Portrait by Stuart Newton.

(From Bracebridge Hall.)

Rip Van Winkle's Return.

The appearance of Rip, with his long grizzled beard, his rusty fowling-piece, his uncouth dress, and an army of women and children at his heels, soon attracted the attention of the tavern politicians. They crowded round him, eyeing him from head to foot with great curiosity. The orator bustled up to him, and drawing him partly aside, inquired 'on which side he voted.' Rip stared in vacant stupidity. Another short but busy little fellow pulled him by the arm, and rising on tiptoe, inquired in his ear, 'whether he was a Federal or Democrat?' Rip was equally at a loss to comprehend the question, when a knowing, self-important old gentleman, in a sharp cocked hat, made his way through the crowd, putting them to the right and left with his elbows as he passed, and planting himself before Van Winkle, with one arm akimbo, the other resting on his cane, his keen eye and sharp hat penetrating, as it were, into his very soul, demanded in an austere tone, 'what brought him to the election with a gun on his shoulder, and a mob at his heels, and whether he meant to breed a riot in the village?' 'Alas! gentlemen,' said Rip, somewhat dismayed, 'I am a poor, quiet man, a native of the place, and a loyal subject of the king, God bless him!'

Here a general shout burst from the bystanders—'A tory! a tory! a spy! a refugee! Hustle him! away with him!' It was with great difficulty that the self-important man in the cocked hat restored order; and, having assumed a tenfold austerity of brow, demanded again of the unknown culprit what he came there for, and whom he was seeking? The poor man humbly assured him that he meant no harm, but merely came there in search of some of his neighbours, who used to keep about the tavern.

'Well, who are they?—name them.'

Rip bethought himself a moment, and inquired, 'Where's Nicholas Vedder?'

There was a silence for a while, when an old man replied, in a thin, piping voice, 'Nicholas Vedder! why, he is dead and gone these eighteen years. There was a wooden tombstone in the churchyard, that used to tell all about him, but that's rotten and gone too.'

'Where's Brom Dutcher?'

'Oh, he went off to the army in the beginning of the war; some say he was killed at the storming of Stony Point—others say he was drowned in a squall at the foot of Antony's Nose. I don't know—he never came back again.'

'Where's Van Brummel, the schoolmaster?'

'He went off to the wars too, was a great militia general, and is now in Congress.'

Rip's heart died away at hearing of these sad changes in his home and friends, and finding himself thus alone in the world.

Every answer puzzled him, too, by treating of such enormous lapses of time, and of matters which he could not understand: war—Congress—Stony Point;—he had no courage to ask after any more friends, but cried out in despair, 'Does nobody here know Rip Van Winkle?'

'Oh, Rip Van Winkle!' exclaimed two or three. 'Oh, to be sure! That's Rip Van Winkle yonder, leaning against the tree.'

Rip looked, and beheld a precise counterpart of himself as he went up the mountain: apparently as lazy, and certainly as ragged. The poor fellow was now completely confounded. He doubted his own identity, and whether he was himself or another man. In the midst of his bewilderment, the man in the cocked hat demanded who he was and what was his name?

'God knows,' exclaimed he, at his wits' end; 'I'm not myself—I'm somebody else—that's me yonder—no—that's somebody else got into my shoes—I was myself last night, but I fell asleep on the mountain, and they've changed my gun, and everything's changed, and I'm changed, and I can't tell what's my name or who I am!'

The bystanders now began to look at each other, nod, wink significantly, and tap their fingers against their foreheads. There was a whisper, also, about securing the gun, and keeping the old fellow from doing mischief, at the very suggestion of which the self-important man in the cocked hat retired with some precipitation. At this critical moment a fresh, comely woman passed through the throng to get a peep at the gray-headed man.

She had a chubby child in her arms, which, frightened at his looks, began to cry. 'Hush, Rip,' cried she; 'hush, you little fool; the old man won't hurt you.' The name of the child, the air of the mother, the tone of her voice, all awakened a train of recollections in his mind.

'What is your name, my good woman?' asked he.

'Judith Gardenier.'

'And your father's name?'

'Ah, poor man! Rip Van Winkle was his name, but it's twenty years since he went away from home with his gun, and never has been heard of since—his dog came home without him; but whether he shot himself, or was carried away by the Indians, nobody can tell. I was then but a little girl.'

Rip had but one more question to ask; but he put it with a faltering voice:

'Where's your mother?'

'Oh, she too had died but a short time since; she broke a blood-vessel in a fit of passion at a New-England peddler.'

There was a drop of comfort, at least, in this intelligence. The honest man could contain himself no longer. He caught his daughter and her child in his arms. 'I am your father!' cried he—'young Rip Van Winkle once—old Rip Van Winkle now!—Does nobody know poor Rip Van Winkle?'

All stood amazed, until an old woman, tottering out from among the crowd, put her hand to her brow, and peering under it in his face for a moment, exclaimed, 'Sure enough! it is Rip Van Winkle—it is himself! Welcome home again, old neighbour. Why, where have you been these twenty long years?'

Rip's story was soon told, for the whole twenty years had been to him but as one night. The neighbours stared when they heard it: some were seen to wink at each other, and put their tongues in their cheeks; and the self-important man in the cocked hat, who, when the alarm was over, had returned to the field, screwed down the corners of his mouth, and shook his head—upon which there was a general shaking of the head throughout the assemblage.

It was determined, however, to take the opinion of old Peter Vanderdonk, who was seen slowly advancing up the road. He was a descendant of the historian of that name, who wrote one of the earliest accounts of the province. Peter was the most ancient inhabitant of the village, and well versed in all the wonderful events and traditions of the neighbourhood. He recollected Rip at once, and corroborated his story in the most satisfactory manner. He assured the company that it was a fact, handed down from his ancestor the historian, that the Kaatskill Mountains had always been haunted by strange beings. That it was affirmed that the great Hendrick Hudson, the first discoverer of the river and country, kept a kind of vigil there every twenty years, with his crew of the Half-moon; being permitted in this way to revisit the scene of his enterprise, and keep a guardian eye upon the river, and the great city called by his name. That his father had once seen them in their old Dutch dresses playing at nine-pins in a hollow of the mountain; and that he himself had heard, one summer afternoon, the sound of their balls, like distant peals of thunder.

To make a long story short, the company broke up, and returned to the more important concerns of the election. Rip's daughter took him home to live with her; she had a snug, well-furnished house, and a stout cheery farmer for a husband, whom Rip recollected for one of the urchins that used to climb upon his back. As to Rip's son and heir, who was the ditto of himself, seen leaning against the tree, he was employed to work on the farm; but evinced an hereditary disposition to attend to anything else but his business. Rip now resumed his old walks and habits; he soon found many of his former cronies, though all rather the worse for the wear and tear of time; and preferred making friends among the rising generation, with whom he soon grew into great favour.

The above article on Irving has been revised from that written for Chambers's Encyclopædia in 1890 by Dr. F. H. Underwood. A Life of Irving was published by his nephew, Pierre M. Irving (5 vols. 1862-64); there is also a biography by G. S. Hellman (1925). More recent is the Life of Washington Irving by Stanley T. Williams (2 vols. 1936). Irving's Letters to Brevoort were published in 1915. Besides the various histories of American literature, see Bryant's Discourse on Irving (1860), and Longfellow's Address before the Massachusetts Historical Society (1870).

Fitz-Greene Halleck (1790-1867), born at Guilford in Connecticut, became a clerk in New York, and in 1832 private secretary to John Jacob Astor; in 1849 he retired to Guilford on an annuity of $200 left him by Astor. With his friend Rodman Drake he was responsible for the verse squibs and local satires called The Croaker Papers. His longest poem, Fanny (1819), is a pointed and sprightly satire on the literature, fashions, and politics of the time. His best shorter poem is the elegy on his friend Rodman Drake, beginning, 'Green be the turf above thee'; others still remembered are the verses on Marco Bozzaris, on Burns, and on Alnwick Castle. His complete Poetical Writings and his Life and Letters were edited by J. G. Wilson in 1868-69; his Orations by W. C. Bryant in 1873.

George Ticknor (1791-1871), born in Boston the son of a wealthy New Englander, was admitted to the Bar in 1813, but turned his thoughts to study and travel, and, starting for Europe in 1815, remained there for four years—at London, Göttingen, Paris, Geneva, Rome, Venice, Madrid, and Lisbon. Everywhere he mixed in the best society; and his journal is full of the best sort of interviewing. He was Professor of French and Spanish and Belles Lettres at Harvard 1819-35, then again spent three years in Europe, collecting materials for his monumental and learned but far from lively History of Spanish Literature (1849). He also wrote Lives of Lafayette (1824) and Prescott (1864). His delightful Life, Letters, and Journals were published in 1876; and, dealing with European letters as much as with American experiences, are perhaps his most valuable bequest to posterity.

Nathaniel Parker Willis (1806-67) was born at Portland of a long line of Puritan ancestors, his father and grandfather being journalists. By the time he left Yale he was a clever writer in prose and verse, and ready to launch his Fugitive Poetry (1829). In New York he established the American Monthly Magazine; in 1831 visited Europe, where he was well received; and contributed to the New York Mirror his Pencilings by the Way. The Slingsby Papers, a collection of clever stories, belong to the same period. Appointed attaché to the American legation at Paris, he visited Greece and Turkey, and returned to England in 1837. To the London New Monthly he sent his Inklings of Adventure (collected 1836), and in 1840 he described a country life in Letters from under a Bridge. In 1844, now editor of the Daily Mirror, he revisited Europe, and published Dashes at Life with a Free Pencil (1845). In New York again in 1846, he started the Home Journal, to which he contributed most of his later works: in 1850, People I have Met and Life Here and There; 1851, Hurrygraphs, Life of Jenny Lind; 1853, Fun Jottings, A Summer Cruise in the Mediterranean; 1854, A Health-Trip to the Tropics, Famous Persons and Places; 1855, The Rag-Bag; 1857, Paul Fane; 1859, The Convalescent. For a decade about the middle of the century he was perhaps the most conspicuous and best-paid professional writer in America, though most of his work was trivial and gossipy, and is now forgotten. His early lyric 'Unseen Spirits' is admirable, but most of his short poems, scriptural, pathetic, and other, though they seem to have actually moved a generation trained on sentiment and the Bible, fail of their effect. 'Lady Jane' is at most clever; 'Melanie' and 'Lord Ivan and his Daughter' are all but unreadable. There is a Life of him in the 'American Men of Letters' (1885) by Professor H. A. Beers, who edited Selections from his prose writings (1885).—His sister, Sara Payson Willis, 'Fanny Fern' (1811-72), was a popular writer. See her Life (1873) by her husband, James Parton.

James Fenimore Cooper (1789-1851) was born at Burlington, New Jersey, son of a Federalist member of Congress, of Quaker descent; but in 1790 the family removed to a property near Otsego Lake, on what was afterwards to be known as Cooperstown, New York, then in a wild frontier region of great natural beauty. Cooper was much influenced in his second home by forest surroundings, red men, traders, and Indian traditions, his sense of mystery and his imagination being strongly stimulated. He entered Yale College in 1802, a boy of thirteen; and after remaining there three years, he was dismissed for neglect of his studies and defiance of academic discipline. In 1806 he shipped as a common sailor in the merchant service, and in 1808 entered the navy as a midshipman. He rose to the rank of a lieutenant, but in 1811 resigned his commission, and married a sister of Bishop De Lancey of New York, a high Tory. For ten years he devoted himself to farming and family life, and plunged into authorship somewhat suddenly. His first novel, Precaution (1819), was a failure; and the thirty-two tales which followed it were of extremely unequal quality. Among those which had exceptional merit and signal success may be named The Spy (1821), The Pilot (1823), The Last of the Mohicans (1826), The Prairie (1826), The Red Rover (1831), The Bravo (1831), The Pathfinder (1840), The Deerslayer (1841), The Two Admirals (1842), Wing-and-Wing (1842), and Satanstoe (1845). His other writings include a meritorious Naval History of the United States (1839; abridged edition, 1841), and Lives of Distinguished American Naval Officers (1846). His novels, upon the whole, and in spite of conspicuous faults, well deserve all the favour they received; the sea-tales and stories of frontier life being out of sight his best. His descriptive talent was as yet unequalled in America; and some of his characters, such as 'Natty Bumppo,' 'Long Tom Coffin,' 'Harvey Birch,' 'Uncas,' 'Chingachgook,' and especially 'Leather-Stocking,' are drawn with extraordinary vigour and vividness. From the beginning of his literary career he was greeted as proving that an American had done work which might almost be compared with that of 'the author of Waverley.' The peace of many of the later years of his life was much disturbed by literary and newspaper controversies and actions for libel—usually against Horace Greeley and other Whig editors, for he was often denounced as a Tory and aristocrat; and in nearly all of them he was successful. He conducted his own lawsuits, and usually pleaded his cases with admirable tact and ability. One good result of these suits was to impose upon the newspaper press of America some degree of restraint from the scandalously savage and virulent freedom of speech which had till then prevailed. On either side of the Atlantic Cooper's own severity of language won him no small amount of personal unpopularity; yet no man loved his country better than he; and his high regard for the nobler side of the English character, and his appreciation of the grand achievements of British history, found frequent expression in his writings. These writings, other than the best of his novels, contained much to excite opposition, and they brought upon him, not altogether undeservedly, the reputation of being a proud, contentious, and somewhat wrong-headed man; yet there was in his real character much sweetness, great strength and dignity, and unqualified honesty. He was excessively proud, no doubt, but his pride was without vanity; his faults were those of temper and judgment rather than of character.

When Cooper is treated—as he still often is, even in America—mainly as a writer of boys' books, he has an injustice done him. He wrote too much; many of his men are as conventional as his women usually are; his conversations are stilted; his style is careless; and his prejudices are constantly aired. But he had a very true and very great gift as a story-teller; he was the first to take the virgin forest and the prairie into the domain of fiction, and he wrote the prose epic of the planting of his country. Modern ethnologists do not sneer, as it was once the fashion to do, at his Indians as mere creations of the fancy. Some of his characters are permanent additions to literature; and his power is best felt when he is compared with his predecessor, Brockden Brown. 'He belongs emphatically to the American nation,' as Washington Irving said; and his painting of nature under new aspects gave him a name that will never die.

By Lake Otsego.

On all sides, wherever the eye turned, nothing met it but the mirror-like surface of the lake, the placid view of heaven, and the dense setting of woods. So rich and fleecy were the outlines of the forest that scarce an opening could be seen; the whole visible earth, from the rounded mountain-top to the water's edge, presenting one unvaried line of unbroken verdure. As if vegetation were not satisfied with a triumph so complete, the trees overhung the lake itself, shooting out towards the light; and there were miles along its eastern shore where a boat might have pulled beneath the branches of dark Rembrandt-looking hemlocks, quivering aspens, and melancholy pines. In a word, the hand of man had never yet defaced or deformed any part of this native scene, which lay bathed in the sunlight, a glorious picture of affluent forest grandeur, softened by the balminess of June, and relieved by the beautiful variety afforded by the presence of so broad an expanse of water.

Death of Long Tom Coffin.

Lifting his broad hands high into the air, his voice was heard in the tempest. 'God's will be done with me,' he cried: 'I saw the first timber of the Ariel laid, and shall live just long enough to see it turn out of her bottom; after which I wish to live no longer.' But his shipmates were far beyond the sounds of his voice before these were half uttered. All command of the boat was rendered impossible, by the numbers it contained, as well as the raging of the surf; and as it rose on the white crest of a wave, Tom saw his beloved little craft for the last time. It fell into a trough of the sea, and in a few moments more its fragments were ground into splinters on the adjoining rocks. The cockswain [Tom] still remained where he had cast off the rope, and beheld the numerous heads and arms that appeared rising, at short intervals, on the waves, some making powerful and well-directed efforts to gain the sands, that were becoming visible as the tide fell, and others wildly tossed, in the frantic movements of helpless despair. The honest old seaman gave a cry of joy as he saw Barnstable [the commander, whom Tom had forced into the boat] issue from the surf, where one by one several seamen soon appeared also, dripping and exhausted. Many others of the crew were carried in a similar manner to places of safety; though, as Tom returned to his seat on the bowsprit, he could not conceal from his reluctant eyes the lifeless forms that were, in other spots, driven against the rocks with a fury that soon left them but few of the outward vestiges of humanity.

JAMES FENIMORE COOPER.

After the Portrait by Madame de Mirbel.

Dillon and the cockswain were now the sole occupants of their dreadful station. The former stood in a kind of stupid despair, a witness of the scene; but as his curdled blood began again to flow more warmly to his heart, he crept close to the side of Tom, with that sort of selfish feeling that makes even hopeless misery more tolerable, when endured in participation with another.

'When the tide falls,' he said in a voice that betrayed the agony of fear, though his words expressed the renewal of hope, 'we shall be able to walk to land.'

'There was One, and only One, to whose feet the waters were the same as a dry deck,' returned the cockswain; 'and none but such as have His power will ever be able to walk from these rocks to the sands.' The old seaman paused, and turning his eyes, which exhibited a mingled expression of disgust and compassion, on his companion, he added with reverence: 'Had you thought more of Him in fair weather, your case would be less to be pitied in this tempest.'

'Do you still think there is much danger?' asked Dillon.

'To them that have reason to fear death. Listen! Do you hear that hollow noise beneath ye?'

'Tis the wind driving by the vessel!'

'Tis the poor thing herself,' said the affected cockswain, 'giving her last groans. The water is breaking up her decks; and in a few minutes more, the handsomest model that ever cut a wave will be like the chips that fell from her in framing!'

'Why, then, did you remain here?' cried Dillon wildly.

'To die in my coffin, if it should be the will of God,' returned Tom. 'These waves are to me what the land is to you; I was born on them, and I have always meant that they should be my grave.'

'But I—I,' shrieked Dillon—'I am not ready to die—I cannot die!—I will not die!'

'Poor wretch!' muttered his companion; 'you must go like the rest of us: when the death-watch is called, none can skulk from the muster.'

'I can swim,' Dillon continued, rushing with frantic eagerness to the side of the wreck. 'Is there no billet of wood, no rope, that I can take with me?'

'None; everything has been cut away, or carried off by the sea. If ye are about to strive for your life, take with ye a stout heart and a clean conscience, and trust the rest to God.'

'God!' echoed Dillon, in the madness of his frenzy; 'I know no God! there is no God that knows me!'

'Peace!' said the deep tones of the cockswain, in a voice that seemed to speak in the elements; 'blasphemer, peace!'

The heavy groaning produced by the water in the timbers of the Ariel, at that moment added its impulse to the raging feelings of Dillon, and he cast himself headlong into the sea. The water thrown by the rolling of the surf on the beach was necessarily returned to the ocean, in eddies, in different places favourable to such an action of the element. Into the edge of one of these counter-currents, that was produced by the very rocks on which the schooner lay, and which the watermen call the 'under-tow,' Dillon had unknowingly thrown his person; and when the waves had driven him a short distance from the wreck, he was met by a stream that his most desperate efforts could not overcome. He was a light and powerful swimmer, and the struggle was hard and protracted. With the shore immediately before his eyes, and at no great distance, he was led, as by a false phantom, to continue his efforts, although they did not advance him a foot. The old seaman, who at first had watched his motions with careless indifference, understood the danger of his situation at a glance, and, forgetful of his own fate, he shouted aloud, in a voice that was driven over the struggling victim to the ears of his shipmates on the sands: 'Sheer to port, and clear the under-tow! Sheer to the southward!'

Dillon heard the sounds, but his faculties were too much obscured by terror to distinguish their object; he, however, blindly yielded to the call, and gradually changed his direction until his face was once more turned towards the vessel. Tom looked around him for a rope, but all had gone over with the spars, or been swept away by the waves. At this moment of disappointment his eyes met those of the desperate Dillon. Calm and inured to horrors as was the veteran seaman, he involuntarily passed his hand before his brow to exclude the look or despair he encountered; and when, a moment afterwards, he removed the rigid member, he beheld the sinking form of the victim as it gradually settled in the ocean, still struggling with regular but impotent strokes of the arms and feet to gain the wreck, and to preserve an existence that had been so much abused in its hour of allotted probation. 'He will soon meet his God, and learn that his God knows him!' murmured the cockswain to himself. As he yet spoke, the wreck of the Ariel yielded to an overwhelming sea, and after a universal shudder, her timbers and planks gave way, and were swept towards the cliffs, bearing the body of the simple-hearted cockswain among the ruins. (From The Pilot.)

Lounsbury's Life of Fenimore Cooper (1882) is the standard one: there are also Studies by Clymer (1902) and Boynton (1931). His Letters were edited by Morse (1914) and Cooper (1922).

William Gilmore Simms (1806-70), the first notable man of letters in the Southern States, was born at Charleston in South Carolina, and had been both druggist and law-student when in 1828 he became editor of the City Gazette. His first poetic venture, Lyrical and other Poems (1827), was followed by The Vision of Cortes (1829), The Tricolour (1830), and Atalantis (1832); but his poetry is almost uniformly mediocre, though Southern Passages and Pictures (1839) contains some good verse. His essays, dramas, histories, and biographies are unimportant; he was a vigorous and successful journalist. But it is as novelist, the most capable of Fenimore Cooper's successors and imitators, that he has earned his place in literary history. Martin Faber (1833), somewhat on Brockden Brown's lines, attracted notice. Guy Rivers (1834) was a tale of life in the Georgia goldfields. The Yemassee (1835), dealing with Indians in colonial days, is an advance on these, and though it too plainly shows Cooper's influence, is usually accounted Simms's greatest work. The Partisan (1835), The Scout, Woodcraft, and Eutaw (1856) are the most notable of a series dealing with adventure and warfare in the South during the revolutionary wars. Richard Hurdis, Border Beagles, Helen Halsey, and Charlemont continued the Border series begun by Guy Rivers. Pelayo, Count Julian, The Damsel of Darien, Vasconcelos, are too ambitious historical novels on times and regions to which Simms could not do justice. Carl Werner, Castle Dismal, and Marie de Berniere are domestic novels; The Wigwam and the Cabin is a collection of short tales. The Cassique of Kiawah (1860) would have been one of his triumphs but for the excitements of the Civil War, on which Simms wrote zealously as a fervid Southerner. During the war he was ruined and his library was burnt; he never retrieved his losses or regained his eminence in the public view—for 'at the North' his vehement partisanship had made him unpopular. In his life he had founded or conducted some half-dozen literary serials, and to them and other periodicals he contributed largely; he did much hack-work on a vast variety of subjects; and he was highly thought of as lecturer and orator. The illustrated edition of his works (1882-86) fills seventeen volumes. See Lives by Cable (1888) and Professor Trent (1892).

Richard Henry Dana (1787-1879) was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, educated at Harvard, and admitted to the Bar at Boston in 1811. In 1818 he became associate editor of the North American Review, to which he contributed largely. His Dying Raven (1821), The Buccaneer (1827), and some others of his poems were warmly praised by critics; but his best work was in criticism.

His son, Richard Henry Dana (1815-82), graduated at Harvard in 1837; but during a break in his college career, occasioned in part by an affection of the eyes, he had shipped as a common sailor, and made a voyage round Cape Horn to California and back. This voyage he described in Two Years before the Mast (1840), on the whole, perhaps, the best book of its kind; in 1840 he was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar, and was especially distinguished in maritime law. Among his works are The Seaman's Friend (1841) and To Cuba and Back (1859). He also edited Wheaton's International Law, and was a prominent Free-soiler and Republican. There is a Life of him by Adams (2 vols. 1890).

RICHARD HENRY DANA, JR.

From an Etching by S. A. Schoff.

Joseph Rodman Drake (1795-1820), associated with Fitz-Greene Halleck in The Croaker Papers, was born in New York city, and bred to medicine, but died of consumption in his twenty-sixth year. His most considerable poem, 'The Culprit Fay,' was written to show that American rivers also had just claims to the glories of fancy and romance. 'The American Flag' is even better known. The volume containing The Culprit Fay and other Poems was first published in 1835, and has been repeatedly reprinted.

William Cullen Bryant (1794-1878), long the patriarch of American poets, was born of good New England stock at Cummington in Massachusetts, his father being a distinguished medical practitioner, who sat in the State legislature; and his name commemorates the doctor's reverence for the great Edinburgh physician, William Cullen, then recently dead. The precocious boy, keenly interested in literature, was trained to admire the poetry of Pope, and early encouraged to imitate him; the most noted fruit of these attempts being a satire, The Embargo, or Sketches of the Times (1807)—a singular production for a youth of thirteen. In 1810 he entered Williams College, but, the family finances being straitened, he after two sessions resumed his studies at home, and formed himself by loving study of his favourite poets (amongst them Blair and Kirke White, Cowper and Campbell), while watching with a keen eye the quiet life of nature as he rambled among the woods. His quickened imagination found expression in the sonorous blank verse of Thanatopsis, which, published in the North American Review for September 1817 (though partly written as early as 1811), was unanimously greeted as having in it more of real poetry than anything hitherto written by an American. It has been described as the culmination of the poetry of the churchyard school. Meantime Bryant had studied law, had been admitted to the Bar, and had settled at Great Barrington. Invited to contribute further to the Review, he sent both verse and prose; among the former 'Lines to a Water-fowl,' and among the latter a criticism on American poetry. In 1821 he delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society at Harvard a patriotic poem on 'The Ages' in Spenserian verse. In the same year he was married to Miss Frances Fairchild, who inspired his poem 'O Fairest of the Rural Maids.' In this year, too, he lost his father, to whom he paid a tribute in his 'Hymn to Death.' Other noted poems of this time are 'The Rivulet,' 'The West Wind,' 'Green River,' 'The Forest Hymn,' and 'June,' which were published in Boston periodicals. In 1825 the poet was induced by his friends to remove to New York to become editor of the New York Review, and when it failed a year later, he was made assistant-editor of the Evening Post. In 1829 he had become editor-in-chief, and by his various gifts of mind and character, by his dignity and high principle, did much to raise the tone of the daily press. A collection of his poems was published in 1832, and, on its republication in England through Washington Irving, and with his warm commendation, received favourable notice from Blackwood's Magazine. Bryant was now, however, absorbed in journalism. His paper was democratic in politics, but when the slavery question became prominent it inclined to the anti-slavery side, and in 1856 it assisted in forming the Republican party. He was often called upon to make public addresses, and of these a volume was published in 1873. His visits to Europe, the West Indies, and many parts of the United States gave occasion for several series of letters to his paper (republished in three volumes). Meantime his poems had taken possession of the hearts of his countrymen, and several editions were issued, some of them finely illustrated. In his old age, when editorial duties were less absorbing, he again found time and temper for poetry. His later verse is strikingly similar in tone and manner to that of his youth; sometimes, as in 'Robert of Lincoln' and 'The Planting of an Apple-tree,' he seemed to reach a higher level than of old. At seventy-two he commenced translations of the Iliad and Odyssey in 'English blank verse, which proved as inadequate as those of many greater men before him. Almost his last poem was The Flood of Years, a worthy counterpart to Thanatopsis. In May 1878 Bryant delivered an eloquent address at the unveiling of a bust of Mazzini in the Central Park of New York; and as he was afterwards entering a house he fell on the doorstep, receiving injuries of which he died a fortnight later.

Historically the earliest of the true poets of America, Bryant justly ranks amongst the great writers of his country. His poetry, though lacking in fire and power and the essentially lyrical note, has in it a true vein of tenderness and sympathy, and much restrained dignity, reflectiveness, and patriotic love of liberty; upon the whole more closely akin in temper to the work of Gray and Cowper than of contemporary English poets, it too often tends to be commonplace. The secret of its popularity was perhaps more its moral than its poetic attractiveness. Bryant deals kindly with the nobler side of the Red Indian, and he is hardly equalled in his descriptions of the larger aspects of American scenery. Most of his poems are short, and his verse forms are not very varied—he is most at home in blank verse. 'The Death of the Flowers,' 'The Fringed Gentian,' 'The Crowded Street,' 'Oh, Mother of a Mighty Race,' 'Our Country's Call,' and 'The Battlefield' are others of his most memorable poems. He had little more than a nominal share in Bryant and Gâys Popular History of the United States (1876-1880); and his books of travel, addresses, and essays are little read.

An Indian at the Burying-place of his Fathers.

It is the spot I came to seek—
My fathers' ancient burial-place,
Ere from these vales, ashamed and weak,
Withdrew our wasted race.
It is the spot—I know it well—
Of which our old traditions tell.
For here the upland bank sends out
A ridge toward the river-side;
I know the shaggy hills about,
The meadows smooth and wide;
The plains that, toward the eastern sky,
Fenced east and west by mountains lie.

A white man, gazing on the scene,
Would say a lovely spot was here,
And praise the lawns, so fresh and green,
Between the hills so sheer.
I like it not—I would the plain
Lay in its tall old groves again.

The sheep are on the slopes around,
The cattle in the meadows feed,
And labourers turn the crumbling ground,
Or drop the yellow seed,
And prancing steeds, in trappings gay,
Whirl the bright chariot o'er the way.

Methinks it were a nobler sight
To see these vales in woods arrayed,
Their summits in the golden light,
Their trunks in grateful shade ;
And herds of deer, that bounding go
O'er rills and prostrate trees below.

And then to mark the lord of all,
The forest hero, trained to wars,
Quivered and plumed, and lithe and tall,
And seamed with glorious scars,
Walk forth, amid his train, to dare
The wolf, and grapple with the bear.

This bank, in which the dead were laid,
Was sacred when its soil was ours ;
Hither the artless Indian maid
Brought wreaths of beads and flowers,
And the gray chief and gifted seer
Worshipped the God of thunders here.

But now the wheat is green and high
On clods that hid the warrior's breast,
And scattered in the furrows lie
The weapons of his rest ;
And there, in the loose sand, is thrown
Of his large arm the mouldering bone.

Ah, little thought the strong and brave,
Who bore their lifeless chieftain forth,
Or the young wife that weeping gave
Her first-born to the earth,
That the pale race, who waste us now,
Among their bones should guide the plough !

They waste us—ay, like April snow
In the warm noon, we shrink away ;
And fast they follow, as we go
Toward the setting day—
Till they shall fill the land, and we Are driven into the western sea.

But I behold a fearful sign,
To which the white men's eyes are blind ;
Their race may vanish hence, like mine,
And leave no trace behind,
Save ruins o'er the region spread,
And the white stones above the dead.

Before these fields were shorn and tilled,
Full to the brim our rivers flowed ;
The melody of waters filled
The fresh and boundless wood ;
And torrents dashed, and rivulets played,
And fountains spouted in the shade.

Those grateful sounds are heard no more ;
The springs are silent in the sun ;
The rivers, by the blackened shore,
With lessening current run ;
The realm our tribes are crushed to get,
May be a barren desert yet !

From 'Thanatopsis.'

Yet not to thy eternal resting-place
Shalt thou retire alone, nor couldst thou wish
Couch more magnificent. Thou shalt lie down
With patriarchs of the infant world—with kings,
The powerful of the earth, the wise, the good,
Fair forms, and hoary seers of ages past,
All in one mighty sepulchre. The hills
Rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun—the vales
Stretching in pensive quietness between ;
The venerable woods, rivers that move
In majesty, and the complaining brooks
That make the meadows green ; and, poured round all,
Old Ocean's gray and melancholy waste—
Are but the solemn decorations all
Of the great tomb of man. The golden sun,
The planets, all the infinite host of heaven,
Are shining on the sad abodes of death,
Through the still lapse of ages. All that tread
The globe are but a handful to the tribes
That slumber in its bosom. Take the wings
Of morning, pierce the Barcan wilderness,
Or lose thyself in the continuous woods
Where rolls the Oregon, and hears no sound
Save his own dashings—yet the dead are there ;
And millions in those solitudes, since first
The flight of years began, have laid them down
In their last sleep—the dead reign there alone.
So shalt thou rest ; and what if thou withdraw
In silence from the living, and no friend
Take note of thy departure ! All that breathe
Will share thy destiny. The gay will laugh
When thou art gone, the solemn brood of care
Plod on, and each one as before will chase
His favourite phantom ; yet all these shall leave
Their mirth and their employments, and shall come
And make their bed with thee. As the long train
Of ages glide away, the sons of men—
The youth in life's green spring, and he who goes
In the full strength of years, matron, and maid,
And the sweet babe, and the gray-headed man—
Shall one by one be gathered to thy side,
By those who in their turn shall follow them.

So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon ; but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

From 'The Death of the Flowers.'

The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds, and naked woods, and meadows
brown and sere.
Heaped in the hollows of the grove, the autumn leaves lie dead ;
They rustle to the eddying gust, and to the rabbit's tread ;

The robin and the wren are flown, and from the shrubs
the jay,
And from the wood-top calls the crow through all the gloomy day.

Where are the flowers, the fair young flowers, that lately sprang and stood
In brighter light and softer airs, a beauteous sisterhood?
Alas! they all are in their graves, the gentle race of flowers

Are lying in their lowly beds, with the fair and good of ours.

The rain is falling where they lie, but the cold November rain

Calls not from out the gloomy earth the lovely ones again.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

From an Engraving in the British Museum.

From 'The Battlefield.'

Once this soft turf, this rivulet's sands,
Were trampled by a hurrying crowd,
And fiery hearts and armed hands
Encountered in the battle-cloud.

Ah! never shall the land forget
How gushed the life-blood of her brave—
Gushed, warm with hope and courage yet,
Upon the soil they fought to save.

Now all is calm, and fresh, and still;
Alone the chirp of flitting bird,
And talk of children on the hill,
And bell of wandering kine, are heard.

No solemn host goes trailing by
The black-mouthed gun and staggering wain;
Men start not at the battle-cry,
Oh, be it never heard again!

Soon rested those who fought; but thou
Who minglest in the harder strife
For truths which men receive not now,
Thy warfare only ends with life. . . .

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again:
Th' eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies among his worshippers.

Yea, though thou lie upon the dust,
When they who helped thee flee in fear,
Die full of hope and manly trust,
Like those who fell in battle here.

Another hand thy sword shall wield,
Another hand the standard wave,
Till from the trumpet's mouth is pealed
The blast of triumph o'er thy grave.

His son-in-law, Parke Godwin, published Bryant's Life and Works in six volumes in 1883-84; the short Life in the 'American Men of Letters Series' (1890) is by John Bigelow; and see also Wilson's Bryant and his Friends (1883), Stedman's Poets of America, and Bryant, by Wm. A. Bradley ('Men of Letters' series, 1905).

George Bancroft (1800-91), born in Worcester, Massachusetts, graduated at Harvard with high honours in 1817, and studied for two years at Göttingen in Germany. He lived for a time in Berlin, visited Weimar, and went home tinctured with the new spirit of the world he had moved in—for he had seen and read, talked to or corresponded, with Goethe and Humboldt, Hegel and Schleiermacher, Heeren and Niebuhr. For a year he was Greek tutor in Harvard; and in 1823 he and a fellow-tutor established the Round Hill School at Northampton, Massachusetts, with which he was associated until 1830. During these years he published a volume of poems, and made translations from the German of the minor poems of Goethe, Schiller, and others, and of some of the historico-political works of Heeren. In 1834 appeared the first volume of his History of the United States from the Discovery of the Continent, followed by the second and third volumes in 1837 and 1840. Between 1852 and 1860 came the five volumes narrating the history of the colonial period to the Declaration of Independence, and in 1866 and 1874 respectively the two concluding volumes, bringing the history to the treaty of peace with the mother-country in 1782. The History of the Formation of the Constitution of the United States (2 vols. 1882) afterwards formed a constituent part of the revised edition of the complete History of the United States (6 vols. 1882-84).

Bancroft in early life was a Democrat. He served as collector of the port of Boston (1838-41), under President Van Buren, and was an unsuccessful candidate for the governorship of Massachusetts in 1844. He accepted a seat in the Cabinet of President Polk as Secretary of the Navy in 1845, and the following year was appointed minister to the court of St James, a position he filled with credit until 1849. Oxford made him D.C.L., and he was J.U.D. of Bonn. In the Civil War he was heartily in accord with the national Government, and in 1867 he was appointed by President Johnson minister to Berlin, serving with distinguished ability until recalled in 1874 at his own request. In his later years he lived at Washington, contributing occasional articles to magazines. His history, it has been said, is not a history of the United States—it ends just where the history of the States as a nation begins; and it was calculated that to complete the history on the same scale would require seventy or eighty volumes. Besides his opus magnum, he had written on the progress of the human race, addresses on Jackson and Lincoln, and a book on Van Buren. The solidity of his work as historian, his acumen, insight, and common-sense, are more remarkable than his method of presentation—his style is laboured and often heavy, his rhetoric crude and tedious, and his generalisations somewhat too ‘philosophical’ and too discursive. But he faithfully followed a high ideal of the historian’s responsibility, and in his day of popularity—now past—did much to cherish in America an ennobling conception of the national destiny.

Boston in 1770.

The king set himself, and his ministry, and parliament, and all Great Britain, to subdue to his will one stubborn little town on the sterile coast of the Massachusetts Bay. The odds against it were fearful; but it showed a life inextinguishable, and had been chosen to keep guard over the liberties of mankind.

The Old World had not its parallel. It counted about sixteen thousand inhabitants of European origin, all of whom learned to read and write. Good public schools were the foundation of its political system; and Benjamin Franklin, one of their grateful pupils, in his youth apprenticed to the art which makes knowledge the common property of mankind, had gone forth from them to stand before the nations as the representative of the modern plebeian class.

As its schools were for all its children, so the great body of its male inhabitants of twenty-one years of age, when assembled in a hall which Faneuil, of Huguenot ancestry, had built for them, was the source of all municipal authority. In the meeting of the town, its taxes were voted, its affairs discussed and settled; its agents and public servants annually elected by ballot; and abstract political principles freely debated. A small property qualification was attached to the right of suffrage, but did not exclude enough to change the character of the institution. There had never existed a considerable municipality approaching so nearly to a pure democracy; and, for so populous a place, it was undoubtedly the most orderly and best governed in the world.

Its ecclesiastical polity was in like manner republican. The great mass were Congregationalists; each church was an assembly formed by voluntary agreement, self-constituted, self-supported, and independent. They were clear that no person or church had power over another church. There was not a Roman Catholic altar in the place; the usages of ‘papists’ were looked upon as worn-out superstitions, fit only for the ignorant. But the people were not merely the fiercest enemies of ‘popery and slavery;’ they were Protestants even against Protestantism; and though the English Church was tolerated, Boston kept up its exasperation against prelacy. Its ministers were still its prophets and its guides; its pulpit, in which, now that Mayhew was no more, Cooper was admired above all others for eloquence and patriotism, by weekly appeals inflamed alike the fervour of piety and of liberty. In the Boston Gazette, it enjoyed a free press, which gave currency to its conclusions on the natural right of man to self-government.

Its citizens were inquisitive, seeking to know the causes of things, and to search for the reason of existing institutions in the laws of nature. Yet they controlled their speculative turn by practical judgment, exhibiting the seeming contradiction of susceptibility to enthusiasm and calculating shrewdness. They were fond of gain, and adventurous, penetrating, and keen in their pursuit of it; yet their avidity was tempered by a well-considered and continuing liberality. Nearly every man was struggling to make his own way in the world and his own fortune; and yet individually, and as a body, they were public-spirited.

GEORGE BANCROFT.

From the Sketch from Life by C. J. Becker.

(From History of the United States.)

There are books on Bancroft and his historical work by Rives (1867), Green, Wallis, West, and De Wolfe Howe (1908). Professor Trent in his American Literature (1903) is perhaps somewhat too severe on his defects as a historical writer.

Amos Bronson Alcott (1799–1888) was the son of a farmer at Wolcott in Connecticut, and began life for himself as a pedlar in the southern states. In 1828 he established a school in Boston on highly reformed methods, which, laudable and psychologically sound as many of them were, provoked so much opposition that ere long the school had to be dropped; and the transcendental (and somewhat nebulous) philosopher sought to propagate his original views on education, theology, social economics, and vegetarianism by lectures, for which his attractive personality secured attention if not much pecuniary success. A scheme to establish a community on an estate bought by a friend of his near Boston failed utterly, and he spent his later years largely as a peripatetic philosopher. He contributed to the Transcendental Dial, and published Tablets (from his diary), Concord Days, a collection of sonnets and canzonets, and an essay on Emerson.

His daughter, Louisa May Alcott (1832–88), born at Germantown in Pennsylvania, became a teacher somewhat on her father's lines, but wrote for the magazines, and published in 1855 Flower Fables. During the Civil War she served as nurse, and sent to a newspaper what were afterwards made into a book as Hospital Sketches. But it was her Little Women (1868–69), for children, that made her famous; and this, her chef d'œuvre, she never equalled either in her Old-fashioned Girl, Little Men, and Jo's Boys (all 'juveniles'), or in her novels, Moods (1863) and Work (1873). Yet in all her writings (nearly thirty publications) there is an attractive strain of optimistic hope and faith in human nature and democratic freedom.

See the father's Life and Philosophy, by Sanborn and Harris (1893), and Lowell's Fable for Critics; and Louisa's Life, Letters, and Journals, by Cheney (1889).

Lydia Huntley Sigourney (1791–1865), the daughter of Ezekiel Huntley, a soldier of the revolutionary war, was born at Norwich in Connecticut, was well educated there and at Hartford, and, under her maiden name of Lydia Huntley, for five years taught a class of ladies in Hartford. In 1815 she published a volume of eminently Moral Pieces in Prose and Verse; and in 1819 she married Charles Sigourney, a Hartford merchant. Her descriptive poem in blank verse on the Traits of the Aborigines of America (1822), and her Sketch of Connecticut Forty Years Since (1824), were followed by Pocahontas and other Poems, Lays of the Heart, Tales in Prose and Verse, and Letters to Young Ladies and to Mothers. In 1840 she visited Europe, and on her return wrote her Pleasant Memories of Pleasant Lands. A pure-minded and lovable woman, an appallingly copious and oppressively sentimental writer of verse, she was a constant contributor of ballads, descriptive poems, epithalamiums, elegies, and occasional verses to magazines and periodicals. But her English prototype is hardly flattered when Mrs Sigourney is called 'the American Hemans.' See her autobiographical Letters of Life (New York, 1866), and her Life by Haight (1930).

Lydia Maria Child (1802–80), born (Lydia Maria Francis) in Medford, Massachusetts, published her first novel, Hobomok, by 'An American,' in 1824, and her second, The Rebels, a story of Boston before the Revolution, in 1825. In 1828 she married David Lee Child (1794–1874), a journalist, with whom she edited the Anti-Slavery Standard in New York in 1843–44. Her works, nearly thirty in number, include novels, the best of them relating to early New England history, stories for children, a biography or two, and an ambitious but rather inaccurate work on the history of religion (1855). Philothea (1836), sometimes described as her masterpiece, is an ambitious tale of the days of Pericles. Her popularity died before her. See her Letters (1882) and Higginson's Contemporaries (1899).

Sarah Margaret Fuller (1810–50), for the last three years of her life the Marchesa Ossoli, was the daughter of a Massachusetts lawyer and politician living at Cambridgeport, and by her father and other preceptors was injudiciously encouraged so to labour in all the branches of a liberal education that before she was well in her teens her health was permanently injured by the continued strain. After her father's death in 1835 she supported her seven brothers and sisters (she was the eldest child) both by private teaching and by school work in Boston and Providence. Ere this she was familiar with what was best not merely in English but in French, Spanish, and Italian literature, and under the influence of Körner and Novalis, Goethe and Schiller, was one of the pioneers of New England Transcendentalism—that vigorous reaction as well against time-honoured Puritan prejudices and humdrum orthodoxy as against eighteenth-century philistinism and materialistic utilitarianism. Sarah Fuller shared to the full in the vague idealism, pantheism, mysticism, of the new movement, whose most conspicuous representatives were George Ripley and Theodore Parker, as also in its pedantic, paradoxical, and extravagant elements. But though she was a frequent and welcome guest at Brook Farm, she did not cherish its communistic enthusiasms. Emerson, Hawthorne, and Channing were her most intimate friends; and it was she who conducted the Transcendental organ The Dial (1840–42). She translated Eckermann's Conversations with Goethe and other notable German books; and she conducted a novel kind of conversation classes for ladies, comprising discussions of social and philosophical problems, in which some have sought the origin of the New England woman's rights movement. She was not prepossessing in face, figure, or manner, was somewhat obviously self-conscious, though perfectly lady-like, but was gifted with a quiet exceptional power of conciliating sympathy, and in her talk and writing was rather clever and eccentric than really original or profound. In 1844 she published her first volume, Summer on the Lakes, a record of a season's travel. In the same year she went to New York as literary critic of the Tribune, and to that paper contributed a series of miscellaneous articles, republished as Papers on Literature and Art (1846). Having gone to Europe in 1846, at Rome she met the Marquis Giovanni Angelo Ossoli, a friend of Mazzini's, to whom she was married at the end of 1847. In 1849, during the siege of Rome, she, at Mazzini's request, took charge of a hospital, while her husband fought on the walls; and after the capture of the city by the French she and her husband took refuge in the mountains of the Abruzzi, and then in Florence, till in May 1850 they could sail with their infant for America. From the beginning the voyage was tragically disastrous. The captain of the ship died of smallpox; and the Ossolis' child fell ill of the same disease. Finally, when the miserable voyage was all but over, on the 16th of July the vessel was wrecked on Fire Island near New York; the child's body was washed ashore, but nothing was ever seen of mother or father. Her Autobiography, with additional memoirs by Emerson, Clarke, and Channing, appeared in 1852 (new ed. 1884); there are also Lives by her brother A. B. Fuller (1855), by Julia Ward Howe (1883), who also edited her love-letters in 1903, by T. W. Higginson (1884), and Katharine Anthony (1922).

Ralph Waldo Emerson,

the most original and influential writer that America has yet produced, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, on the 25th of May 1803. The centennial commemorations which in 1903 were celebrated throughout the United States, and in Great Britain as well, testify to the depth and extent of the influence which has been exerted by this free-thinking idealist and seer. Contemporary with Carlyle, who accepted very much as a matter of course the homage which the distant New Englander paid to his genius, Emerson was from the first not less independent and self-centred than the iconoclastic Scotsman whom, expecting to find a master, he visited at Craigenputtock in 1833, and with whom, from that time, he maintained an affectionate, lifelong friendship. This friendship was never disturbed either by opposition of views or by contrariety of character; for beneath their diversities, great as they were; each undoubtedly recognised in the other a fundamental love of truth, justice, and righteousness.

Emerson came of a family distinguished by a long succession of clergymen and college graduates. His father, the Rev. William Emerson, graduated at Harvard College in 1789, and at the time of Ralph Waldo's birth he was minister of the First Church in Boston. He died in 1811, leaving a widow and six children, all under ten years of age, with but scanty means of support. But Mrs Emerson was courageous and capable, and she eked out her resources by taking boarders, her sons helping her with the house-work. It was the mother's ambition to have her boys educated, and her fond hope to see at least some of them ministers. They were accordingly sent regularly to school, and at home, in the spare time which remained after doing the household chores, they were encouraged to read standard works of poetry, history, and oratory. In this educational work and stimulus the mother was greatly aided by her sister-in-law, Miss Mary Emerson, for whom Ralph Waldo entertained the greatest affection and veneration. 'She must always occupy a saint's place,' he wrote long afterwards, 'in my household; and I have no hour of poetry or philosophy since I knew these things, into which she does not enter as a genius.' This early life of poverty, tempered with the delights of Plato and Plutarch, Shakespeare and Milton, Addison and Pope, Rollin and Robertson, left an ineffaceable impress upon Ralph Waldo Emerson, and some of the descriptive passages of his essay on 'Domestic Life' are a reminiscence and biography of those days, though the form is strictly impersonal and objective.

The boy was at a private school before he was three years of age, and at eleven he entered the Latin School. He was soon turning Virgil into readable English verse; he liked Greek and history, and he developed a considerable facility for rhyming. In 1817 he entered Harvard College, which, considering both the age of the students and the subjects of the curriculum, was then little more than a boys' school. Emerson did not in any way distinguish himself in college, and in mathematics he utterly failed; but to the more serious members of his class he was known as a studious reader and lover of the best literature.

After graduation he taught school for a few years; but that profession was exceedingly irksome to him, and nothing but the compensation it afforded would have kept him at the work. Already, too, he had looked forward to the ministry as the natural field for his life-work, though now with less enthusiasm than when in boyish days he dreamt of drawing men to religion by the spell of his oratory. Yet speculative difficulties (which, indeed, he always quietly shelved) did not bar his way to the pulpit, as happened with his elder brother, William, who turned to law. In 1823 Emerson began studying for the ministry, attending some lectures at the Divinity School at Cambridge, but on account of poor health not enrolling in the regular course. In 1826 he was 'approved to preach' by the Middlesex Association of Ministers; and, after a winter in the South in search of health, he was in March 1829 ordained as colleague of the Rev. Henry Ware, minister of the Second Church in Boston. On the resignation of Mr Ware shortly afterwards, Emerson became sole pastor of this important church. But he was not destined to remain a clergyman. In the summer of 1832 he resigned his pastorate and, as it turned out, terminated his career as a settled minister, though he continued to exercise the function of preaching as late as 1847.

The immediate occasion of this action was the maturing in Emerson's mind of a conviction that the Lord's Supper was never intended to be a perpetual rite, and that its sacramental observance was prejudicial to religion by emphasising forms instead of spirit, and by transferring the worship of God to Christ. Otherwise he had no hostility to the institution. He simply lacked sympathy with it, as indeed he did with public prayers. But his Unitarian brethren had not yet travelled so far from traditional orthodoxy, and with friendly feelings on both sides they parted. In the sermon he preached to them on the Lord's Supper—the only sermon to be found in his published works—Emerson had declared that 'the day of formal religion is past.' This was, indeed, a wider departure from current Unitarianism than a mere difference of opinion on the nature and perpetuity of the Lord's Supper. It meant that the source of authority in religion was within, and not without, and that forms were matters of absolute indifference. And to be an official minister of such an inward religion seemed almost a desecration of it. Thus Emerson wrote in his journal, under date of 10th January 1832: 'It is the best part of the man, I sometimes think, that revolts most against his being a minister. His good revolts from official goodness.'

His fair worldly prospects gone, Emerson was struggling under a heavy burden of affliction. His wife—'a bright revelation to me of the best nature of woman'—died of consumption in 1832 at the early age of twenty-one. His younger brother Edward, a prodigy of talent and power, whom some of their contemporaries thought the most promising of the family, had broken down, and sought restoration of health in Porto Rico, where he died in 1834. Charles, another younger brother, who had been an inmate of Waldo's house and his friend and companion for many years, was already a victim of disease, from which he died in 1836. Now Waldo's own health gave way, and, sick in body and depressed in spirits, he sought relief in a trip to Europe. He sailed from Boston on Christmas Day 1832, in a little trading-brig bound for the Mediterranean. The sea-voyage, the close quarters, the rations of pork and beans, the complete physical and moral change, proved a most effective tonic to his health and spirits.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

After the Portrait by S. W. Rowse.

A brief account of Emerson's European trip is prefixed to his English Traits. He visited Sicily, Italy, France, and Great Britain. He saw Coleridge, Wordsworth, Landor, and Carlyle—the latter, says Emerson, 'so amiable that I love him.' He observes that all these four are deficient, though in different degrees, 'in insight into religious truth.' Yet to see them had been the prime motive of his trip to Europe. If he had suffered disillusionment from personal intercourse with these great men, of whom his imagination had drawn idealised portraits, he had nevertheless been comforted and confirmed in his convictions, and he would 'judge more justly, less timidly, of wise men forevermore.' And to the friendship then formed with Carlyle we owe the correspondence—since given to the world by Mr Norton—which began with Emerson's first letter in 1834, and closed with Carlyle's last letter in 1872.

On his return from Europe, Emerson began to appear before the public as a lecturer. 'My pulpit is the Lyceum platform,' he once said. And for the rest of his days he was known as a peripatetic lecturer, with Boston as headquarters. He settled near by in 1834, in the quiet village of Concord, the home of his forefathers. The subjects of his lectures took a wide range—biography, literature, history, art, morals, philosophy, politics, were only some of them. But in the choice of subjects Emerson betrayed his affinities. Thus, of the lectures given in 1834, two were afterwards published: one on Michael Angelo, the immortal prophet of beauty in nature—beauty which is one with truth and virtue; and the other on Milton, who stood foremost 'of all men in the power to inspire,' and who 'better than any other has discharged the office of every great man—namely, to raise the idea of man.' Both presentations embodied Emerson's own loftiest aspirations.

But the first clear proof of Emerson's genius was afforded by the publication in 1836 of his little book entitled Nature, which may also be regarded as the apocalypse of New England Transcendentalism. It had, however, almost as hard a fate as Hume's Treatise, for it took twelve years to sell five hundred copies. But nothing quite so mystical and incomprehensible had ever been presented to American readers, and why should it fare better than Carlyle's Sartor Resartus in England? It is an attempt to see God, and nature, and man face to face, and not merely through the eyes of tradition and history. Its themes are nature's ministry to and discipline of man, the world as a divine appearance to a human mind, spirit as the all-inclusive reality, of which man thinking is also participant, and intuition as the receptiveness of the human mind to communications from the Divine. If the book was caviare to the general, it gave 'true satisfaction' to Carlyle, who in a letter to Emerson described it as 'the foundation and ground plan on which you may build whatsoever of great and true has been given you to build.'

In a more exoteric form Emerson's leading ideas found expression in his noble discourse on 'The American Scholar,' delivered at Cambridge on 31st August 1837. The first part deals with the education of the scholar by nature, by books, and by action; the last with the scholar's duties, which 'may all be comprised in self-trust.' It is another Fichte on American soil, absolutely original and independent, glorifying the vocation of the scholar as 'the world's eye' and 'the world's heart.' With thought as profound as Aristotle's and as solid as Darwin's, the orator flashes out his central idea: 'The main enterprise of the world for splendour, for extent, is the upbuilding of a man.'

Another address, delivered in the following year at the Divinity College, Cambridge, set forth Emerson's religious philosophy. As Dr Holmes truly says, it 'was a plea for the individual consciousness as against all historical creeds, bibles, churches, for the soul as the supreme judge in spiritual matters.' It made a great sensation, occasioning much discussion and controversy, in which, however, Emerson took no part. And it was, indeed, thoroughly revolutionary, even in the high places of Unitarianism. Thus, after declaring that Jesus Christ 'alone in all history estimated the greatness of man' and was 'true to what is in you and me,' Emerson goes on to say that 'churches are not built on his principles, but on his tropes,' and that they dwell 'with noxious exaggeration about the person of Jesus.' The great reform needed is that men shall become acquainted at first hand, each for himself, with Deity. Faith, indeed, is an intuition, and cannot be received at second hand. The prophets and divine bards are a provocation and stimulus. 'And thus, by his holy thoughts, Jesus serves us, and thus only.'

Emerson was now thirty-five years of age. He had won recognition as a man of letters and as a profound philosophical thinker, with deep moral and religious interests. In lecturing he had found the means of an assured livelihood, in addition to some property left him by his wife. He had bought for thirty-five hundred dollars a house at Concord, which the seller alleged had cost him seventy-eight hundred. To this house in 1835 he had brought his second wife, Miss Lydia Jackson, of Plymouth. And here he passed the rest of his life—a life devoted to meditation, reading, writing, lecturing, conversation with friends and visitors, and occasional public speaking.

It was a life singularly uneventful, of which the best record is the titles of his successive works. But it was a beautiful, peaceful, and happy existence. Children were born, to whose training Emerson gave much attention, and the death of the eldest in 1842 was a heavy sorrow to him. In 1847 Emerson sailed for Europe on his second visit. He spent a week with Carlyle at Chelsea, and then began a series of lectures in England and Scotland, some of which were afterwards published under the title of Repre- sentative Men. The volume on English Traits, published in 1856, is a reminiscence of the same visit. In 1857 The Atlantic Monthly was established under the editorship of James Russell Lowell; and Emerson, like many other old contributors to The Dial (which from 1840 to 1844 had been the organ of the Transcendental movement), wrote for the new magazine, his contributions including some of his best-known poems. About the same time the 'Saturday Club' was founded in Boston, and to it Emerson went regularly till 1875, meeting for talk at informal dinners such distinguished contemporaries as Longfellow, Hawthorne, Motley, Lowell, Governor Andrew, and others of scarcely less renown. In 1866 Harvard conferred upon her illustrious son the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. In 1874 Emerson was nominated for the office of Lord Rector of Glasgow University, and he received five hundred votes against seven hundred for Disraeli, who was elected. 'I count that vote,' he wrote to Dr Hutchison Stirling, 'as quite the fairest laurel that has ever fallen on me.'

Such things, with a visit to California in 1871 and a third visit to the Old World in 1872, are the most noticeable external events in the later life of this meditative and home-loving thinker and teacher. But the inward life he lived is reflected in his writings and addresses. The variety of the contents of the dozen volumes that make up his collected works is very inadequately indicated by the general titles. These are: (1) Nature, Addresses, Lectures; (2, 3) Essays; (4) Representative Men; (5) English Traits; (6) Conduct of Life; (7) Letters and Social Aims; (8) Society and Solitude; (9) Poems; (10) Lectures, Biographical Sketches; (11) Miscellaneous; (12) Natural History of Intellect.

Emerson's working life, according to Dr Holmes, did not extend much beyond the year 1867. There was a long but not unhappy twilight, and on the 27th of April 1882 he passed quietly away. The form of Emerson's writings was determined by his vocation. As Shakespeare the actor wrote dramas, Emerson the lecturer wrote discourses and essays. There is, indeed, a volume of poems; but though short passages of his poetry seem destined to immortality, and such poems as 'Each and All,' 'The Humble-Bee,' 'The Snow-Storm,' 'Wood-Notes,' 'The World-Soul,' and 'The Problem' will long have appreciative readers, Emerson, with all his poetical feeling, insight, imagination, and soaring thought, did not, any more than Carlyle, find in poetry a natural medium of expression. His fame rests on those essays and discourses, covering a wide variety of subject and originating mostly in the lectures out of which he made his living, that constitute the other eleven volumes of his collected works. Emerson's style is as unique as the man: clear, concise, beautiful, not infrequently poetic, abounding in quotation and allusion, and often disconnected like a string of pearls. The language, however apt and striking, is only a medium of expression, and it is the thought that arrests the reader's attention. Emerson's greatest gift as a writer is the power of inspiration and stimulus. The independence and inviolability of every human soul is for him a cardinal doctrine, from which it follows that even the best teachers can only incite and provoke it to self-development; and his writings possess in an extraordinary degree this stimulative potency. It would be difficult to find a better intellectual or moral tonic. And as they embrace such a variety of range, every reader is likely to find something to meet his peculiar needs. 'Hitch your wagon to a star' was one of his inspired precepts; and his writings tend to lift the soul from earth to heaven.

It is best to think of Emerson as an inspired and inspiring seer. He was not an inductive investigator or a deductive reasoner. His special gift was insight. As early as 1838 he formulated his life's function: 'Seeing whatever I can, and telling what I see.' He never wove the results into a connected system. He never sought to be consistent; indeed, he denounced consistency as the bane of little minds. He believed that God spoke through the mind of every man, and that it was incumbent on each to report what he saw to-day, without regard to what he had reported at any other time. The world begins afresh with each generation and each individual; the present is not the prisoner of the past. And so Emerson looked straight into the deepest things—into the mind of man, nature, and God—and proclaimed what he saw as the everlasting, yet ever new and fresh, gospel of truth. In the best sense, therefore, he is a seer and prophet—inspiring because inspired by the spirit of truth. Emerson had no 'system.' He was, of course, an idealist; but he made no original contributions to philosophy. For him as for others the world of nature is merely a symbol of the Universal Spirit. God is all and all. Nor does Emerson shrink at the conclusion that human personality is a passing phase of the Infinite. This pantheistic view, however, is not consistently presented; and, of course, it does not altogether square with his doctrine of the greatness of man, or harmonise with his strenuous insistence on the ethics of self-realisation. But this is a conflict between the demands of the Speculative and the Practical Reason which, as Kant pointed out, is unavoidable. It may be said that Emerson overcame the speculative difficulty by his life. For this free-thinking American was one of the purest and saintliest of men.

From 'Nature.'

A noble doubt perpetually suggests itself—whether this end be not the Final Cause of the Universe; and whether nature outwardly exists. It is a sufficient account of that Appearance we call the World, that God will teach a human mind, and so makes it the receiver of a certain number of congruent sensations, which we call sun and moon, man and woman, house and trade. In my utter impotence to test the authenticity of the report of my senses, to know whether the impressions they make on me correspond with outlying objects, what difference does it make whether Orion is up there in heaven, or some god paints the image in the firmament of the soul? The relations of parts and the end of the whole remaining the same, what is the difference whether land and sea interact, and worlds revolve and intermingle without number or end,—deep yawning under deep, and galaxy balancing galaxy, throughout absolute space,—or whether, without relations of time and space, the same appearances are inscribed in the constant faith of man? Whether nature enjoy a substantial existence without, or is only in the apocalypse of the mind, it is alike useful and alike venerable to me. Be it what it may, it is ideal to me so long as I cannot try the accuracy of my senses.

From 'The American Scholar.'

The scholar is that man who must take up into himself all the ability of the time, all the contributions of the past, all the hopes of the future. He must be an university of knowledges. If there be one lesson more than another which should pierce his ear, it is, The world is nothing, the man is all; in yourself is the law of all nature, and you know not yet how a globule of sap ascends; in yourself slumbers the whole of Reason; it is for you to know all; it is for you to dare all. Mr President and Gentlemen, this confidence in the unsearched might of man belongs, by all motives, by all prophecy, by all preparation, to the American Scholar. We have listened too long to the courtly muses of Europe. The spirit of the American freeman is already suspected to be timid, imitative, tame. Public and private avarice make the air we breathe thick and fat. The scholar is decent, indolent, complaisant. See already the tragic consequence. The mind of this country, taught to aim at low objects, eats upon itself.

From 'Self-Reliance.'

I read the other day some verses written by an eminent painter which were original and not conventional. The soul always hears an admonition in such lines, let the subject be what it may. The sentiment they instil is of more value than any thought they may contain. To believe your own thought, to believe that what is true for you in your private heart is true for all men,—that is genius. Speak your latent conviction, and it shall be the universal sense; for the inmost in due time becomes the outmost, and our first thought is rendered back to us by the trumpets of the Last Judgment. Familiar as the voice of the mind is to each, the highest merit we ascribe to Moses, Plato, and Milton is that they set at naught books and traditions, and spoke not what men, but what they thought. A man should learn to detect and watch that gleam of light which flashes across his mind from within, more than the lustre of the firmament of bards and sages. Yet he dismisses without notice his thought, because it is his. In every work of genius we recognise our own rejected thoughts; they come back to us with a certain alienated majesty. Great works of art have no more affecting lesson for us than this. They teach us to abide by our spontaneous impression with good-humored inflexibility then most when the whole cry of voices is on the other side, Else to-morrow a stranger will say with masterly good sense precisely what we have thought and felt all the time, and we shall be forced to take with shame our own opinion from another.

From 'The Over-Soul.'

Ineffable is the union of man and God in every act of the soul. The simplest person who in his integrity worships God, becomes God; yet for ever and ever the influx of this better and universal self is new and unsearchable. It inspires awe and astonishment. How dear, how soothing to man, arises the idea of God, peopling the lonely place, effacing the scars of our mistakes and disappointments! When we have broken our god of tradition and ceased from our god of rhetoric, then may God fire the heart with his presence. It is the doubling of the heart itself—nay, the infinite enlargement of the heart with a power of growth to a new infinity on every side. It inspires in man an infallible trust. He has not the conviction, but the sight, that the best is the true, and may in that thought easily dismiss all particular uncertainties and fears, and adjourn to the sure revelation of time the solution of his private riddles. He is sure that his welfare is dear to the heart of being. In the presence of law to his mind he is overflowed with a reliance so universal that it sweeps away all cherished hopes and the most stable projects of mortal condition in its flood.

From 'Politics.'

Hence the less government we have the better,—the fewer laws, and the less confided power. The antidote to this abuse of formal Government is, the influence of private character, the growth of the Individual; the appearance of the principal to supersede the proxy; the appearance of the wise man; of whom the existing government is, it must be owned, but a shabby imitation. That which all things tend to educe; which freedom, cultivation, intercourse, revolutions, go to form and deliver, is character; that is the end of Nature, to reach unto this coronation of her king. To educate the wise man the State exists, and with the appearance of the wise man the State expires. The appearance of character makes the State unnecessary. The wise man is the State. He needs no army, fort, or navy,—he loves men too well; no bribe, or feast, or palace, to draw friends to him; no vantage-ground, no favourable circumstance. He needs no library, for he has not done thinking; no church, for he is a prophet; no statute book, for he has the lawgiver; no money, for he is value; no road, for he is at home where he is; no experience, for the life of the creator shoots through him, and looks from his eyes. He has no personal friends, for he who has the spell to draw the prayer and piety of all men unto him needs not husband and educate a few to share with him a select and poetic life. His relation to men is angelic; his memory is myrrh to them; his presence, frankincense and flowers.

From 'English Traits.'

The Anglican Church is marked by the grace and good sense of its forms, by the manly grace of its clergy. The gospel it preaches is 'By taste are ye saved.' It keeps the old structures in repair, spends a world of money in music and building, and in buying Pugin and architectural literature. It has a general good name for amenity and mildness. It is not in ordinary a persecuting Church; it is not inquisitorial, not even inquisitive; is perfectly well-bred, and can shut its eyes on all proper occasions. If you let it alone, it will let you alone. But its instinct is hostile to all change in politics, literature, or social arts. The Church has not been the founder of the London University, of the Mechanics' Institutes, of the Free School, of whatever aims at diffusion of knowledge. The Platonists of Oxford are as bitter against this heresy as Thomas Taylor.

Plato.

Plato apprehended the cardinal facts. He could prostrate himself on the earth, and cover his eyes, whilst he adored that which cannot be numbered, or gauged, or known, or named: that of which everything can be affirmed and denied: that 'which is entity and nonentity.' He called it super-essential. He even stood ready, as in the Parmenides, to demonstrate that it was so—that this being exceeded the limits of intellect. No man ever more fully acknowledged the Ineffable. Having paid his homage, as for the human race, to the Illimitable, he then stood erect, and for the human race affirmed, 'And yet things are knowable!'—that is, the Asia in his mind was first heartily honoured—the ocean of love and power, before form, before will, before knowledge, the Same, the Good, the One; and now, refreshed and empowered by this worship, the instinct of Europe, namely, culture, returns; and he cries, Yet things are knowable! They are knowable because, being from one, things correspond.

(From Representative Men.)

Napoleon.

I call Napoleon the agent or attorney of the middle class of modern society; of the throng who fill the markets, shops, counting-houses, manufactories, ships, of the modern world, aiming to be rich. He was the agitator, the destroyer of prescription, the internal improver, the liberal, the radical, the inventor of means, the opener of doors and markets, the subverter of monopoly and abuse. Of course the rich and aristocratic did not like him. England, the centre of capital, and Rome and Austria, centres of tradition and genealogy, opposed him. The consternation of the dull and conservative classes, the terror of the foolish old men and old women of the Roman conclave—who in their despair took hold of anything, and would cling to red-hot iron—the vain attempts of statisticians to amuse and deceive him, of the Emperor of Austria to bribe him; and the instinct of the young, ardent, and active men, everywhere, which pointed him out as the giant of the middle class, make his history bright and commanding. He had the virtues of the masses of his constituents: he had also their vices. I am sorry that the brilliant picture has its reverse. But that is the fatal quality which we discover in our pursuit of wealth, that it is treacherous, and is bought by the breaking or weakening of the sentiments, and it is inevitable that we should find the same fact in the history of this champion, who proposed to himself simply a brilliant career, without any stipulation or scruple concerning the means.

(From Representative Men.)

From 'Abraham Lincoln.'

His occupying the chair of State was a triumph of the good sense of mankind, and of the public conscience. This middle-class country had got a middle-class President, at last. Yes, in manners and sympathies, but not in powers, for his powers were superior. This man grew according to the need. His mind mastered the problem of the day ; and as the problem grew, so did his comprehension of it. Rarely was man so fitted to the event. In the midst of fears and jealousies, in the babel of counsels and parties, this man wrought incessantly with all his might and all his honesty, labouring to find what the people wanted, and how to obtain that. It cannot be said there is any exaggeration of his worth. If ever a man was fairly tested, he was. There was no lack of resistance, nor of slander, nor of ridicule. The times have allowed no State secrets ; the nation has been in such ferment, such multitudes had to be trusted, that no secret could be kept. Every door was ajar, and we know all that befell.

Then, what an occasion was the whirlwind of the war ! Here was place for no holiday magistrate, no fair-weather sailor ; the new pilot was hurried to the helm in a tornado. In four years—four years of battle-days—his endurance, his fertility of resources, his magnanimity, were sorely tried and never found wanting. There, by his courage, his justice, his even temper, his fertile counsel, his humanity, he stood a heroic figure in the centre of a heroic epoch. He is the true history of the American people in his time. Step by step he walked before them ; slow with their slowness, quickening his march by theirs, the true representative of this continent ; an entirely public man ; father of his country, the pulse of twenty millions throbbing in his heart, the thought of their minds articulated by his tongue.

The Rhodora : on being asked, Whence is the flower ?

In May, when sea-winds pierced our solitudes,
I found the fresh Rhodora in the woods,
Spreading its leafless blooms in a damp nook,
To please the desert and the sluggish brook.
The purple petals, fallen in the pool,
Made the black water with their beauty gay ;
Here might the red-bird come his plumes to cool,
And court the flower that cheapens his array.
Rhodora ! if the sages ask thee why
This charm is wasted on the earth and sky,
Tell them, dear, that if eyes were made for seeing,
Then Beauty is its own excuse for being :
Why thou wert there, O rival of the rose !
I never thought to ask, I never knew :
But, in my simple ignorance, suppose
The self-same Power that brought me there brought you.

[The Rhodora Canadensis or Rhododendron Rhodora, a low deciduous shrub growing in damp woody places from Pennsylvania northward, produces its delicate rosy flowers before the leaves.]

The Centenary edition of Emerson's works is in 12 vols. (1903-4). There are monographs by G. W. Cooke (1881), O. W. Holmes (1885), J. E. Cabot (1887), Dr Garnett (1888), Eliz. Luther Cary (1904), G. E. Woodberry (1907), O. W. Firkins (1915), and Van Wyck Brooks (1934). See also his son's Emerson in Concord (1888), the Carlyle-Emerson correspondence edited by Professor Norton (1883), Matthew Arnold's Discourses in America (1885), Lord Morley's Critical Miscellanies (vol. i. 1893), and Emerson's Journals (10 vols. 1910-14). There are bibliographies by G. W. Cooke (1908) and in the Cambridge History of American Literature (vol. i. 1918).

J. G. SCHURMAN.

George Ripley (1802-80), born at Greenfield in Massachusetts, graduated at Harvard, and until 1841 was pastor in Boston. In 1836, with Emerson and Alcott, he was one of the founders of the Transcendental Club, which Theodore Parker and Margaret Fuller joined in the following year. He was perhaps more closely identified than any of the rest with the Transcendental 'movement ;' and it was he who, leaving the pulpit, started the Brook Farm experiment. This came to an end in 1847, and Ripley from 1849 engaged in literary work at New York ; to Horace Greeley's New York Tribune he contributed a long series of incisive and scholarly reviews which made their mark on contemporary American thought, and helped to raise the literary standard for such work throughout the country. He was joint-editor of Appleton's New American Cyclopædia; his own writings are practically forgotten. There is a Life of him by Frothingham (1882).

Theodore Parker (1810-60) was born at Lexington in Massachusetts, graduated at Harvard in 1836, and settled as Unitarian minister at West Roxbury, now in Boston. As a boy and as a student he had been an industrious and omnivorous reader : biblical criticism and German theological speculation specially attracted him ; he translated De Wette's 'introduction' to the Old Testament, and was not unaffected by Strauss's Leben Jesu. He gradually came to disbelieve in the infallibility of the Bible, the truth of miracles, the exclusive claim of Christianity, the perfection of the revelation in Christ. The permanent element in Christianity was absolute morality, pure religion, the love of God and the love of man ; and the fundamental articles in his creed were God, the moral law, and immortality. The rationalistic views which separated him from conservative Unitarians were expounded in A Discourse of Matters pertaining to Religion (1841), followed by Ten Sermons of Religion (1852), and Theism, Atheism, and the Popular Theology (1853). As the orthodox Unitarians cast him off, he was warmly taken up by the educated laity, the most ardent and modern spirits of the time, and was easily able to stand outside of sects. From 1844 he preached to a congregation of three thousand, besides incessantly writing on social and theological questions. He lectured also throughout the States, and took a large and influential share in the anti-slavery cause. His contributions were perhaps the weightiest published in the Transcendental Dial ; he was an industrious writer of reviews and critical articles. His strenuous labours broke his health prematurely, and he died in Florence. Parker was rather a powerful orator than an accomplished writer, and moved by the wealth of his knowledge, the strength of his conviction, and the warmth of his feeling, rather than by the logic of his system, the consistency or clearness of his views. He had no grace of expression, and was not seldom defective in good taste, but was always vigorous, and often picturesque. The collected English edition of his works was edited by Miss F. P. Cobbe (14 vols. 1863-71). There are Lives by Weiss (1864), Frothingham (1874), Dean (1877), Cooke (1889), and White Chadwick (1900) ; see also Dr Martineau's Essays (1890).

William Hickling Prescott,

born in Salem, Massachusetts, 4th May 1796, was sixth in descent from John Prescott, who came to Massachusetts from Lancashire about 1640. Successive generations of Prescotts and of Hicklings, the historian's maternal ancestors, bore effective share in public affairs during the development of the colony into the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. At William's birth his father was practising law in Salem, whence he removed to Boston in 1808; and at fifteen Prescott entered the Sophomore or second year class at Harvard University. Possessing exceptional good looks and much personal charm, with a fund of high spirits which stood him in good stead throughout his life, the lad was very popular, but showed no special proficiency in his studies, and was even decidedly backward in mathematics. In the second year of his college experience occurred the painful accident which affected his whole life. As he was leaving the dining-hall, where a group of undergraduates were amusing themselves with rather rough play, he turned suddenly at some sound, and was struck full in the open eye by a piece of hard bread, thrown at random by a careless hand. The immediate effect upon him was like concussion of the brain. He recovered quickly from the general shock, but the injured eye had lost its sight for ever. But after a few weeks he resumed his studies, and did better work with one eye than he had ever done with two.

After leaving college he entered his father's office, and was beginning legal studies when acute rheumatism in his uninjured eye cut short his legal career (1815); and by medical advice he went to the Azores, where his maternal grandfather Hickling was consul for the United States. When next year he came to London the medical experts agreed that one eye was completely paralysed. In the autumn he went south in company with a friend; and the travellers paid their respects to Lafayette, as was then the bounden duty of every American who passed through France. But travel and change were in truth beyond his physical powers, and Prescott was glad to return home in midsummer 1817.

In the following years he learned to listen closely to anything read aloud to him, and to accustom himself to write on a noctograph, a writing-frame for the blind about the size of a large slate, which held a carbonated sheet firmly over a piece of white paper. The writing, done with an ivory or agate stylus on the upper sheet, impressed the black substance upon the white, while brass wires stretched across the frame directed the hand. During these years of fluctuating health and uncertainty as to what he could make of his life, Prescott met Susan Amory, whom he married in 1820; and his singularly happy marriage contributed not a little to Prescott's success. Meanwhile he had determined that authorship was the one career open to him. He set himself to the systematic study of English style, and had been working at French and Italian when the return of his friend George Ticknor from Spain to be Professor of Spanish Literature at Harvard University interested Prescott in the language, literature, and history of the Peninsula; and that interest remained paramount throughout the rest of his life. One author read to him at this period was destined to leave a lasting impression; he found Mably's Sur l'Etude de l'Histoire 'full of admirable reflections and hints.' Though for some time he thought of writing on Italian literature, he ultimately resolved to take up the history of the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella; and his first step was to ask his friend Alexander Everett, United States minister to Spain, to procure the books he required and to set on foot necessary researches. Luckily for him, his orders for books, secretary work, and transcripts were unrestricted by any necessity for economy.

On 25th June 1836 the author, then in his fortieth year, finished the concluding note of Ferdinand and Isabella, the result of ten years' close work. Fears proved groundless; the book was a brilliant and immediate success. Only five hundred copies were printed at first, and they were all gone in five weeks. The reviews were numerous and almost uniformly favourable. One notice in the Edinburgh Review by Don Pascual de Gayangos, a learned Spaniard, and another somewhat surprised article in the Quarterly by Richard Ford, gave Prescott much satisfaction, as did a series of articles in the Bibliothèque Universelle de Genève by Count Adolphe de Circourt. One American review alone (the Massachusetts Quarterly, 1849) struck a key of disapproval; the article, anonymous, but written by Theodore Parker, asserted that Prescott's work lacked philosophy to a degree exceeding belief—'that he seemed to know nothing of the philosophy of history, and little even of political economy. Having more of the spirit of chivalry than of humanity, it is impossible that he should write in the interests of mankind, or judge men and their deeds by justice, by the immutable law of the universe.' It is true that Prescott was not a philosophic historian. He was essentially a dramatic story-teller—a story-teller, however, who scrutinised the value of the sources whence sprang his narrative. He put together a brilliant mosaic, but it was after he had selected each fragment with care and with all the knowledge to be had at the time. His story of the agglomeration of Castile, Aragon, and Granada into the kingdom of Spain retains its charm and holds the interest from beginning to end. Posterity has learned to read some portions of their history differently, but posterity has never been able to sneer at Prescott for defective or careless work, though he worked at a distance from the Peninsula, and though by force of circumstances he did not search archives in person.

Nearly two years elapsed before he was actually embarked on the new book on 'The Conquest of Mexico and the anterior civilisation of the Mexicans, a beautiful prose epic, for which rich, virgin materials teem in Simancas and Madrid, and probably Mexico.' The Spanish historian Navarrete placed at his disposal all his MS. material gathered for his Coleccion de Viages y Descubrimientos; but there came at a later date a moment when this choice was almost abandoned, Prescott having heard that Washington Irving had turned his attention to Mexico as a natural sequence to his Columbus. Happily, the great courtesy of the elder author encouraged the younger to proceed. Irving had already made a rough draft of his story of the Mexican conquest when he learned accidentally of Prescott's plan; whereupon he immediately relinquished his own project, though, as he confessed later, at a great personal sacrifice. Letters from Sismondi, Thierry, and Patrick Fraser Tytler encouraged Prescott in his new enterprise; and in addition to splendid supplies sent to him from Spain, Don Pascual de Gayangos examined the British Museum and the State Paper Office on his behalf, and had transcripts made of all matter bearing on his subject which could not be purchased.

WILLIAM HICKLING PRESCOTT.

After a Photograph.

In August 1843 the History of the Conquest of Mexico was completed, and was published in December 1843, six years after 'Ferdinand and Isabella made their bow to the public.' The second work was greeted with a chorus of applause; five thousand copies were sold in about four months. In England the first edition was speedily exhausted; and on the Continent also the book was exceedingly well received. The brilliant story of Hernando Cortes' expedition appealed to the public, and opened up a new field of research to scholars. Prescott gathered his materials from the accounts of Cortes and of his contemporaries, of Spanish historians and of Mexicans like Fernando de Alva Ixtlilxochitl, who wrote at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and out of them wove a new web. From these all but unknown and inaccessible writings a spirited narrative sprang into life, which reads like a historical romance with Hernando Cortes as hero. In one sense it is a historical romance and nothing more. Descriptions of scenery called up vivid pictures in the writer's mind, which, sketched upon his pages, are often far from accurate. The Aztec civilisation as described by Cortes 'caught the imagination and overcame the critical judgment of Prescott, our most charming writer,' wrote Morgan, the first scientific American ethnologist.

The preparation for the story of the first Spanish inroad into the American continent covered much of the ground of the second, The Conquest of Peru. The author's zest in his new work was checked and saddened by the sudden death of his father (8th December 1844), always a close sympathiser in all his work; but Prescott soon roused himself to activity, cheered by an appreciative letter from Alexander von Humboldt about the Conquest of Mexico. A few months later he was honoured in Paris and in Berlin by election as corresponding member of the French Institute and of the Royal Society of Berlin. This foreign encouragement was a great refreshment to his spirits; for, in addition to mental depression, he suffered greatly from an access of inflammation in his eye. March 1847 saw the Conquest of Peru finished, two years and nine months after the author put pen to paper. Success was great and immediate on both sides of the Atlantic. Reviews were laudatory, and private letters from scholars and friends—Thierry, Gayangos, and others—full of warm appreciation. The adventures of the Pizarros are related with somewhat less dash than those of Cortes. The sources are perhaps less ample. Francesco Pizarro, unable to write his own story, could not vaunt his exploits as did Cortes. As in the Conquest of Mexico, here also ethnological and historic research has taught us to read a different interpretation into many of the facts seen by Spanish eyes with sixteenth-century spectacles.

Even while busied with Peru, Prescott began to prepare for his Philip II.; and Motley was almost discouraged from his Rise of the Dutch Republic by learning that Prescott had gone back from the Spanish colonies to the mother-country. In his turn Prescott encouraged the younger man to go on with his book. But in 1850 Prescott's health moved him to make his second voyage to England, more than thirty years after the first. Most cordial was the welcome extended to him; every door was opened to him; and he greatly enjoyed his social experiences. His letters to his wife give interesting pictures of English society in 1850, from the Queen, by whom he was graciously received, to minor authors delighted to claim him as a colleague from across the sea.

In October 1850 he returned home and began again to 'Philippize,' as he called it. Two volumes were published in November 1855; and not only were large sales made immediately, but interest was revived in Prescott's earlier books. Work on the third volume was interrupted by Prescott's addition to Robertson's Charles V., published in 1856.

'My poor wife! I am so sorry this has come upon you so soon,' was his first conscious sentence on recovering from a sudden stroke of apoplexy in February 1858; but nearly a year more of comparative health enabled him to publish the third volume of Philip (April 1858), leaving his story at 1580. The succeeding months were given to revision of Mexico. It was in the midst of this labour that a second attack dealt him his death-blow, from which he died in a few hours, 28th January 1859. A man without enemies, he had commanded the attention and interest of his contemporaries at large, and been the life and soul of every circle, great and small, of which he formed a part. Few writers have lived a life so uniformly happy and serene as that of Prescott, save for the one overwhelming misfortune of half-blindness. He kept wholly apart from the social and political questions agitating America and Europe.

His last work was received with warm commendation, and cannot even now be ignored; but it has a somewhat arid quality, and is distinctly lacking in charm. In its arrangement the material is disproportioned; thus more space is given to the Moors and less to the Netherlands than seems justified. Guizot strongly commended the presentation (Edinburgh Review, 1887), but thought the author was too impartial and lacking in passion. Prescott belongs distinctly to the school of literary history, a school for which Professor J. B. Bury (Inaugural Address, Cambridge, January 1903) held there was no place. He is not a philosophical historian, nor scientific in the modern sense. But he vastly surpassed the older school like Robertson in research, and he is much more careful in citing his authorities. He is a masterly narrator; and it may confidently be affirmed that Prescott's thirty-odd years of work won him grateful recognition from a large body of readers on both sides of the Atlantic, for whom scientific history would have remained a sealed volume.

Aguilar.

Soon after landing, a canoe with several Indians was seen making its way from the neighbouring shores of Yucatan. On reaching the island one of the men inquired, in broken Castilian, 'if he were among Christians; and, being answered in the affirmative, threw himself on his knees and returned thanks to Heaven for his delivery. He was one of the unfortunate captives for whose fate so much interest had been felt. His name was Jerónimo de Aguilar, a native of Ecija, in Old Spain, where he had been regularly educated for the Church. He had been established with the colony at Darien, and on a voyage from that place to Hispaniola eight years previous, was wrecked near the coast of Yucatan. He escaped with several of his companions in the ship's boat, where some perished from hunger and exposure, while others were sacrificed on their reaching land by the cannibal natives of the peninsula. Aguilar was preserved from the same dismal fate by escaping into the interior, where he fell into the hands of a powerful cacique, who, though he spared his life, treated him at first with great rigour. The patience of the captive, however, and his singular humility, touched the better feelings of the chieftain, who would have persuaded Aguilar to take a wife among his people; but the ecclesiastic steadily refused, in obedience to his vows. This admirable constancy excited the distrust of the cacique, who put his virtue to a severe test by various temptations, and much of the same sort as those with which the devil is said to have assailed St Anthony. From all these fiery trials, however, like his ghostly predecessor, he came out unscorched. Continence is too rare and difficult a virtue with barbarians not to challenge their veneration, and the practice of it has made the reputation of more than one saint in the Old as well as the New World. Aguilar was now entrusted with the care of his master's household and his numerous wives. He was a man of discretion, as well as virtue; and his counsels were found so salutary that he was consulted on all important matters. In short, Aguilar became a great man among the Indians.

It was with much regret, therefore, that his master received the proposals for his return to his countrymen, to which nothing but the rich treasure of glass beads, hawk-bells, and other jewels of like value, sent for his ransom, would have induced him to consent. When Aguilar reached the coast there had been so much delay that the brigantines had sailed, and it was owing to the fortunate return of the fleet to Cozumel that he was enabled to join it.

On appearing before Cortes, the poor man saluted him in the Indian style, by touching the earth with his hand and carrying it to his head. The commander, raising him up, affectionately embraced him, covering him at the same time with his own cloak, as Aguilar was simply clad in the habiliments of the country, somewhat too scanty for a European eye. It was long, indeed, before the tastes which he had acquired in the freedom of the forest could be reconciled to the constraints either of dress or manners imposed by the artificial forms of civilisation. Aguilar's long residence in the country had familiarised him with the Mayan dialects of Yucatan, and, as he gradually revived his Castilian, he became of essential importance as an interpreter. Cortes saw the advantage of this from the first, but he could not fully estimate all the consequences that were to flow from it.

The repairs of the vessels being at length completed, the Spanish commander once more took leave of the friendly natives of Cozumel, and set sail on the 4th of March. Keeping as near as possible to the coast of Yucatan, he doubled Cape Catoche, and with flowing sheets swept down the broad bay of Campeachy, fringed with the rich dye-woods which have since furnished so important an article of commerce to Europe. He passed Potonchan, where Cordova had experienced a rough reception from the natives; and soon after reached the mouth of the Rio de Tabasco, or Grijalva, in which that navigator had carried on so lucrative a traffic. Though mindful of the great object of his voyage—the visit to the Aztec territories—he was desirous of acquainting himself with the resources of this country, and determined to ascend the river and visit the great town on its borders.

The water was so shallow, from the accumulation of sand at the mouth of the stream, that the general was obliged to leave the ships at anchor, and to embark in the boats with a part only of his forces. The banks were thickly studded with mangrove trees, that, with their roots shooting up and interlacing one another, formed a kind of impervious screen or network, behind which the dark forms of the natives were seen glancing to and fro with the most menacing looks and gestures. Cortes, much surprised at these unfriendly demonstrations, so unlike what he had had reason to expect, moved cautiously up the stream. When he had reached an open place, where a large number of Indians were assembled, he asked, through his interpreter, leave to land, explaining at the same time his amicable intentions. But the Indians, brandishing their weapons, answered only with gestures of angry defiance. Though much chagrined, Cortes thought it best not to urge the matter further that evening, but withdrew to a neighbouring island, where he disembarked his troops, resolved to effect a landing on the following morning.

When day broke, the Spaniards saw the opposite banks lined with a much more numerous array than on the preceding evening, while the canoes along the shore were filled with bands of armed warriors. Cortes now made his preparations for the attack. He first landed a detachment of a hundred men under Alonso de Avila, at a point somewhat lower down the stream, sheltered by a thick grove of palms, from which a road, as he knew, led to the town of Tabasco, giving orders to his officer to march at once on the place, while he himself advanced to assault it in front.

(From The Conquest of Mexico.)

Atahualpa.

Whether Atahualpa possessed himself of every link in the curious chain of argument by which the monk connected Pizarro with St Peter may be doubted. It is certain, however, that he must have had very incorrect notions of the Trinity, if, as Garcilasso states, the interpreter Felipillo explained it by saying that 'the Christians believed in three Gods and one God, and that made four.' But there is no doubt he perfectly comprehended that the drift of the discourse was to persuade him to resign his sceptre and acknowledge the supremacy of another.

The eyes of the Indian monarch flashed fire, and his dark brow grew darker as he replied, 'I will be no man's tributary! I am greater than any prince upon earth. Your emperor may be a great prince; I do not doubt it, when I see that he has sent his subjects so far across the waters; and I am willing to hold him as a brother. As for the Pope of whom you speak, he must be crazy to talk of giving away countries which do not belong to him. For my faith,' he continued, 'I will not change it. Your own God, as you say, was put to death by the very men whom he created. But mine,' he concluded, pointing to his deity—then, alas! sinking in glory behind the mountains—'my God still lives in the heavens, and looks down on his children.'

He then demanded of Valverde by what authority he had said these things. The friar pointed to the book which he held as his authority. Atahualpa, taking it, turned over the pages a moment; then, as the insult he had received probably flashed across his mind, he threw it down with vehemence, and exclaimed, 'Tell your comrades that they shall give me an account of their doings in my land. I will not go from here till they have made me full satisfaction for all the wrongs they have committed.'

The friar, greatly scandalised by the indignity offered to the sacred volume, stayed only to pick it up, and, hastening to Pizarro, informed him of what had been done, exclaiming at the same time, 'Do you not see that, while we stand here wasting our breath in talking with this dog, full of pride as he is, the fields are filling with Indians? Set on at once! I absolve you.' Pizarro saw that the hour had come. He waved a white scarf in the air, the appointed signal. The fatal gun was fired from the fortress. Then springing into the square, the Spanish captain and his followers shouted the old war-cry of 'St Jago and at them!' It was answered by the battle-cry of every Spaniard in the city, as, rushing from the avenues of the great halls in which they were concealed, they poured into the plaza, horse and foot, each in his own dark column, and threw themselves into the midst of the Indian crowd. The latter, taken by surprise, stunned by the report of artillery and muskets, the echoes of which reverberated like thunder from the surrounding buildings, and blinded by the smoke which rolled in sulphurous volumes along the square, were seized with a panic. They knew not whither to fly for refuge from the coming ruin. Nobles and commoners—all were trampled down under the fierce charge of the cavalry, who dealt their blows right and left, without sparing; while their swords, flashing through the thick gloom, carried dismay into the hearts of the wretched natives, who now, for the first time, saw the horse and his rider in all their terrors. They made no resistance—as, indeed, they had no weapons with which to make it. Every avenue to escape was closed, for the entrance to the square was choked up with the dead bodies of men who had perished in vain efforts to fly; and such was the agony of the survivors under the terrible pressure of their assailants that a large body of Indians, by their convulsive struggles, burst through the wall of stone and dried clay which formed part of the boundary of the plaza! It fell, leaving an opening of more than a hundred paces, through which multitudes now found their way into the country, still hotly pursued by the cavalry, who, leaping the fallen rubbish, hung on the rear of the fugitives, striking them down in all directions.

(From The Conquest of Peru.)

In addition to the works mentioned, Prescott wrote a Life of Charles Brockden Brown (1834), and a series of reviews in the North American Review on literary subjects. A collection of his Biographical and Critical Essays was published in 1845. Standard editions of his works are that by J. Foster Kirk, long his secretary (15 vols. 1884; new ed. 1889), and the 'Monteruma Edition' (22 vols. 1906). The standard Life of him was written by George Ticknor (1864); other monographs are by R. Ogden (1904), H. T. Peck (1903).

RUTH PUTNAM.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow,

best loved of his country's poets and best known of them abroad, was born in Portland, Maine, 27th February 1807. The English Longfellowes were Yorkshire folk. William, the poet's first colonial ancestor, had the contemporary reputation of being 'a little wild' and 'not so much a Puritan as some.' He married a sister of Samuel Sewall, witch-judge and famous diarist.

On his mother's side the poet was descended from John Alden, the hero of his Courtship of Miles Standish, as was also the poet Bryant. His father was a cultivated gentleman, a Harvard classmate of Dr Channing and Judge Story, but to the mother he was indebted for his poetic temperament. The atmosphere of the home was that of the best English books; the local influences are described to perfection in the poem 'My Lost Youth.' He began early to write poetry, and his first published poem, written in his fourteenth year, was 'The Battle of Lovell's Pond,' the subject an Indian fight of local celebrity. In 1821 he entered Bowdoin College, where he had Hawthorne for a classmate, barely making his acquaintance, perhaps because Hawthorne had been in the college a year when Longfellow entered his class. During his college years he wrote many verses if not much poetry, publishing twenty-three pieces in two years, some of them side by side with Bryant's in the United States Literary Gazette, as if frankly confessing their imitation, sometimes successful, of the elder poet. Only five of these pieces were tolerated in the collected editions of Longfellow's works. Immediately upon his graduation the college sent him to Europe for three years to fit himself for its new chair of modern languages. The fruits of this travel, beyond its special end, were a series of translations and the book Outre-Mer, as imitative of Irving as the early poems had been of Bryant, but with an individual note. It is a remarkable fact that from 1826 until 1837 he did not publish an original poem; and another, that he could so subordinate his natural gift to the work of translation. His proper hand, when he again found it, was obviously subdued to what he had been working in so long. The wonder is it did not take a deeper dye. His talent for translation has not been surpassed for its uniform excellence. His first translations were from the Spanish; later he passed to German and other northern originals. To the habit so definitely formed he frequently recurred, its culmination in his later life being his complete translation of Dante's Divina Commedia, a wonder of fidelity, but strangely lacking in the verve of the original, and even in that of his own early experiments with the same material.

Much had happened to Longfellow in the period during which his originality as a poet had been in complete abeyance. For five years he had been a professor of the modern languages in Bowdoin College. In 1835, having been appointed to a similar chair at Harvard, he went to Europe for a two years' course of study. In 1831 he had married Mary Storer Porter, a lovely and intelligent girl. She died in the first year of his second sojourn in Europe, November 1835, and his spirit was profoundly shaken by the event. It made him a new creature. It reopened the fountain of poetry in his mind. What he had learned in sorrow, he now essayed to teach in song; but not until he had embodied in Hyperion the experiences of his second European journey, as he had embodied those of the first in Outre-Mer. The manner of the new romance reflected that of Richter as plainly as the former had reflected that of Irving. Its allusions thinly veiled the sorrow of his personal loss, while on its verge arose the shape of a consoler, Frances Elizabeth Appleton, who in 1843 became his second wife. Hyperion at once achieved a popular success. Lovers were no longer in doubt what book to give to the beloved, and every melancholy Jaques sucked it to his heart's content. Promising a succession of romances, it proved to be the last except Kavanagh (1849), which not Emerson's praise, nor even that of Hawthorne, hailing it as 'a true work of genius, if ever there was one,' has saved from deep oblivion. The really significant book of 1839 was not Hyperion but Voices of the Night, a collection of original poems written in quick succession in the year of publication and the preceding. The first written was 'Flowers,' the second was 'A Psalm of Life,' and there were a few more expressions of personal feeling with a didactic purpose that went far to commend them to the New England mind. So intimate seemed the disclosure of 'The Psalm of Life' to its author that for some time he dared not even show it to a friend. A part of the little book's success was doubtless owing to the success of Hyperion, but more to its appeal by its simplicity, its tenderness, and its pathos to the common heart. The Ballads and Other Poems of 1842 marked a distinct advance, especially in such poems as 'The Village Blacksmith,' 'The Wreck of the Hesperus,' and 'The Skeleton in Armour'—only the first of which preserved the didactic quality of the earlier 'Voices.' But he painted little here, or ever, with his eye upon the object. His birds and flowers are mainly such as sang and grew in books. It was inevitable that he should take over from his long practice of translation a great deal of foreign matter, but his Spanish Student of 1843 was a distinct reversion to the mood from which he had just tried to free himself. Aiming to be a play, it was rather a dialogue, the interlocutors but feebly individualised, while nevertheless there were along its course many lines and passages of delicate beauty.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

From a Photograph.

Longfellow's relish for his academic work was slight, but he discharged it faithfully; genial with the students in the class-room, and gravitating slowly but steadily to a right appreciation of his function as that of a sympathetic interpreter of foreign literature to American youth. Passages from Hyperion in the making must have been a delightful variation from the habitual college 'recitation.' The year 1842 found him again in Europe, where Dickens's conversation and his American Notes quickened in him a sense of the iniquity of negro slavery in America, and on the return voyage he wrote eight Poems on Slavery. Of less virile stuff than Whittier's and Lowell's, they committed him to the anti-slavery side. Too much has been made of their omission from a Philadelphia collection of his poems (1845), seeing that the collection did not aim at completeness. Almost simultaneously a New York publisher brought out a complete edition which contained the anti-slavery poems, and thereupon the pro-slavery faction raged and the abolitionists rejoiced. Meantime Longfellow was established in a fine old colonial house in Cambridge, now, with its double fame, a rival of Mount Vernon, Washington having made it his headquarters when he took command of the American forces in 1775. Before the purchase of the house for Longfellow by his wife's father, Longfellow lodged there with Mrs Craigie, a decayed gentlewoman of eccentric character and pathetic history, to which Longfellow was singularly indifferent. Hawthorne would have enjoyed his provocation. On the other hand, Hawthorne was indifferent to the story fundamental to Evangeline, and made it over to Longfellow, who was attracted by the same simplicity by which Hawthorne was repelled. Evangeline (1850) is the best loved of Longfellow's major poems. The hexameter measure in which it is written had only gradually approved itself to the poet's taste. In his introduction to Tegner's Children of the Lord's Supper he had described its movement as 'that of a prisoner dancing in his chains.' That it is not the classic hexameter goes without saying, but that it is not a spontaneous English measure is disproved by the unconscious lapse of the Bible into it in many places, as, 'God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet.' It is strange to have Professor Woodberry regretting its 'spondaic flatness' while Poe lamented its lack of spondees, its tendency to dactylic weakness. Surely the story of Evangeline is infinitely pathetic, and it is told in a swift, streaming style. It would have had more local colour if Longfellow had been as well-travelled in America as in Europe; he had been neither to Nova Scotia nor to the scene of the story in the Mississippi valley. A contemporary panorama was his best resource after the literature of the Acadian episode, then more favourable to the French settlers than later in the hands of Parkman and others. But there is no lack of the feeling of reality in any part. A poem of heart-broken affection, it has appealed to multitudes of happy lovers, chastening their joy with sympathy and quickening their gratefulness. For young people and those remembering their youth, it has the promise of perennial delight.

The futile Kavanagh came next, and then (1850) The Seaside and the Fireside, a cluster of minor poems in which Longfellow's art in this kind took on its most engaging form, especially in the narrative pieces. The stroke was swift and sure and various, the measure in each case being apparently chosen by the subject and not for it. The didactic note, which frequently recurred, was sharpest in 'The Builders.' In 'The Building of the Ship,' where Longfellow was in full possession of his talent, this note was so inevitable and so pure as fully to justify itself. To hear this poem publicly read by Fanny Kemble was an experience that could never be forgotten. 'Resignation' in this series stands at the head of those 'poems of sorrow and comfort' for which many looked to Longfellow as for no other virtue of his craft. In 'The Fire of Drift-Wood' we have that vein of pleasing sentiment, infused with tenderness, than which no aspect of his work was more characteristic. Chrysaor is said to have been the short poem with which he was himself best pleased, sustaining his opinion with that of another poet, Bayard Taylor. It varies the habitual grace and flow of his versification with that more subtle rhythm to which he consciously aspired but to which he infrequently attained. Always melodious, he does not often yield that harmony which is the resolution of parts distinctly individual into a formal unity. In The Golden Legend, obedient to a principle of oscillation between home and foreign subjects to which he furnished several illustrations, he swung back to a dramatic poem embodying his conception of Christianity under the stress of Middle Age conditions. His dramatic talents were not five or two, but one, yet he had no disposition to bury that one in the earth. For dialogue we have a capping of poetic phrases and sallies mildly humorous. He pounced on his own in the Middle Ages, the picturesque, the romantic, the grotesque: its actual conditions did not exist for him at all. 'Even his devil and his erring monks are gentle and gracious souls.' Yet his own engagement with this subject was immense. He conceived The Golden Legend as part of a trilogy to be called Christus: a Mystery. The other parts were The Divine Tragedy and The New England Tragedies. This conception was not an afterthought, as might naturally be inferred from the disconnection of the three dramatic poems. It was present to him in 1849 'as the sublimer song whose broken melodies have for so many years breathed through [his] soul.' The Golden Legend was published without any intimation of its partial character. The New England Tragedies appeared in 1868, The Divine Tragedy in 1871. The former was first written in prose, and something of that form clung to its singing robes. With passages of undeniable beauty touching the New England Quakers, the average course was almost uniquely flat and tame. The Divine Tragedy was a very noble paraphrase of the New Testament narratives, as such attractive even while suffering from the contrast with the Gospels that was not to be escaped.

In 1854 he resigned his Harvard professorship, and the first fruit of his leisure was Hiawatha, which was published in 1855. His first poem had celebrated an Indian battle, and he had always been interested in the dying race, some poor remnants of which had survived in Maine until his day. But the Indians of his poem were not those of Parkman's histories, nor even those of Schoolcraft's careful studies, in which he soaked his mind. Their cruelty and squalor were for him objects of a joyous præterition; to 'weave together their beautiful traditions' was his congenial task. His method here was as selective as where it was concerned with mediæval manners and events, and without difficulty he found the pictures, legendary beauty, glamour, that he sought. He had a good model, the Finnish Kalevala, the measure of which, trochaic tetrameter, he followed, as well as the manner. The form, abounding in melodious repetitions and reverberations, lent itself to rapid composition, and the five thousand lines, begun late in June, were published early in November. The poem pleased everybody except the dryasdust professorate. To Emerson it seemed 'sweet and wholesome as maize,' and the rising generation read it with such zest as if 'Scott, the delight of glorious boys,' had come again. If it lacks something of veracity as an account of savage life, it overflows with the beauty of Longfellow's own nature, the goodness of his heart, those elements in his poetry which have commended it to the general reader, and will hereafter, more than any of its formal beauties or its store of sweet and fair associations with a world remote from our habitual toil and fret, where, as he has written,

The tumult of the time disconsolate
To inarticulate murmurs dies away,
While the eternal ages watch and wait.

The Courtship of Miles Standish ranks with Evangeline and Hiawatha as one of the three crowning heights of Longfellow's range of more ambitious things. It is in the measure of Evangeline, but the hexameters are better than those of the earlier poem. That it told a bright and happy story in contrast with the tragic sorrow of Evangeline was not an advantage with the main body of Longfellow's public, but it was with some readers. This quality marked his complete escape from the languors of German romanticism which sicklied over the complexion of his early verse and lingered on in its maturer forms. That John Alden and Priscilla, the lovers of his story, were his Plymouth ancestors of the Mayflower's company was a circumstance particularly pleasant for the poet and his friends.

Such landmarks as his major poems must not be suffered to obscure the general significance of a multitude of minor poems of which no particular mention can be made. Many of these are included in his complete works under the general titles Tales of a Wayside Inn and Birds of Passage. In either series there are poems that take rank among his best; such stirring ballads as 'Paul Revere's Ride,' such breezy ones as 'Lady Wentworth,' while, on the other hand, the habit of production seems at times to have supplanted genuine inspiration. In 1861 he suffered in the death of his wife a terrible calamity. Her light summer dress took fire, and she was fatally burned. This tragedy was not transmuted into song, save for a sonnet, 'The Cross of Snow,' which was found among his papers after his death and printed in the Life written by his brother Samuel. In the translation of Dante's trilogy he found the absorbing occupation without which he could not sustain his loss. As it was, he grew under the burden in every spiritual grace, and his old age had a benignity which William Dean Howells has described to perfection in his article, 'The White Mr Longfellow,' in his Literary Friends and Acquaintance. No one in America had more of love or honour or a larger troop of friends. There was much slackening at the last of his creative energy, but not without occasional bursts of his proper melody. He died March 24, 1882. His last poem was finished on the 15th of the same month, and its concluding lines made a good end to a life that was compact of gentleness and peace.

Out of the shadows of night
The world rolls into light ;
It is daybreak everywhere.

Many will miss in Longfellow the intellectual force which is for them an essential factor in the character of a true poet ; many others will conceive it a misfortune that he was so little affected by the religious agitations of his time ; but a much greater number will imagine that they cannot be too grateful for so much gentleness and reverence, so much sympathy and kindness, and for a life which was related to its poetical expression as 'perfect music unto noble words.'

Resignation.

[Written in 1848 after the death of a little daughter.]

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there !
There is no fireside, howsoe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair !

The air is full of farewells to the dying,
And mournings for the dead ;
The heart of Rachel, for her children crying,
Will not be comforted !

Let us be patient ! These severe afflictions
Not from the ground arise,
But oftentimes celestial benedictions
Assume this dark disguise.

We see but dimly through the mists and vapours,
Amid these earthly damps ;
What seem to us but sad, funereal tapers,
May be heaven's distant lamps.

There is no Death ! What seems so is transition ;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.

She is not dead,—the child of our affection,—
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection,
And Christ Himself doth rule.

In that great cloister's stillness and seclusion,
By guardian angels led,
Safe from temptation, safe from sin's pollution,
She lives, whom we call dead.

Day after day we think what she is doing
In those bright realms of air ;
Year after year, her tender steps pursuing,
Behold her grown more fair.

Thus do we walk with her, and keep unbroken
The bond which nature gives,
Thinking that our remembrance, though unspoken,
May reach her where she lives.

Not as a child shall we again behold her ;
For when with raptures wild
In our embraces we again enfold her,
She will not be a child ;

But a fair maiden, in her Father's mansion,
Clothed with celestial grace ;
And beautiful with all the soul's expansion
Shall we behold her face.

And though at times impetuous with emotion
And anguish long suppressed,
The swelling heart heaves moaning like the ocean.
That cannot be at rest,—

We will be patient, and assuage the feeling
We may not wholly stay ;
By silence sanctifying, not concealing,
The grief that must have way.

Chrysaor.

Just above yon sandy bar,
As the day grows fainter and dimmer,
Lonely and lovely, a single star
Lights the air with a dusky glimmer.

Into the ocean faint and far
Falls the trail of its golden splendour,
And the gleam of that single star
Is ever refulgent, soft, and tender.

Chrysaor, rising out of the sea,
Showed thus glorious and thus emulous,
Leaving the arms of Callirhoe,
For ever tender, soft, and tremulous.

Thus o'er the ocean faint and far
Trailed the gleam of his falchion brightly :
Is it a God, or is it a star
That, entranced, I gaze on nightly !

Holidays.

The holiest of all holidays are those Kept by ourselves in silence and apart ;
The secret anniversaries of the heart,
When the full river of feeling overflows ;—
The happy days unclouded to their close ;
The sudden joys that out of darkness start
As flames from ashes ; swift desires that dart
Like swallows singing down each wind that blows !
White as the gleam of a receding sail,
White as a cloud that floats and fades in air,
White as the whitest lily on the stream,
These tender memories are ;—a Fairy Tale
Of some enchanted land we know not where,
But lovely as a landscape in a dream.

Divina Commedia.

Oft have I seen at some cathedral door,
A labourer pausing in the dust and heat,
Lay down his burden, and with reverent feet
Enter, and cross himself, and on the floor
Kneel to repeat his paternoster o'er ;
Far off the noises of the world's retreat :
The loud vociferations of the street
Become an undistinguishable roar.

So, as I enter here from day to day,
And leave my burden at this minster gate,
Kneeling in prayer, and not ashamed to pray,
The tumult of the time disconsolate
To inarticulate murmurs dies away,
While the eternal ages watch and wait.

How strange the sculptures that adorn these towers!
This crowd of statues, in whose folded sleeves
Birds build their nests; while canopied with leaves
Parvis and portal bloom like trellised bowers,
And the vast minster seems a cross of flowers!
But fiends and dragons on the gargoyled eaves
Watch the dead Christ between the living thieves,
And, underneath, the traitor Judas lowers!

Ah! from what agonies of heart and brain,
What exultations trampling on despair,
What tenderness, what tears, what hate of wrong,
What passionate outcry of a soul in pain,
Uprose this poem of the earth and air,
This mediæval miracle of song!

I enter, and I see thee in the gloom
Of the long aisles, O poet saturnine!
And strive to make my steps keep pace with thine.
The air is filled with some unknown perfume;
The congregation of the dead make room
For thee to pass; the votive tapers shine;
Like rooks that haunt Ravenna's groves of pine
The hovering echoes fly from tomb to tomb.
From the confessionals I hear arise
Rehearsals of forgotten tragedies,
And lamentations from the crypts below;
And then a voice celestial, that begins
With the pathetic words, 'Although your sins
As scarlet be,' and ends with 'as the snow.'

With snow-white veil and garments as of flame,
She stands before thee, who so long ago
Filled thy young heart with passion and the woe
From which thy song and all its splendours came;
And while with stern rebuke she speaks thy name,
The ice about thy heart melts as the snow
On mountain heights, and in swift overflow
Comes gushing from thy lips in sobs of shame.
Thou makest full confession; and a gleam,
As if the dawn on some dark forest cast,
Seems on thy lifted forehead to increase;
Lethe and Eunoë—the remembered dream
And the forgotten sorrow—bring at last
That perfect pardon which is perfect peace.

I lift mine eyes, and all the windows blaze
With forms of saints and holy men who died,
Here martyred and hereafter glorified;
And the great Rose upon its leaves displays
Christ's Triumph and the angelic roundelays,
With splendour upon splendour multiplied;
And Beatrice again at Dante's side
No more rebukes, but smiles her words of praise.
And then the organ sounds, and unseen choirs
Sing the old Latin hymns of peace and love,
And benedictions of the Holy Ghost;
And the melodious bells among the spires
O'er all the house-tops and through heaven above
Proclaim the elevation of the Host.

O star of morning and of liberty!
O bringer of the light, whose splendour shines
Above the darkness of the Apennines,
Forerunner of the day that is to be!
The voices of the city and the sea,
The voices of the mountains and the pines,
Repeat thy song, till the familiar lines
Are footpaths for the thought of Italy!
Thy fame is blown abroad from all the heights,
Through all the nations, and a sound is heard,
As of a mighty wind, and men devout,
Strangers of Rome, and the new proselytes,
In their own language hear thy wondrous word,
And many are amazed and many doubt.

The Cross of Snow.

[Found in Longfellow's portfolio after his death.]

In the long, sleepless watches of the night,
A gentle face—the face of one long dead—
Looks at me from the wall, where round its head
The night-lamp casts a halo of pale light.
Here in this room she died; and soul more white Never through martyrdom of fire was led
To its repose; nor can in books be read
The legend of a life more benedict.
There is a mountain in the distant West
That, sun-defying, in its deep ravines
Displays a cross of snow upon its side.
Such is the cross I wear upon my breast
These eighteen years, through all the changing scenes
And seasons, changeless since the day she died.

The Old Bridge at Florence.

Taddeo Gaddi built me. I am old,
Five centuries old. I plant my foot of stone
Upon the Arno, as St Michael's own
Was planted on the dragon. Fold by fold
Beneath me as it struggles, I behold
Its glistening scales. Twice hath it overthrown
My kindred and companions. Me alone
It moveth not: but is by me controlled.
I can remember when the Medici
Were driven from Florence; longer still ago
The final wars of Ghibelline and Guelf.
Florence adorns me with her jewellery;
And when I think that Michael Angelo
Hath leaned on me, I glory in myself.

From 'Evangeline.'

Suddenly, as if arrested by fear or a feeling of wonder,
Still she stood, with her colourless lips apart, while a shudder
Ran through her frame, and forgotten, the flowerets dropped from her fingers,
And from her eyes and cheeks the light and bloom of the morning.
Then there escaped from her lips a cry of such terrible anguish,
That the dying heard it, and started up from their pillows.
On the pallet before her was stretched the form of an old man.
Long, and thin, and gray were the locks that shaded his temples;
But, as he lay in the morning light, his face for a moment

Seemed to assume once more the forms of its earlier manhood ;
So are wont to be changed the faces of those that are dying.

Hot and red on his lips still burned the flush of the fever,
As if life, like the Hebrew, with blood had besprinkled its portals,

That the Angel of Death might see the sign, and pass over.
Motionless, senseless, dying, he lay, and his spirit exhausted

Seemed to be sinking down through infinite depths in the darkness,

Darkness of slumber and death, for ever sinking and sinking.

Then through those realms of shade, in multiplied reverberations,

Heard he that cry of pain, and through the hush that succeeded

Whispered a gentle voice, in accents tender and saint-like,

'Gabriel ! O my beloved !' and died away into silence.
Then he beheld, in a dream, once more the home of his childhood ;

Green Acadian meadows, with sylvan rivers among them,
Village, and mountain, and woodlands ; and, walking under their shadow,

As in the days of her youth, Evangeline rose in his vision.

Tears came into his eyes ; and as slowly he lifted his eyelids,

Vanished the vision away, but Evangeline knelt by his bedside.

Vainly he strove to whisper her name, for the accents unuttered

Died on his lips, and their motion revealed what his tongue would have spoken.

Vainly he strove to rise ; and Evangeline, kneeling beside him,

Kissed his dying lips, and laid his head on her bosom.

Sweet was the light of his eyes ; but it suddenly sank into darkness,

As when a lamp is blown out by a gust of wind at a casement.

All was ended now, the hope, and the fear, and the sorrow,

All the aching of heart, the restless unsatisfied longing,
All the dull, deep pain, and constant anguish of patience !

And, as she pressed once more the lifeless head to her bosom,

Meekly she bowed her own, and murmured, 'Father, I thank Thee !'

From the Prologue to 'Hiawatha.'

Ye who love the haunts of Nature,
Love the sunshine of the meadow,
Love the shadow of the forest,
Love the wind among the branches,
And the rain-shower and the snow-storm,
And the rushing of great rivers,
Through their palisades of pine-trees,
And the thunder in the mountains,
Whose innumerable echoes
Flap like eagles in their eyries ;—
Listen to these wild traditions,
To this Song of Hiawatha !

Ye who love a nation's legends,
Love the ballads of a people,
That like voices from afar off
Call to us to pause and listen,
Speak in tones so plain and child-like,
Scarcely can the ear distinguish
Whether they are sung or spoken ;—
Listen to this Indian Legend,
To this Song of Hiawatha !

Ye whose hearts are fresh and simple,
Who have faith in God and Nature,
Who believe, that in all ages
Every human heart is human,
That in even savage bosoms
There are longings, yearnings, strivings,
For the good they comprehend not,
That the feeble hands and helpless,
Groping blindly in the darkness,
Touch God's right hand in that darkness
And are lifted up and strengthened ;—
Listen to this simple story,
To this Song of Hiawatha !

Ye, who sometimes, in your rambles
Through the green lanes of the country,
Where the tangled barberry-bushes
Hang their tufts of crimson berries
Over stone walls gray with mosses,
Pause by some neglected graveyard,
For a while to muse, and ponder
On a half-effaced inscription,
Written with little skill of song-craft,
Homely phrases, but each letter
Full of hope and yet of heart-break,
Full of all the tender pathos
Of the Here and the Hereafter ;—
Stay and read this rude inscription,
Read this Song of Hiawatha !

Longfellow's works are published in various editions. The best is the 'Riverside' in eleven volumes (1886-90), including prose and poetry and the Life by Samuel Longfellow. There is an admirable one-volume edition, the 'Cambridge ;' and there have been numerous reprints in Britain. There is a Life by Robertson (1887) ; a better one by Higginson in 'American Men of Letters' (1902). See too H. S. Gorman (1927). The best critical article is in E. C. Stedman's Poets of America ; the best personal article in W. D. Howells's Literary Friends and Acquaintance.

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

Sylvester Judd (1813-53), born at Westhampton in Massachusetts, was from 1840 Unitarian pastor at Augusta in Maine. He wrote against slavery, intemperance, and war ; published a religious poem, Philo ; and is remembered specially as the author of the transcendental romance Margaret (1845), justly claiming to be 'a tale of the real and ideal.' Among the most real elements are charming descriptions of New England scenery and sketches of humble life there, warmly praised by Lowell ; and attention is still from time to time drawn to it by American critics, though it is a strangely unequal work. Richard Edney and the Governor's Family : a Rus-Urban Tale (1850), less transcendental, was a sort of counterpart of Margaret. He published also discourses and theological works. There is a book on his Life and Character by Hall (1882).

John Greenleaf Whittier,

the New England Quaker poet, was born in Haverhill, Massachusetts, 17th December 1807, in a house built by his first colonial ancestor in the seventeenth century. One strain of his blood allied him with Daniel Webster, and both are said to have had 'the Bachiler eyes;' but Webster's were blacker and less piercing than Whittier's. What the homestead and home life were can best be read in Snow-Bound, while 'The Barefoot Boy' is Whittier's full-length portrait of himself in his happy childhood, before the farm-work pressed too hard upon his strength and planted in his constitution the seeds of that weakness which made the habit of his life valetudinarian. His education was that of the district school of the period, except for a brief course at a local academy. There were books in the small family library that gave direction to his taste, inclining it to legendary reminiscences and tales. There was an uncle in the family who contributed liberally to his stock of these. It was an eventful day which was marked by his first reading of Burns's poems, lent him by one of his teachers. Later there came a 'wandering Willie' from Scotland who could recite Burns's dialect poems in an entrancing manner. Whittier was much impressed, and was soon writing verses, some of them in the Burns dialect, which he managed very well; while to much in the spirit of Burns—his interest in simple joys and cares—he owed a lasting debt. It is sound criticism that describes his Snow-Bound as the New England Cotter's Saturday Night. But his first published poem, 'The Exile,' was more in the manner of Moore than of Burns. The paper containing this was thrown over the wall into a field where Whittier was at work one day in June 1826, and his first triumph was enhanced by a laudatory editorial note. The editor was William Lloyd Garrison, the great anti-slavery reformer, then twenty years of age. His admiration for Whittier's early poems, of which he accepted many for his paper, is hard to understand. They were for the most part feeble reflections of debased literary models, but they made up in abundance what they lacked in quality, nearly one hundred appearing in the years 1827–28. In 1832 Whittier was quite justified in his resolve to give up poetry as something for which he had no gift, and settle to a farmer's life. But in that year he made a fresh start with an apostrophe to Garrison. Nothing before this was worth preserving or has been preserved, except in the appendix to his complete works, to show from what weak beginnings he set out. The apostrophe to Garrison marked his definite adhesion to the anti-slavery cause, which for the next twenty years was the principal subject and inspiration of his verse. For these twenty years he describes himself as 'shut out from the favour of booksellers and magazine editors.' 'But I was enabled,' he says, 'by rigid economy to live in spite of them, and to see the end of the infernal institution which proscribed me.' This diversion of 'a dreamer born' 'from the Muses' haunts' to 'the crank of an opinion-mill,'

Making his rustic reed of song
A weapon in the war with wrong, has furnished matter for regret to some of Whittier's critics. But there is every reason to believe that this diversion effected at once his moral and political salvation. It saved him from the career of an intriguing politician, to which his proclivity was so marked that, parallel with his anti-slavery course, he for many years ran another in partisan politics which might have been straighter than it was. This made it easier for him to ally himself with those abolitionists who, parting company with Garrison as too exclusively moral in his agitation, instituted the Liberty party, which sought to reach the abolition of slavery by political means. But while on with this new party he was not quite off with the old, and in 1844 was barely shut out from a congressional election, with Whig help, by the serious condition of his health. It is an interesting reflection that but for this accidental circumstance we might never have had that body of personal and religious poetry on which Whittier's permanent reputation as a poet rests.

It was principally as a journalist that he was effective on political and anti-slavery lines. He spent the winter of 1828–29 in Boston editing the American Manufacturer; the next year he was editor of the Haverhill Gazette, and the same year he went to Hartford, Connecticut, to edit the New England Review. In 1831 he published his first book, Legends of New England, for single copies of which he offered eventually as much as five dollars, that he might burn them up. In 1833 he attended in Philadelphia the first meeting of the American Anti-Slavery Society, the most notable anti-slavery meeting ever held in America, with Garrison for its inspiring soul. Whittier was one of the secretaries of the convention, and a member of the committee which drafted the famous Declaration of Principles. He read to Garrison's face that tribute of admiration which he had written in 1832. His standing in the convention was fixed by his Justice and Expediency, a noble echo of Garrison's Thoughts on African Colonisation, which, denouncing negro colonisation as friendly to slavery, demanded immediate and unconditional emancipation. Returning to Haverhill in 1832, he again took charge of the Gazette. In 1836 the farm was sold and the family removed some eight miles to Amesbury, where, but for summer outings and two years in Philadelphia (1838–40), he henceforth made his home. In Philadelphia he edited the Pennsylvania Freeman, an abolitionist paper, his most important editorial charge. The office of the paper was in Pennsylvania Hall, which, just built, was burned by a pro-slavery mob. Whittier, disguising himself, saved some of his effects, and published his paper the next day with a defiant note. He had had previous experience with mobs in New England, where he went about holding abolition meetings in company with George Thompson, an English agitator who was peculiarly obnoxious to the pro-slavery mind. Some specimens of his journalism are preserved in the three volumes of prose writings included in his complete works. These are probably inferior to his editorials that dealt with the shifting aspects of the anti-slavery struggle, for his prose was always best when he wrote from inward heat, and worst when he was consciously endeavouring to write attractively.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

After a Photograph.

From his apostrophe to Garrison in 1832 to his Laus Deo! which hailed the constitutional end of slavery in 1865, he had a poem for every striking incident of the anti-slavery conflict—one here applauding some heroic word or deed, one there denouncing some new recreancy or perfidy. The most famous, at the time, was his 'Ichabod!' which denounced the defection of Webster from the anti-slavery side in 1850, in his 'Seventh of March Speech.' The politician gaining on the reformer in Whittier's double consciousness, he passed by easy stages from the Liberty to the Free Soil, and thence to the Republican party, each new stage less consistently abolitionist than the last. A man of peace in virtue of his Quakerism, he beat his songs into swords and muskets in the time of the great Civil War.

His literary life hardly began in any proper sense until 1857, when the Atlantic Monthly was launched, and he was at once taken on board, having a poem,

'The Gift of Tritemius,' in the first number, and one oftener than not in the succeeding numbers for a score of years. Before this door was opened, the National Era had since 1847 furnished him with a semi-literary vehicle for ballads and poems of a religious character, apart from the main anti-slavery stress. As early as 1843 there were enough of these to constitute a little book, Lays of my Home, and other Poems, which brought in a few dollars, as did not the anti-slavery collections of 1837 and 1849. Other poems indicative of his widening scope were gathered up in Songs of Labour (1850) and in The Panorama, and other Poems (1856), notably in this last the popular favourites 'Maud Muller' and 'The Barefoot Boy.' But the Atlantic offered more encouragement to his less strenuous disposition than it had before enjoyed; and besides, as the great war drew to its close, the energy generated by the long anti-slavery struggle sought and found new avenues of expression. The most of Whittier's best-remembered things were written in the decade 1857-67, ballads so different as 'Skipper Ireson's Ride' and 'Amy Wentworth,' and poems of the inner life in which the personal note was clear and sweet. Such were 'My Psalm,' 'My Birthday,' 'My Triumph,' 'My Soul and I,' 'The Master,' and 'The Eternal Goodness,' in which this direction of his talent reached its farthest goal. All these were poems of the Quaker's 'inner light,' and made for the softening of the traditional New England creed and for inter-sectarian amenity. Snow-Bound appeared in 1866, and took the New England heart by storm. With much that was intimately specialised after the forms of Whittier's personal experience, there was much that was representative of the New England farmer's life, so vividly presented that the dullest could not but respond to the reality of its characters and scenes. Besides, the tenderness that brooded over a little world that was hopelessly passing away was a beguiling note. The Tent on the Beach (1867), following, far off, the lead of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, grouped ingeniously some of his most effective ballads with poems of a more subjective character. He never married, but a considerable number of his poems hint the romance of his affections in a fashion that has piqued and baffled much tender curiosity. 'Memories' and 'My Playmate' are among the best of these. With much sensibility to the loveliness of women, he had such appreciation of their spiritual gifts and graces as assured them a preponderance in the order of those friendships which were his life's best satisfactions and delights. Many the tributes paid to these in his too facile verse! Whittier suddenly woke up to find himself famous, and now his anti-slavery record could not too boldly leap to light. What had long retarded now increased his fame, and The Tent on the Beach sold at a rate which Whittier could only with difficulty reconcile to his sense of the right relation of the poet's work to his reward. Similar volumes followed The Tent on the Beach, but inferior in distinct degrees, and leaving Snow-Bound solitary in its homely charm. For all the delicacy of his health, he lived, an object of increasing reverence and affection, till 7th September 1892, when he was nearly eighty-five years old.

Of contemporary American poets he owed least to culture and formal education. Hence the defects of his poetry—its lack of compression, its contracted metrical range, its faulty rhymes and ungrammatical forms. He was more poet than artist, spontaneous to the verge of improvisation, with no self-restraint, spinning too long a thread. Of verbal felicity he had little, save in his effective use of sonorous proper names. His poetry was eloquence, as if he had caught the accent of the anti-slavery heralds and champions. He was pre-eminently the singer of the anti-slavery crusade, proudly saluting its living heroes and its honoured dead, the most representative of New England's poets, affectionately reminiscent of her lore of superstition and romance, and, most significantly, the poet of religious sympathy and hope and trust. Though he wrote few hymns, many have been detached from his poems and sung in churches of all Protestant denominations, to the great enhancement of his fame. With a less general following than Longfellow, he has had a much more cordial welcome among 'the plain people' and those who subordinate all other interests to those of the religious life.

From 'Massachusetts to Virginia.'

We hear thy threats, Virginia! thy stormy words and high,
Swell harshly on the Southern winds which melt along our sky;

Yet, not one brown, hard hand forgoes its honest labour here,—
No hewer of our mountain oaks suspends his axe in fear.

Wild are the waves which lash the reefs along St
George's bank,—
Cold on the shore of Labrador the fog lies white and dank;

Through storm, and wave, and blinding mist, stout are the hearts which man
The fishing-smacks of Marblehead, the sea-boats of Cape Ann.

We hunt your bondmen, flying from Slavery's hateful hell,—

Our voices, at your bidding, take up the bloodhound's yell,—

We gather, at your summons, above our fathers' graves,
From Freedom's holy altar-horns to tear your wretched slaves!

The voice of Massachusetts! Of her free sons and daughters,—

Deep calling unto deep aloud,—the sound of many waters!

Against the burden of that voice what tyrant power shall stand?

No fetters in the Bay State! No slave upon her land!

Look to it well, Virginians! In calmness we have borne,

In answer to our faith and trust, your insult and your scorn;

You've spurned our kindest counsels,—you've hunted for our lives,—

And shaken round our hearths and homes your manacles and gyves!

We wage no war,—we lift no arm,—we fling no torch within

The fire-damps of the quaking mine beneath your soil of sin;

We leave ye with your bondmen, to wrestle, while ye can,

With the strong upward tendencies and godlike soul of man!

But for us and for our children, the vow which we have given

For freedom and humanity is registered in Heaven;

No slave-hunt in our borders,—no pirate on our strand!

No fetters in the Bay State,—no slave upon our land!

Ichabod!

So fallen! so lost! the light withdrawn
Which once he wore!

The glory from his gray hairs gone
For evermore!

Revile him not,—the Tempter hath
A snare for all;
And pitying tears, not scorn and wrath,
Befit his fall!

O, dumb be passion's stormy rage,
When he who might
Have lighted up and led his age,
Falls back in night.

Scorn! would the angels laugh, to mark
A bright soul driven,
Fiend-goaded, down the endless dark,
From hope and heaven!

Let not the land once proud of him
Insult him now,
Nor brand with deeper shame his dim,
Dishonoured brow.

But let its humbled sons, instead,
From sea to lake,
A long lament, as for the dead,
In sadness make.

Of all we loved and honoured, naught
Save power remains,—
A fallen angel's pride of thought,
Still strong in chains.

All else is gone; from those great eyes
The soul has fled:
When faith is lost, when honour dies,
The man is dead!

Then, pay the reverence of old days
To his dead fame:

Walk backward, with averted gaze,
And hide the shame!

In School-Days.

Still sits the school-house by the road,
A ragged beggar sunning;
Around it still the sumachs grow,
And blackberry vines are running.

Within, the master's desk is seen,
Deep scarred by raps official;
The warping floor, the battered seats,
The jack-knife's carved initial;

The charcoal frescoes on its wall;
Its door's worn sill, betraying
The feet that, creeping slow to school,
Went storming out to playing!

Long years ago a winter sun
Shone over it at setting;
Lit up its western window-panes,
And low eaves' icy fretting.

It touched the tangled golden curls,
And brown eyes full of grieving,
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school were leaving.

For near her stood the little boy
Her childish favour singled;
His cap pulled low upon a face
Where pride and shame were mingled.

Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left, he lingered;—
As restlessly her tiny hands
The blue-checked apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt
The soft hand's light caressing,
And heard the tremble of her voice,
As if a fault confessing.

'I'm sorry that I spelt the word:
I hate to go above you,
Because,'—the brown eyes lower fell,—
'Because, you see, I love you!'

Still memory to a gray-haired man
That sweet child-face is showing,
Dear girl! the grasses on her grave
Have forty years been growing!

He lives to learn, in life's hard school,
How few who pass above him
Lament their triumph and his loss,
Like her,—because they love him.

From 'My Birthday.'

Better than self-indulgent years
The outflung heart of youth,
Than pleasant songs in idle years
The tumult of the truth.

Rest for the weary hands is good,
And love for hearts that pine,
But let the manly habitude
Of upright souls be mine.

Let winds that blow from heaven refresh,
Dear Lord, the languid air;
And let the weakness of the flesh
Thy strength of spirit share.

And, if the eye must fail of light,
The ear forget to hear,
Make clearer still the spirit's sight,
More fine the inward ear!

Be near me in mine hours of need
To soothe, or cheer, or warn,
And down these slopes of sunset lead
As up the hills of morn!

From 'My Psalm.'

All as God wills, who wisely heeds
To give or to withhold,
And knoweth more of all my needs
Than all my prayers have told!

Enough that blessings undeserved
Have marked my erring track;—
That wheresoe'er my feet have swerved,
His chastening turned me back;—

That more and more a Providence
Of love is understood,
Making the springs of time and sense
Sweet with eternal good;—

That death seems but a covered way
Which opens into light,
Wherein no blinded child can stray
Beyond the Father's sight;—

That care and trial seem at last,
Through Memory's sunset air,
Like mountain-ranges overpast,
In purple distance fair;—

That all the jarring notes of life
Seem blending in a psalm,
And all the angles of its strife
Slow rounding into calm.

And so the shadows fall apart,
And so the west-winds play;
And all the windows of my heart
I open to the day.

From 'Snow-Bound.'

Shut in from all the world without,
We sat the clean-winged hearth about,
Content to let the north-wind roar
In baffled rage at pane and door,
While the red logs before us beat
The frost-line back with tropic heat;
And ever, when a louder blast
Shook beam and rafter as it passed,
The merrier up its roaring draught
The great throat of the chimney laughed.
The house-dog on its paws outspread
Laid to the fire his drowsy head,
The cat's dark silhouette on the wall
A couchant tiger's seemed to fall;
And, for the winter fireside meet,
Between the andirons' straddling feet,

The mug of cider simmered slow,
The apples sputtered in a row,
And, close at hand, the basket stood
With nuts from brown October's wood.

What matter how the night behaved?
What matter how the north-wind raved?
Blow high, blow low, not all its snow
Could quench our hearth-fire's ruddy glow.
O Time and Change!—with hair as gray
As was my sire's that winter day,
How strange it seems, with so much gone
Of life and love, to still live on!
Ah, brother! only I and thou
Are left of all that circle now,—
The dear home faces whereupon
That fitful firelight paled and shone.
Henceforward, listen as we will,
The voices of that hearth are still;
Look where we may, the wide earth o'er,
Those lighted faces smile no more.
We tread the paths their feet have worn,
We sit beneath their orchard-trees,
We hear, like them, the hum of bees
And rustle of the bladed corn;
We turn the pages that they read,
Their written words we linger o'er,
But in the sun they cast no shade,
No voice is heard, no sign is made,
No step is on the conscious floor!
Yet Love will dream, and Faith will trust
(Since He who knows our need is just),
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress-trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever Lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own!

Whittier's complete works are published in seven volumes in the 'Riverside Edition' (1888), and the 'University Edition' (1913); the complete poems in a one-volume edition, the 'Cambridge' (1894). The Life and Letters, by S. T. Pickard (1894; new ed. 1907), is the official biography, an excellent piece of work. Other studies are by T. W. Higginson ('English Men of Letters,' 1902), R. Burton ('Beacon Biographies,' 1900), G. R. Carpenter ('American Men of Letters,' 1903), G. K. Lewis (1913). The best critical study is E. C. Stedman's, in the Poets of America.

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

Josiah Gilbert Holland (1819–81), born in Belchertown, Massachusetts, practised medicine for two or three years, but became assistant-editor and part-proprietor of a paper at Springfield. In 1870 he helped to found Scribner's Monthly (afterwards The Century Magazine), which he edited; and in it appeared his novels, Arthur Bonnicastle, The Story of Sevenoaks, and Nicholas Minturn. Other works were Timothy Tipton's Letters (1858), Letters to the Joneses (1863), a history of Western Massachusetts, a Life of Lincoln, and his popular poems, Bitter Sweet (1858), Kathrina (1867), and The Mistress of the Manse (1874). There is a Life of him by Mrs Plunkett (1894).

Nathaniel Hawthorne,

the most distinguished writer of American fiction, was born in Salem, a coast-town of Massachusetts, some dozen miles from Boston, on 4th July 1804. His ancestors were American from the time of the first settlements. Nathaniel, a sea-captain, father of the novelist, died in 1808. For forty years of widowhood his mother secluded herself and seldom left her room. Two sisters were only a little less recluse. Here was an influence that nursed a similar habit in the boy. An accident at play sent him for companionship to books, which ranged from Shakespeare through Bunyan to the Newgate Calendar. In tastes and temperament the boy was father of the man. His first teacher was Worcester, the distinguished lexicographer. In 1813 the family removed to Raymond in Maine, which was then a province of Massachusetts. Hunting and skating on the beautiful Sebago Lake, and fishing in its clear waters, with much desultory reading, went far to constitute his Raymond life. In 1819 he was back in Salem, reading Waverley, preparing for college, and issuing the Spectator, which ran through four numbers, its circulation limited to a single copy. In 1820 he already contemplated the profession of authorship. In 1821 he entered Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine, then recently founded, and better equipped with courage than with a faculty or funds.

On his way to Brunswick, through New Hampshire, he made the acquaintance of a Bowdoin sophomore, Franklin Pierce, one of his best friends thereafter. With Longfellow the poet, a class-mate, he had slight acquaintance, but was remembered by him as 'a handsome, bashful youth, with a low, musical voice.' Longfellow was one of the more studious set, Hawthorne one of the less studious. He was indifferent to sports, but mildly convivial, and his gambling was made a subject of correspondence with his mother by the president of the college. The stakes were fifty cents worth of wine. At the conclusion of his college course we have the reflection of his actual feelings in Fanshawe, his first novel, where he says that in the inmost heart of his hero there was a dream of undying fame. In spite of his dissuasion, his mother and sisters had returned to Salem, and he joined them there in 1825, and entered at once upon a period of seclusion that dragged its slow length along for a full dozen years. He had no intimacy even with his mother and sisters. Often his meals were left outside the door of his room. Most of his walking, except that of his longer excursions, was done after dark. There was a good local library, in which he burrowed deep; and, had he not disdained them, there were intelligence and culture in the fine old town that might have served him well. The colour of his brooding solitude dyed in the wool the texture of the fancies that he wove assiduously, with little hope of making them attractive to his fellow-men.

His resolve to live by his pen must have seemed madness to his immediate family and other relatives, but something masterful in his nature prevailed over such opposition as was made. It is a natural incident of the dim, half-featured life he led that much doubt attaches to the earliest productions of his pen. Seven Tales of my Native Land, written while he was still at college or later, were burned in despair of finding a publisher. That they set the chimney on fire is probably a fanciful suggestion of what they might have done for the popular mind. Fanshawe was published anonymously in 1828, and was received so coldly that Hawthorne's own regard for it was chilled, and he endeavoured to call in and destroy the purchased copies. If the Seven Tales were actually burned, there soon rose from their ashes birds of like feather, certain Provincial Tales, several of which were published in The Token, one of the many annuals of which there was a prolific growth in the fore-part of the nineteenth century. But Goodrich, the publisher of The Token, better known as 'Peter Parley,' was for ten years so friendly to Hawthorne that he deserved better thanks than Hawthorne gave him when at length they parted company. Yet Hawthorne might well feel himself ill-used when he received $100 for Peter Parley's Universal History, and nothing additional when 100,000 copies had been sold. In 1834 he found another vehicle for his stories, the New England Magazine, and further on the Knickerbocker Magazine, the Democratic Review, and other once-flourishing periodicals. If 'he was for a good many years the obscurest man of letters in America,' as he wrote in 1851, it was partly his own fault. Written under several pseudonyms, his sketches made a slighter impression than if they had all gone to the credit of an acknowledged author. The habit of anonymity was so strong with him that he often lapsed into it after a friendly hand had gently snatched away his mask. The depth of his discouragement at this time was so great that Bridge, his best-loved college mate, made a bold push to publish at his own risk a volume of his pieces, and the first volume of Twice-Told Tales appeared in 1837. The response was not eager, but some of the reviews were favourable, Longfellow's the one most prized. The twenty sketches, selected from a much larger number, represented sufficiently the breadth of Hawthorne's narrow range. More than three times as many were added in subsequent volumes, a second series of Twice-Told Tales in 1842, Mosses from an Old Manse in 1846, and The Snow Image and other Tales in 1851. By this time The Scarlet Letter was published, and the minor tales acquired from this a sympathetic vogue.

The short stories reached their term when the first longer one appeared. The whole series is written in a pellucid style which, if not perfect from the start, was, in its most characteristic qualities, the free gift of Heaven. A delicate but sometimes trivial humour played over the surface of these stories or was inherent in their grain. Cheerful they seldom were. But the idea that their pervasive sadness was subjective is easily discredited. The most gloomy flowers of his invention are those which blossomed on the stem of a most happy period, that of his first married years. The problems of sin and evil on which so many of the stories turn were not the fruits of Hawthorne's moral experience, but of his intellectual curiosity. They were the plaything survivals of the Puritan engagement with the dark side of life. The personal aspect was less disclosed in such painful allegories as 'The Birth-Mark' and 'The Bosom Serpent' than in such pleasant pieces as 'The Old Apple-Dealer' and 'Little Annie's Ramble.' The whole series falls into three kinds: those fancifully illuminating some biographical or historical incident, minute descriptions of things seen and heard, and those of an allegorical character. Many tend to this, and in the best examples, such as 'The Snow Image' and 'The Great Carbuncle,' the story and the moral are perfectly assimilated; in others, such as 'The Bosom Serpent,' the assimilation is less perfect or obviously mechanical. Of the fanciful histories 'The Gray Champion' is a notable example. Hawthorne is nowhere more satisfactory than when he attempts least, as in 'Sights from a Steeple' and 'Footprints on the Sea-Shore.' But he is no realist. Though he was a keen observer, everything observed was subject to the transfiguration of his fancy. It is very instructive to compare a certain walk in the American Note-Books with 'Footprints on the Sea-Shore.' The Note-Books, American, English, Italian, are eloquent of Hawthorne's objectivity. They were published after his death, in 1868, 1870, 1871, in the above order.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

After a Drawing by H. Baker.

While Hawthorne was musing on these simpler or remoter things, the circumstances of his life had varied much from the monotony of the period preceding his first collective publication. In 1837 he had fallen in love with Sophia Peabody, and they were married in 1842. She was one of three sisters remarkable for their culture and intelligence. She was nothing if not enthusiastic and ecstatic. A hole in her husband's dressing-gown was 'an appalling vacuum,' and her whole life was pitched to the superlative key; but she and Hawthorne loved each other with a great and never-diminishing affection, and enjoyed the best things of literature and art together. She worshipped him, and he laid upon himself the lowliest duties to make her life less arduous. She was a chronic invalid when Hawthorne met her in her Salem home, but she did not even have to wait, like Mrs Browning, for marriage to effect her cure. The prospect of it was enough. In 1839 Hawthorne's political friends found a place for him in the Boston Custom-House. It was a sharp transition from the imponderables he had been weighing to iron and coal, and salt which was not of the Attic kind. His invention wholly failed, and even at Brook Farm, whither he betook himself when turned out of office by the triumphant Whigs, his literary production was singularly 'barren of new pride;' some children's Biographical Stories and The Grandfather's Chair being the chief gains. Brook Farm was the most idealistic of the American attempts to establish an economic and ethical community. It attracted Hawthorne because his disposition was social despite his isolating temperament. He justly described his short stories as 'attempts to open an intercourse with the world.' His Brook Farm experiment was another and not more successful one. Pitching manure or milking a recalcitrating cow was little to his mind. The social conditions pleased him no better, and he left the community in disgust, having in his year's residence sunk about $1000 of his hard-earned money. His marriage followed soon, and he took his wife to Concord, where they made their home in the 'Old Manse' under whose roof Emerson had written Nature, and close by the bridge of revolutionary fame. The life here would have been idyllic but for the difficulty of making both ends meet. For companions he had Emerson, Thoreau, and Ellery Channing, whom he enjoyed as men while indifferent to their intellectual character. It was easier for Hawthorne to meet people on the plane of his lower tastes than on that of his literary vocation. And so it happened that when he was made surveyor of the Salem Custom-House in 1846 he was more at home with his subordinates and the old salts who hung about the place than he had been with the Concord set. His introduction to The Scarlet Letter described the men and manners of the Custom-House in a fashion little relished by the persons indicated and their friends. When he wrote this he had again been turned out of office, nominally for 'offensive partisanship,' a fault of which he was incapable. He was much embittered by the transaction, fancying that, not having been appointed for political reasons, he should not be dropped for such reasons. But his loss proved to be all men's gain. For three years his mind had been as fruitless as during his Boston weighing and gauging. He now wrote The Scarlet Letter. That genial publisher, James T. Fields, deserves much credit for its ultimate form. He sought Hawthorne out in his moping solitude and charged him with having a story or stories concealed in a set of drawers which stood in his chamber. Hawthorne at first denied the charge, but as Fields was leaving, hurried after him with a manuscript, which was The Scarlet Letter in its original form. It was conceived as a short story, but as the longest one that he had written. Later Fields persuaded him to rewrite it on a larger scale. Published in 1850, it achieved at once a notable success, and soon after Hawthorne, with every expression of contempt, shook off the dust of Salem from his feet for ever.

The Scarlet Letter is one of the most powerful and affecting stories ever written. It is unconscionably dark and sad. The only bright spot in it is the scarlet letter upon Hester's breast. Little Pearl, the offspring of Hester's and Arthur Dimmesdale's sinful passion, sheds but a strange, uncomfortable light upon the scene. The Puritan community is but faintly realised. The few leading characters appear against a background of unnatural dark. Nothing is told us of the rise and progress of the guilty passion. The tragedy, which runs its course less in an outward scene than in the breasts of the three principal dramatis personæ, is the tendency of a secret sin to magnify itself by feeding on the better self; and 'the purifying influence of public confession,' so much insisted on by George Eliot, is the remedial note. If, as some complain, there is no divine forgiveness in the story, there is human pity for the sinful pair. The heart of the reader is more enlisted on their side.

than on that of the Puritan community, and their souls are white compared with that of Roger Chillingworth, the husband of the guilty woman, whose whole being is resolved into a principle of immitigable hatred and revenge.

Public approval renewed Hawthorne's spirit, and the years 1850-53 were the most productive of his whole career. For a part of this time he lived in Lenox, Massachusetts, amidst the beauty of the Berkshire hills and streams, of which, strangely enough, he soon tired. But there he wrote The House of the Seven Gables and, for his children's joy, The Wonder Book and Tanglewood Tales, in which the old Greek myths took on the colour of his fancy for the perennial delight of boys and girls. If The Scarlet Letter continued the tradition of the short stories by being a longer one of their kind, The House of the Seven Gables continued it in being more an aggregation of parts than an organic whole. Hawthorne loved the book because it was his 'Little Annie's Rambles' and such things writ large. Of all his full-grown romances it is the pleasantest, made so by Phoebe Pyncheon's comfortable sweetness. The final cause, determining the movement of the story, is the decay of a family under the stress of an inherited curse, inherent in the Pyncheon house. Here the house serves that symbolic purpose for which Hawthorne must always have one concrete object or another. The characters are seen more 'in the round' than those of The Scarlet Letter. But Judge Pyncheon is less a character than a malicious portrait of the Salem magnate by whom, in the matter of the Custom-House, Hawthorne considered himself wronged.

If Hawthorne's stay at Brook Farm was immediately fruitless, it left seeds in his mind from which sprang The Blithedale Romance, a novel generally relegated to the foot of the series, but one that has staunch friends. It took up into itself much of the scenery and some of the people of the farm, but neither with any aim at verisimilitude. That Zenobia was a faithful portrait of Margaret Fuller, a woman of brilliant and wayward genius, was denied by Hawthorne as flatly as by her friends. There was certainly no portrait of Ripley, the noble founder of the community, in the repulsive character of Hollingsworth, who points the moral of the egotistic reformer who has no human heart by which he lives. One effect of this satire was to mark Hawthorne's divergence in reform matters from the other New England men of letters, and it prepares us to find him simultaneously writing a 'campaign life' of Franklin Pierce, then a candidate for the presidency of the United States in the pro-slavery interest. A more sincere 'campaign life' was never written. It was not written with an eye to the lucrative office which Hawthorne could not but know his friend's election would assure him, but as a token of gratitude for Pierce's unfailing kindness. One of the least of presidents, he was one of the best of friends. He was elected, and he made Hawthorne consul at Liverpool, one of the best positions in his gift. This was in 1853, and he left Concord, where he had been living in a house called 'The Wayside' for a year, and his native country, and took ship for England, hoping he might never return, so out of tune was he with his anti-slavery friends. In Liverpool he hated his business as before in the Boston and Salem seats of custom, but discharged it faithfully, doing his best to right the wrongs of sailors in distress. In England, as in America, his distaste for literary society was pronounced, and he met none of its leaders. His English Note-Books exhibit him as keenly observant of English scenery and life. The best parts of these he condensed in Our Old Home, a book which gave much offence in England, though it had not more than Hawthorne's usual predilection for the seamy side; and more in America, because he dedicated it in a simple, manly fashion to ex-President Pierce. In 1857 he resigned his office and exchanged his 'black and miserable hole' in Liverpool for a residence in Italy of two years' duration. There, at first, he felt more at home than he had ever been, and lived a social life with the Brownings and others. But his daughter fell dangerously sick with Roman fever, and Rome was cursed for him by this experience. 'I bitterly detest it,' he wrote, 'and shall rejoice to bid farewell to it for ever.' Besides, he felt that he must breathe the fogs of England or the east winds of Massachusetts to be again in working trim. Nevertheless he began The Marble Faun, and finished it in England, where it was published in 1860, entitled Transformation. This title gives the idea of the story, whereas the American title indicates the symbol to which Hawthorne fastened his ingenious fancy as to Hester Prynne's scarlet letter and Zenobia's flower. It is a story of the development of spiritual character through experience, Donatello, the faun, being made a man by his destruction of Miriam's besetting fiend. The passage describing the murder and what followed is not excelled in the whole range of Hawthorne's work. But there is a slackened grip on the characters from this psychological moment to the end. Miriam, the principal character, is realised only less powerfully than Zenobia and Hester Prynne. Here as everywhere we are permitted to see the characters only from the point of view of Hawthorne's intense preoccupation. Many whom the story alarms and repels enjoy it for its discursive treatment of Roman pictures, ruins, &c., a more curious than final aspect of the book. There was no such assimilation here as in the Salem work, but a difference from that as in George Eliot's Romola from her Adam Bede.

The interval between his return to America in 1860 and his sudden death, 19th May 1864, was an unhappy time. There was the sense of failing health and failing intellectual power. Four fragmentary studies—The Ancestral Footstep, Septimius Felton, Dr Grimshawe's Secret, and The Dolliver Romance—are all painful gropings on the elusive track of a single idea that could not be firmly caught and held. He had no power to 'see it steadily and see it whole.' Another burden was that of the Civil War and his inability to take either side with heartiness. He went to the front and looked upon the scenes transacted there, wrote of them with a singular detachment, and saw President Lincoln with as little penetration as the dullest in those times. He had lived so long with shadows that he had no vital apprehension of the nation's agony in the birth-throes of a new and better time. There is a striking incongruity between the moonlit or twilight scene and atmosphere of his books and the bright glare of our contemporary life; here so much noise and shouting, there low and whispered tones. But even those who are well pleased with the immediate time should certainly be glad sometimes to draw apart with Hawthorne into a scene so different from that of their habitual life as his mysterious world.

From 'The Great Stone Face.'

[This allegory was suggested by the Old Man of Profile Mountain, in the Franconia Notch of the White Mountains, a remarkable resemblance in the high cliff to a human face.]

It was a happy lot for children to grow up to manhood or womanhood with the Great Stone Face before their eyes, for all the features were noble, and the expression was at once grand and sweet, as if it were the glow of a vast, warm heart, that embraced all mankind in its affections, and had room for more. It was an education only to look at it. According to the belief of many people, the valley owed much of its fertility to this benign aspect that was continually beaming over it, illuminating the clouds and infusing its tenderness into the sunshine. As we began with saying, a mother and her little boy sat at their cottage door, gazing at the Great Stone Face, and talking about it. The child's name was Ernest.

'Mother,' said he, while the Titanic visage smiled on him, 'I wish that it could speak, for it looks so very kindly that its voice must needs be pleasant. If I were to see a man with such a face I should love him dearly.'

'If an old prophecy should come to pass,' answered his mother, 'we may see a man, some time or other, with exactly such a face as that.'

'What prophecy do you mean, dear mother?' eagerly inquired Ernest. 'Pray, tell me all about it!'

So his mother told him a story that her own mother had told to her when she herself was younger than little Ernest; a story, not of things that were past, but of what was yet to come; a story, nevertheless, so very old that even the Indians, who formerly inhabited this valley, had heard it from their forefathers, to whom, as they affirmed, it had been murmured by the mountain-streams, and whispered by the wind among the tree-tops. The purport was, that, at some future day, a child should be born hereabouts who was destined to become the greatest and noblest personage of his time, and whose countenance in manhood should bear an exact resemblance to the Great Stone Face. Not a few old-fashioned people, and young ones likewise, in the ardour of their hopes, still cherished an enduring faith in this old prophecy. But others, who had seen more of the world, had watched and waited till they were weary, and had beheld no man with such a face, nor any man that proved to be much greater or nobler than his neighbours, concluded it to be nothing but an idle tale. At all events, the great man of the prophecy had not yet appeared.

'O mother, dear mother!' cried Ernest, clapping his hands above his head, 'I do hope that I shall live to see him!'

His mother was an affectionate and thoughtful woman, and felt that it was wisest not to discourage the generous hopes of her little boy; so she only said to him, 'Perhaps you may.'

[The story describes Mr Gathergold and a great general and statesman for whom a resemblance to the Great Stone Face was claimed, and finally a poet in whom Ernest himself imagined a likeness. But the poet protested that he did not live the poems that he wrote.]

The poet spoke sadly, and his eyes were dim with tears. So, likewise, were those of Ernest.

At the hour of sunset, as had long been his frequent custom, Ernest was to discourse to an assemblage of the neighbouring inhabitants in the open air. He and the poet, arm in arm, still talking together as they went along, proceeded to the spot. It was a small nook among the hills, with a gray precipice behind, the stern front of which was relieved by the pleasant foliage of many creeping plants, that made a tapestry for the naked rock, by hanging their festoons from all its rugged angles. At a small elevation above the ground, set in a rich framework of verdure, there appeared a niche, spacious enough to admit a human figure, with freedom for such gestures as spontaneously accompany earnest thought and genuine emotion. Into this natural pulpit Ernest ascended, and threw a look of familiar kindness around upon his audience. They stood, or sat, or reclined upon the grass, as seemed good to each, with the departing sunshine falling obliquely over them, and mingling its subdued cheerfulness with the solemnity of a grove of ancient trees, beneath and amid the boughs of which the golden rays were constrained to pass. In another direction was seen the Great Stone Face, with the same cheer, combined with the same solemnity, in its benignant aspect.

Ernest began to speak, giving to the people of what was in his heart and mind. His words had power, because they accorded with his thoughts; and his thoughts had reality and depth, because they harmonised with the life which he had always lived. It was not mere breath that this preacher uttered; they were the words of life, because a life of good deeds and holy love was melted into them. Pearls, pure and rich, had been dissolved into this precious draught. The poet, as he listened, felt that the being and character of Ernest were a nobler strain of poetry than he had ever written. His eyes glistening with tears, he gazed reverentially at the venerable man, and said within himself that never was there an aspect so worthy of a prophet and a sage as that mild, sweet, thoughtful countenance, with the glory of white hair diffused about it. At a distance, but distinctly to be seen, high up in the golden light of the setting sun, appeared the Great Stone Face, with hoary mists around it, like the white hairs around the brow of Ernest. Its look of grand beneficence seemed to embrace the world. At that moment, in sympathy with a thought which he was about to utter, the face of Ernest assumed a grandeur of expression, so imbued with benevolence that the poet, by an irresistible impulse, threw his arms aloft and shouted, 'Behold! Behold! Ernest is himself the likeness of the Great Stone Face!'

Then all the people looked, and saw that what the deep-sighted poet said was true. The prophecy was fulfilled. But Ernest, having finished what he had to say, took the poet's arm, and walked slowly homeward, still hoping that some wiser and better man than himself would by-and-by appear, bearing a resemblance to the Great Stone Face.

The Minister's Vigil.

Walking in the shadow of a dream, as it were, and perhaps actually under the influence of a species of somnambulism, Mr Dimmesdale reached the spot where, now so long since, Hester Prynne had lived through her first hour of public ignominy. The same platform or scaffold, black and weather-stained with the storm or sunshine of seven long years, and footworn, too, with the tread of many culprits who had since ascended it, remained standing beneath the balcony of the meeting-house. The minister went up the steps.

It was an obscure night of early May. An unvaried pall of cloud muffled the whole expanse of sky from zenith to horizon. If the same multitude which had stood as eye-witnesses while Hester Prynne sustained her punishment could now have been summoned forth, they would have discerned no face above the platform, nor hardly the outline of a human shape, in the dark gray of the midnight. But the town was all asleep. There was no peril of discovery. The minister might stand there, if it so pleased him, until morning should redden in the east, without other risk than that the dank and chill night-air would creep into his frame, and stiffen his joints with rheumatism, and clog his throat with catarrh and cough; thereby defrauding the expectant audience of to-morrow's prayer and sermon. No eye could see him, save that ever-wakeful one which had seen him in his closet wielding the bloody scourge. Why, then, had he come hither? Was it but the mockery of penitence? A mockery, indeed, but in which his soul trifled with itself! A mockery at which angels blushed and wept, while fiends rejoiced with jeering laughter! He had been driven hither by the impulse of that Remorse which dogged him everywhere, and whose own sister and closely linked companion was that Cowardice which invariably drew him back, with her tremulous grip, just when the other impulse had hurried him to the verge of a disclosure. Poor, miserable man! what right had infirmity like his to burden itself with crime? Crime is for the iron-nerved, who have their choice either to endure it, or, if it press too hard, to exert their fierce and savage strength for a good purpose, and fling it off at once! This feeble and most sensitive of spirits could do neither, yet continually did one thing or another, which intertwined, in the same inextricable knot, the agony of Heaven-defying guilt and vain repentance.

And thus, while standing on the scaffold, in this vain show of expiation, Mr Dimmesdale was overcome with a great horror of mind, as if the universe were gazing at a scarlet token on his naked breast, right over his heart. On that spot, in very truth, there was, and there had long been, the gnawing and poisonous tooth of bodily pain. Without any effort of his will, or power to restrain himself, he shrieked aloud; an outcry that went pealing through the night, and was beaten back from one house to another, and reverberated from the hills in the background, as if a company of devils, detecting so much misery and terror in it, had made a plaything of the sound, and were bandying it to and fro.

'It is done!' muttered the minister, covering his face with his hands. 'The whole town will awake, and hurry forth, and find me here!'

But it was not so. The shriek had perhaps sounded with a far greater power to his own startled ears than it actually possessed. The town did not awake; or, if it did, the drowsy slumberers mistook the cry either for something frightful in a dream, or for the noise of witches, whose voices, at that period, were often heard to pass over the settlements or lonely cottages, as they rode with Satan through the air. The clergyman, therefore, hearing no symptoms of disturbance, uncovered his eyes and looked about him. . . .

Shortly afterwards the like grisly sense of the humorous again stole in among the solemn phantoms of his thought. He felt his limbs growing stiff with the unaccustomed chilliness of the night, and doubted whether he should be able to descend the steps of the scaffold. Morning would break, and find him there. The neighbourhood would begin to rouse itself. The earliest riser, coming forth in the dim twilight, would perceive a vaguely defined figure aloft on the place of shame, and, half-crazed betwixt alarm and curiosity, would go, knocking from door to door, summoning all the people to behold the ghost—as he needs must think it—of some defunct transgressor. A dusky tumult would flap its wings from one house to another. . . . All people, in a word, would come stumbling over their thresholds, and turning up their amazed and horror-stricken visages around the scaffold. Whom would they discern there, with the red eastern light upon his brow? Whom but the Reverend Arthur Dimmesdale, half-frozen to death, overwhelmed with shame, and standing where Hester Prynne had stood!

Carried away by the grotesque horror of this picture, the minister, unawares, and to his own infinite alarm, burst into a great peal of laughter. It was immediately responded to by a light, airy, childish laugh, in which, with a thrill of the heart—but he knew not whether of exquisite pain or pleasure as acute—he recognised the tones of little Pearl.

'Pearl! Little Pearl!' cried he, after a moment's pause; then, suppressing his voice—'Hester! Hester Prynne! Are you there?'

'Yes, it is Hester Prynne!' she replied, in a tone of surprise; and the minister heard her footsteps approaching from the side-walk, along which she had been passing. 'It is I, and my little Pearl.'

'Whence come you, Hester?' asked the minister. 'What sent you hither?'

'I have been watching at a death-bed,' answered Hester Prynne—'at Governor Winthrop's death-bed, and have taken his measure for a robe, and am now going homeward to my dwelling.'

'Come up hither, Hester, thou and little Pearl,' said the Reverend Mr Dimmesdale. 'Ye have both been here before, but I was not with you. Come up hither once again, and we will stand all three together.'

She silently ascended the steps, and stood on the platform, holding little Pearl by the hand. The minister felt for the child's other hand, and took it. The moment that he did so there came what seemed a tumultuous rush of new life, other life than his own, pouring like a torrent into his heart, and hurrying through all his veins, as if the mother and the child were communicating their vital warmth to his half-torpid system. The three formed an electric chain.

(From The Scarlet Letter.)

Hawthorne's complete works are published in Boston and New York in several editions: 'Little Classic,' 25 vols.; 'Riverside,' 15 vols.; 'Standard Library,' 15 vols. The last two editions contain the biography, Nathaniel Hawthorne and his Wife, by his son Julian. Other biographies are Henry James's (1880); George Parsons Lathrop's (1876); M. D. Conway's (1890); Memories of Hawthorne, by Rose Hawthorne Lathrop (1897); Hawthorne and his Circle, by Julian Hawthorne (1904); and, for critical analysis, Nathaniel Hawthorne, by George E. Woodberry in 'American Men of Letters' (1902). More recent books are by Lloyd Morris (1928), Newton Arvin (1931), and Hildegard Hawthorne (1933).

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

Abraham Lincoln (1809-65), President of the United States at the crisis of his country's fortunes, rose nobly to the occasion. His other services to the Republic need no comment in this place; but though he was as far as possible removed from what usually constitutes the man of letters, he has earned to all time a place in the literature of his country by his letters, his State papers, his speeches, and especially by his two inaugural addresses and the address, quoted below, at the dedication of the Gettysburg National Cemetery in November 1863.

The Gettysburg Address.

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honoured dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

William Wetmore Story (1819-95), son of an eminent judge, publicist, and law professor, was born at Salem, Massachusetts, and trained for the Bar, but went to Italy (1848) and became a sculptor; and his writings rank him among the American litterateurs—besides poems, Roba di Roma (1862), The Tragedy of Nero (1875), The Castle of St Angelo (1877), He and She (1883), Fiammetta (1885), Conversations in a Studio, Excursions (1891), and A Poet's Portfolio (1894). The Life by Henry James is a masterpiece (1903).

Charles Godfrey Leland (1824-1903), destined to be known to fame as 'Hans Breitmann,' was born of Quaker parentage in Philadelphia, graduated at Princeton, and continued his studies at Heidelberg, Munich, and Paris. He was admitted to the Philadelphia Bar in 1851, but turned to journalism; and residing chiefly in England and Italy from 1869 on, made a special study of the Gypsies, the fruits of which appeared between 1873 and 1891 in four important and much-discussed works. It was in 1871 that the famous Hans Breitmann Ballads, in the grotesque mixture of German and American-English known as Pennsylvania Dutch, first appeared; they were extraordinarily popular in America and Britain, and were constantly quoted, so that scraps of them are permanent parts of conversational English even now. A continuation in 1895, however, fell flat. Other works of Leland's, some of them results of serious research not unmingled with too confident speculation, are The Poetry and Mystery of Dreams (1855); Meister Karl's Sketch-Book (1855); Legends of Birds (1864); Egyptian Sketch-Book (1873); Fu-Sang, or the Chinese Discovery of America (1875); Algonquin Legends (1884); Etruscan-Roman Remains in Tradition (1892); a translation in prose and verse of Heine's works; a series of art manuals; Legends of Florence (1895); and Flaxius, or Leaves from the Life of an Immortal, a humorous melange of Italian folk-lore, ancient history, and prophecy; and Memoirs (2 vols. 1893). See Life by Mrs Joseph Pennell (2 vols. 1906).

George William Curtis (1824-92), born in Providence, Rhode Island, had a short experience of Brook Farm, and after four years in Europe (1846-50), joined the staff of the New York Tribune, and was one of the editors of Putnam's Monthly from 1852 to 1869. He commenced the 'Editor's Easy-Chair' papers in Harper's Monthly in 1853, and became principal leader-writer for Harper's Weekly on its establishment in 1857. His famous story of New York life, Trumps (1862), and most of his books appeared first in these journals. Prue and I (1856) was of sweet domesticity. His Nile Notes of a Howadji (1851) and The Howadji in Syria (1852) were bright—and light—impressions of his travels; Lotus-Eating (1852) was a series of letters from fashionable watering-places. More famous in their day were The Potiphar Papers (1853), satires on the pretentious life of New York. He was a strong anti-slavery orator and publicist, and a zealous writer in the cause of Civil Service reform. See Lives of him by Winter (1893), Chadwick (1893), and Cary (1894).

Edgar Allan Poe,

poet, romancer, and critic, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, 19th January 1809. His grandfather was General David Poe, a distinguished Maryland soldier of the Revolutionary War. His father and mother were actors of a travelling company which, spending three years in Boston, made possible the accident of his birth in a city which the grown man could not, as his dying mother bade him, love. The mother's talent and character were superior to the father's; poverty and ill-health they shared more evenly. The mother died in 1811; the father soon after, probably. Here for the boy was, apparently, singular good fortune. He was informally adopted by a Mr Allan of Richmond, Virginia, a tobacco merchant who had no children of his own. From 1815 to 1820 the Allans lived in England, and the boy, though injured by their indulgence, had good schooling at the Manor House School at Stoke Newington, and in Richmond from 1820 to 1826, when he entered the University of Virginia. The death in 1824 of a lady who had been particularly kind to him, and to whom he was devotedly attached, was the occasion of his first melancholy brooding upon death, the fixed idea of his life. At the university his habits were at once studious and convivial; he excelled in Latin; also in gambling—so much so that his guardian refused to pay his 'debts of honour,' totalling, it is said, between 2000 and 3000 dollars. Thereupon Poe ran away to Boston, where, in 1827, he published Tamerlane and other Poems, a tiny book of forty pages in an edition of forty copies, as if prescient of the narrow chances of future bibliophiles. He concealed his name from his twoscore public and also from his publisher, as he had done a little earlier when enlisting in the United States army, where for two years he did himself no discredit. Mrs Allan dying in 1829, his quarrel with Mr Allan was superficially made up, and he was sent to the West Point Military Academy, on his way visiting Baltimore, and while there publishing Al Aaraaf, Tamerlane, and Minor Poems. It contained five poems which, in addition to three in the Boston bibelot, grew at length into something lovely under his pruning hand. At West Point, where he entered 1st July 1830, he did well in mathematics and other studies, but was so deliberately neglectful of his military duties that he was expelled from the Academy in March 1831, 'the contriver of his own dishonour.' While he neglected his duties the poetic fire had burned, and a parting subscription of the students enabled him to print, if not publish, a new volume of poems. It was not what the students expected—sparks from their burnt-out revelries—but his earlier poems in their first revision, with some new ones, among these the perfect 'Israfel.' This volume, like its two thin-bodied heralds, was long since worth ten times its weight in gold to the collectors of rare books.

The next two years are vaguer for the biographer than Poe's poetical geography. Poe himself filled them with an imaginary journey to Russia. Probably they were spent in Baltimore with his aunt Mrs Clemm, the good angel of his life. In 1833 he entered gaily on that literary career which was to have so many sharp vicissitudes, so much more of disappointment than of encouragement and assured success. Answering an advertisement for a $100 prize story and poem, he won the former with his M.S. found in a Bottle, and would have won the latter with his Coliseum could both prizes have been given to one person. The lucky story has now a place among the best of his stories of matter-of-fact impossible adventure, his lowest rank except the would-be humorous.

In September 1835 the struggling poet¹ took out a license of marriage with his cousin Virginia Clemm, a lovely child who had just turned thirteen. For some years his pet, she had come to worship him, and he now responded to her worship with an affection that was without any shadow of turning until her melancholy end. It is doubtful whether there was a formal marriage in 1835, seeing that a new license was taken out in 1836 in Richmond, followed by a marriage ceremony. Poe had returned to Richmond in 1835, and there for a time his prospects as editor of the Southern Literary Messenger were bright. Two volumes of his collected works are filled with his two years' work on the Messenger, including some of his most memorable things. His industry must have been remarkable, and now, as always, he had an exacting conscience for his work, in singular contrast with the weakness of his tempted will. His employer was soon warning him of the danger of drinking before breakfast, so that the loss of his position in 1837 was not wholly mysterious. After a brief stay in New York, during which he published the Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym, another of his matter-of-fact impossibilities, he went to Philadelphia, a better literary market, and remained there six years, in the struggle for a living doing such doubtful hack-work as the Conchologist's First Book, while still the stream of his creative and critical talent flowed into every channel it could find. Making a good fight with his proclivity to drink, for some four years he lived a more temperate life than ever before or after in his adult years. Of various engagements that with Graham's Magazine was the most stable, and did for it what his connection with the Richmond Messenger had done for that—bringing it thousands of subscribers and wide popularity. It was mainly as a critic that he made his mark; less but increasingly as a writer of tales; hardly at all as a poet. His early poems, however, were apt to reappear in the tales and to furnish their points of departure, as 'The Haunted Palace' in his most perfect tale, The Fall of the House of Usher, and 'Ligeia' in the powerful but ghastly tale of the same name. Here was legitimate economy, but no one ever utilised his 'funeral baked meats' more openly. He warmed them over with sublime assurance that, however served, they made a tempting dish. The repetend, his favourite poetical device, was central to the manner of his literary and personal life, which had much that was highly significant and much 'damnable iteration.' In 1840 Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque, in two volumes, bound up a full sheaf of his tales, including many of the best but not any of the ratiocinative kind which The Golden Bug was soon to usher in. Meantime, proud and ambitious, he fretted in subordination to his inferiors and aspired to have a magazine of his own, the Penn or Stylus, neither of which ever came to birth. Could he have kept his besetting sin at bay, his success as a journalist, already enviable, would have become one of the proudest of his time; but this he could not do, especially after the beginning, with a broken blood-vessel, of his child-wife's fatal illness in 1842. This filled him with a passionate despair. Though he was never an habitual drunkard, his periods of indulgence now became more frequent, each marked by wild excitement, followed by horrible lassitude and depression. The conflicting accounts of his character and behaviour mark the difference between Philip drunk and Philip sober. The latter was gracious, gentle, and refined; the former bitter, sour, contentious, the victim of degenerate will. To drink he added opium, which, if it sometimes touched his page to more ethereal fancy, exacted fearful penalties. Rumours of 'other vices' are without foundation. Even his most sensuous imagination was never sensual.

¹ His fosterfather, John Allan, had died in March 1834, leaving a widow and children of his own (having married again in 1830). Poe was not mentioned in his will. The story of the stormy relations between the dreamy young poet and the practical Scots tobacco exporter was first revealed in detail in Edgar Allan Poe Letters till now Unpublished (1925), which reproduces in facsimile Poe's letters (1826-33) to his patron, who finally disowned him in 1831, enraged beyond forgiveness by a most abusive letter.

In 1844 he removed to New York, where his principal editorial connection was with the Broadway Journal, of which for a short and brilliant period he was the nominal owner. In 1845 he entered with The Raven on a second period of poetical production, after a fallow period of fifteen years' duration, except for the refashioning of his early crudities. The Raven did more for his reputation than all his reviews and tales. The Bells (1847) chimed in, and other poems followed, of less popular character, but of more inwardness and more exquisite beauty. From 1846 his health was utterly broken, and his poverty was made a subject of public notice and relief. Those who wonder at his chronic impecuniosity and inveterate borrowing should remember the miserable pay he got for his best work. The good aunt kept his home as neat as it was bare, the neatness a necessity of his personal refinement, as was the delicate hand in which he always wrote, as if never putting pen to paper when fallen from his best estate. He always had a genius for attracting friends; too frequently disappointing them and wearing out their kindly disposition. In January 1847 the crowning misery befell, the death of poor little Virginia. He had then two years to live. These he so conducted that the most charitable, and probably the truest, explanation is that drink, opium, and sorrow had shaken sovereign reason from her seat. If the long-drawn futility of his pseudo-scientific Eureka does not require this construction, what does is his vain insistence on a first edition of fifty thousand copies and his claim for its worthless and yet powerful lucubrations of a revolutionary importance equal to Newton's theory of gravitation. From his sorrow for his lost Virginia he passed quickly to a series of sentimental consolations, looking here and there to marriage, and a union of sordid convenience had been negotiated in Richmond when a fatal lapse in Baltimore betrayed him into the hands of certain vile politicians who, drugging him for their base uses, induced a brain-fever of which he died, 7th October 1849. In the city of his first literary triumph he was followed to his grave by five persons, one of whom was the officiating clergyman.

His mournful death effected his entrance on a posthumous career which has been marked by stranger vicissitudes than those of his life. The details of that life have been contested in many particulars; its general character no less. A host of petty critics, with others of great competency, have endeavoured to assign his rank, with results ranging through wide degrees of difference. The principal line of cleavage is between those who value most his poems and those who value most his tales, but some have set the highest value on his critical writings. These made his widest reputation in their day, but they have little value now except for the literary historian. If they were not the best of their kind in America when written, they were near to that, while marred by envy, favouritism, and a distorting personal equation. He made himself the measure of things. What he could not do must not be done. Hence (pace Homer) a long poem could not be written, nor (pace Scott) a long story. Didacticism and plagiarism were the Paynim against whom he tilted with the grimmest joy of battle. Of the former he was wholly innocent; of the latter often guiltier than those whom he assailed, while in his bravery of recondite learning he was frequently the ingenious charlatan.

Passing from his criticism to his tales, we pass from transient reputation to enduring fame. Their style commends them all, while, bettering with time, it is, at its best, far below the level of Hawthorne's more flexible medium. They exhibit the tendency to narrowness of range and iteration, which mark all the products of his mind, far less than the poems. A sentiment of horror is their prevailing trait, engagement with death and ruin running parallel thereto, the idea worked out with a concentration that subordinates every detail to the desired effect. In each kind there are various degrees, and the kinds have an ascension of their own. The lowest is the humorous, in which Poe comes near to making us laugh at him rather than with him. Let Duc de Omelette witness as a forlorn example. Of biting irony he had enough. Higher up we have the psychology of intensive fear and horror in such things as Berenice, Ligeia, and the House of Usher. He is at his best when he comes nearest, as in the last of these, to working in Hawthorne's spirit. In his great conscience stories, with William Wilson at their head, his experience of the pains of conscience does not serve him so well as Hawthorne's impersonal imagination. He was more external than Hawthorne, more mechanical, but such a master of the curiously horrible as Hawthorne never was. On the other hand, he descended into details of physical horror from which Hawthorne's finer spirit spontaneously recoiled; and while Hawthorne's taste was inferior to his fancy and imagination, Poe's was so to a more pronounced degree. With a florid sensuousness of decoration, as in Landor's Cottage and The Domain of Arnheim, compared with which Hawthorne's scenes were gray and cold, there were lapses into prettiness of word and phrase which for Hawthorne were impossible, as if the fumes of that censor which Poe swung for a swarm of feeble poetasters had dulled his sense of their defects.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

After a Photograph by Whitehurst.

But, after all, it is as a poet that Poe enjoys the highest fame, and that which has the promise of most permanence. The meagreness of his product and the narrowness of his range may challenge this opinion, but it is that the tendency of criticism is clear and strong. Hardly more than a dozen of his poems have survived the winnowing of time, and these, with two or three exceptions, are variations of a single theme, the death of a beautiful and beloved woman. Poe formally announced this subject as the highest subject of the poet's art, seeking, perhaps unconsciously, a justification of his contracted range. That he was more artist than poet is suggested by the carefulness with which, for lack of novel germs, he matured his early fruit. Reverent of his gift, he did not force his mood, however sorely he needed the money that his poorest verses would have brought. His work, then, was at once the product of a sacred spontaneity and an exigent elaboration. The poet gave the impulse and the artist gave the form. Israfel stands quite alone among his early poems as from the first so perfect as to require little change. The others in their first crudity gave meagre promise of their ultimate perfection. Even their musical quality, commonly thought inevitable, was carefully wrought out, and it now appears that Poe's ear was defective, and that his lines were made musical only by many revisions. That he was bent on making them so at all hazards is plain. He sacrificed sense to sound, secured by meaningless alliterations. There is little thought in his poems; but there is what he intended, a sentiment, an emotion, to which everything is subordinate—a sentiment of mystery, an emotion of infinite loss and horror and regret. The resurgence of his lyrical gift in 1845, after long silence, was one of the strangest incidents of his unhappy life. Five notable poems were its fruit: The Raven, The Bells, Ulalume, For Annie, Annabel Lee. They represent fuller if less exquisite moments than the early group. We are not to believe that The Raven was written in the wilful and mechanical fashion described in The Philosophy of Composition any more than in his actual 'descent into the maelstrom.' Inferior to Israfel and others, it stands alone in the quaint persistence of its pressure on the note of irremediable woe. The Bells has, perhaps naturally, a metallic ring which contrasts strangely with Ulalume, in which we seem to have the very step and moan of long-drawn misery. To Annie gives us the recurrent theme of life in death in its most poignant manner, while Annabel Lee, published almost simultaneously with his death, sounds his most human note, as if 'the fever called living' were 'over at last,' and he were entering on a saner and a sweeter life. But it is one more regret for the lost delight of peerless womanhood. It was Poe's belief that beauty was a soothing influence. But the beauty of his monodies disturbs and lacerates our minds. Their haunting melodies are not to be escaped; but they sound no note of health or joy. We admire the brilliant power, the skilful art, but we are never comforted and cheered. Fruits of a sombre genius and a sad experience, his works make their appeal especially to those who can hardly find symbols too melancholy for their mental gloom, and to those who are so overstocked with happiness that they like to play with misery and to consort with ghosts and ghouls.

To appreciate Poe's power and range as a romancer, one should read four of his best stories in four kinds: intensive horror, Fall of the House of Usher; outraged and retributive conscience, William Wilson; ingenious ratiocination, Murders in the Rue Morgue or Mystery of Marie Roget; pseudo-scientific adventure, The Descent into the Maelstrom. These cannot be effectively abridged; but nothing better renders the habitual spirit of his prose work than the 'Overture' called 'Silence,' quoted below. The Raven is Poe's best-known poem, his masterpiece of intensive iteration, but its present use would be exclusive of all other specimens, and consequently it has seemed best to renounce it in order that a more general view may be obtained.

From 'Silence: a Fable.'

'Listen to me,' said the Demon, as he placed his hand upon my head. 'The region of which I speak is a dreary region in Libya, by the borders of the river Zaire. And there is no quiet there, nor silence. . . .

'It was night, and the rain fell; and, falling, it was rain, but, having fallen, it was blood. And I stood in the morass among the tall lilies, and the rain fell upon my head—and the lilies sighed one unto the other in the solemnity of their desolation. And, all at once, the moon arose through the thin ghastly mist, and was crimson in colour. And mine eyes fell upon a huge gray rock which stood by the shore of the river, and was lighted by the light of the moon. And the rock was gray, and ghastly, and tall,—and the rock was gray. Upon its front were characters engraven in the stone; and I walked through the morass of water-lilies, until I came close unto the shore, that I might read the characters upon the stone. But I could not decipher them. And I was going back into the morass, when the moon shone with a fuller red, and I turned and looked again upon the rock, and upon the characters;—and the characters were DESOLATION. And I looked upwards, and there stood a man upon the summit of the rock; and I hid myself among the water-lilies that I might discover the actions of the man. And the man was tall and stately in form, and was wrapped up from his shoulders to his feet in the toga of old Rome. And the outlines of his figure were indistinct—but his features were the features of a deity; for the mantle of the night, and of the mist, and of the moon, and of the dew, had left uncovered the features of his face. And his brow was lofty with thought, and his eye wild with care; and, in the few furrows upon his cheek, I read the fables of sorrow, and weariness, and disgust with mankind, and a longing after solitude. And the man sat upon the rock, and leaned his head upon his hand, and looked out upon the desolation. He looked down into the low unquiet shrubbery, and up into the tall primeval trees, and up higher at the rustling heaven, and into the crimson moon. And I lay close within shelter of the lilies, and observed the actions of the man. And the man trembled in the solitude;—but the night waned, and he sat upon the rock. . . .

'Then I grew angry and cursed, with the curse of silence, the river, and the lilies, and the wind, and the forest, and the heaven, and the thunder, and the sighs of the water-lilies. And they became accursed, and were still. And the moon ceased to totter up its pathway to heaven—and the thunder died away—and the lightning did not flash—and the clouds hung motionless—and the waters sank to their level and remained—and the trees ceased to rock—and the water-lilies sighed no more—and the murmur was heard no longer from among them, nor any shadow of sound throughout the vast illimitable desert. And I looked upon the characters of the rock, and they were changed;—and the characters were SILENCE. And mine eyes fell upon the countenance of the man, and his countenance was wan with terror. And, hurriedly, he raised his head from his hand, and stood forth upon the rock and listened. But there was no voice throughout the vast illimitable desert, and the characters upon the rock were SILENCE. And the man shuddered, and turned his face away, and fled afar off, in haste, so that I beheld him no more.'

To Helen.

[Written in Poe's boyhood to the beautiful friend whose death profoundly affected Poe's imagination.]

Helen, thy beauty is to me
Like those Nicéan barks of yore
That gently, o'er a perfumed sea,
The weary way-worn wanderer bore
To his own native shore.

On desperate seas long wont to roam,
Thy hyacinth hair, thy classic face,
Thy Naiad airs have brought me home
To the glory that was Greece,
And the grandeur that was Rome.

Lo, in yon brilliant window-niche
How statue-like I see thee stand,
The agate lamp within thy hand,
Ah, Psyche, from the regions which Are holy-land!

Israfel.

In Heaven a spirit doth dwell
'Whose heart-strings are a lute;'
None sing so wildly well
As the angel Israfel,
And the giddy stars (so legends tell)
Ceasing their hymns, attend the spell
Of his voice all mute.

Tottering above
In her highest noon,
The enamoured moon
Blushes with love,
While, to listen, the red levin
(With the rapid Pleiades, even,
Which were seven),
Pauses in Heaven.

And they say (the starry choir
And the other listening things)
That Israfel's fire
Is owing to that lyre

By which he sits and sings—
The trembling living wire
Of those unusual strings.

But the skies that angel trod,
Where deep thoughts are a duty—
Where Love's a grown-up God—
Where the Houri glances are Imbued with all the beauty
Which we worship in a star.

Therefore, thou art not wrong,
Israfeli, who despisest
An unimpassioned song;
To thee the laurels belong,
Best bard, because the wisest!
Merrily live, and long!

The ecstasies above
With thy burning measures suit—
Thy grief, thy joy, thy hate, thy love,
With the fervour of thy lute—
Well may the stars be mute!

Yes, Heaven is thine; but this
Is a world of sweets and sour;
Our flowers are merely—flowers,
And the shadow of thy perfect bliss
Is the sunshine of ours.

If I could dwell
Where Israfel
Hath dwelt, and he where I,
He might not sing so wildly well
A mortal melody,
While a bolder note than this might swell
From my lyre within the sky.

The Haunted Palace.

In the greenest of our valleys
By good angels tenanted,
Once a fair and stately palace—
Radiant palace—reared its head.
In the monarch Thought's dominion—
It stood there!
Never seraph spread a pinion
Over fabric half so fair!

Banners yellow, glorious, golden,
On its roof did float and flow
(This—all this—was in the olden Time long ago),
And every gentle air that dallied,
In that sweet day,
Along the ramparts plumed and pallid,
A winged odour went away.

Wanderers in that happy valley,
Through two luminous windows, saw
Spirits moving musically,
To a lute's well-tuned law,
Round about a throne where, sitting (Porphyrogene!)
In state his glory well befitting,
The ruler of the realm was seen.

And all with pearl and ruby glowing
Was the fair palace door,
Through which came flowing, flowing, flowing,
And sparkling evermore,

A troop of Echoes, whose sweet duty
Was but to sing,
In voices of surpassing beauty,
The wit and wisdom of their king.

But evil things, in robes of sorrow,
Assailed the monarch's high estate.
(Ah, let us mourn!—for never morrow Shall dawn upon him desolate!)
And round about his home, the glory
That blushed and bloomed
Is but a dim-remembered story
Of the old time entombed.

And travellers now, within that valley,
Through the red-litten windows see
Vast forms, that move fantastically
To a discordant melody,
While, like a ghastly rapid river,
Through the pale door
A hideous throng rush out for ever
And laugh—but smile no more.

Annabel Lee.

It was many and many a year ago,
In a kingdom by the sea,
That a maiden there lived whom you may know
By the name of Annabel Lee.
And this maiden she lived with no other thought
Than to love and be loved by me.

I was a child and she was a child
In this kingdom by the sea:
But we loved with a love that was more than love—
I and my Annabel Lee;
With a love that the winged seraphs of heaven
Coveted her and me.

And this was the reason that, long ago,
In this kingdom by the sea,
A wind blew out of a cloud, chilling
My beautiful Annabel Lee
So that her high-born kinsman came
And bore her away from me,
To shut her up in a sepulchre
In this kingdom by the sea.

The angels, not half so happy in heaven,
Went envying her and me—
Yes! that was the reason (as all men know,
In this kingdom by the sea)
That the wind came out of the cloud one night,
Chilling and killing my Annabel Lee.

But our love it was stronger by far than the love
Of those who were older than we—
Of many far wiser than we—
And neither the angels in heaven above,
Nor the demons down under the sea,
Can ever dissever my soul from the soul
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee:

For the moon never beams without bringing me dreams
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee;
And the stars never rise, but I feel the bright eyes
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee;
And so, all the night-tide, I lie down by the side
Of my darling—my darling—my life and my bride,
In the sepulchre there by the sea,
In her tomb by the sounding sea.

To One in Paradise.

Thou wast that all to me, love,
For which my soul did pine—
A green isle in the sea, love,
A fountain and a shrine,
All wreathed with fairy fruits and flowers,
And all the flowers were mine.

Ah, dream too bright to last !
Ah, starry Hope ! that didst arise
But to be overcast !
A voice from out the Future cries,
'On ! on !'—but o'er the Past
(Dim gulf !) my spirit hovering lies
Mute, motionless, aghast !

For, alas ! alas ! with me
The light of Life is o'er !
'No more—no more—no more—'
(Such language holds the solemn sea
To the sands upon the shore)
Shall bloom the thunder-blasted tree,
Or the stricken eagle soar !

And all my days are trances,
And all my nightly dreams
Are where thy dark eye glances,³
And where thy footstep gleams—
In what ethereal dances,
By what eternal streams.

There are several excellent editions of Poe's works ; one (10 vols.) edited by G. E. Woodberry and E. C. Stedman ; another (10 vols.) by C. F. Richardson ; a third, by J. A. Harrison (17 vols. including a Life and Letters). The first has a good biographical introduction, and special introductions to the poetry, criticism, and tales. Professor Richardson makes large claims for Poe as a 'world-author.' A thoroughly good Life is that of G. E. Woodberry (2 vols. 1909). An English Life by J. H. Ingram (1880) is a generous apology and glowing eulogy, disfigured by much inaccuracy in its biographical details. See also French studies by E. Lauvrière (1911), C. Maclair (1925) ; the Edgar Allan Poe Centenary Tribute (ed. by H. E. Buchholz, 1910) ; a critical study by A. Ransome (1915), and works by Krutch (1926) and Lloyd (1931).

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

Oliver Wendell Holmes,

humourist, essayist, novelist, and poet, was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, 29th August 1809, a year of splendid births. The lines of his descent from Dutch Wendells and Massachusetts governors, Dudley and Bradstreet, and the good Quincy stock ('Dorothy Q' his proudest boast), were a matter of real pride to him, embroidered with some humorous affectation. His father was the minister of the First Parish Church in Cambridge, the seat of Harvard College, and his fine old house was well furnished with historical associations. Here General Ward had made his headquarters before Washington took charge of the Revolutionary army in 1775. Here the defence of Bunker Hill was planned, and here Joseph Warren, pre-eminently the hero of that defence, spent the night before the battle. The boy's favourite reading was Pope's Homer, and for Pope's pentameters he had ever a good word. Not even Pilgrim's Progress could make Calvinism attractive to his mind : the theology went far to spoil the story. He might, he thought, have been a clergyman but for one who looked and talked like an undertaker. Entering Harvard in 1825, he graduated in 'the famous class of '29,' doing much to justify its fame as time went on, both by his reputation and by the brilliant succession of his poems for the class's annual gatherings. The year of his graduation was marked by one of the best-known of all his poems, Old Ironsides, as the frigate Constitution, which had made a splendid record in the war of 1812, was popularly called. It was proposed to break her up, and Holmes's stirring lyric averted her impending doom. For a year he studied law, then turned to medicine, and some further narrowing of the res angusta domus made it possible for him to go to Paris and study for two years with Louis and other great teachers. Here was a great advantage. Seeing much of Europe, and especially of Paris, he wore down his Puritan angles and his natural vivacity acquired a keener edge. Returning to Cambridge in 1835 with a good stock of knowledge, some experience, and two skeletons, one for himself, 'the more showy one' for a friend, he presently began the practice of medicine in Boston. This was never burdensome, his reputation as humourist and poet standing in the way ; and the story goes that, being advised to divide his practice, he replied that he couldn't very well, as he had only one patient. The more welcome, therefore, was a chair of Anatomy in Dartmouth College, the 'little college' of Daniel Webster's love, which Holmes held for two years. He had already published his first volume of poetry (1836), which included the long string of pentameters he had just read to the F.B.K. Society of Harvard College, and 'The Last Leaf,' fluttering with tender gaiety in the jocund company of such 'heights of the ridiculous' as 'The Spectre Pig' and 'The September Gale,' absurdities in which generations of schoolboys have had peculiar joy. He soon distinguished himself by a series of medical prize essays, one of which, on the contagiousness of puerperal fever, excited violent opposition, and in 1847 he was appointed Parkman Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the Harvard Medical School. He described his chair as a settee, so various were the duties of his professorship until 1871, when anatomy, always his chief delight, was assigned to him exclusively. The poet and the humourist were bound to glide into his lecturing, and to be welcomed by the students with unfeigned delight. His manner as a lecturer was subject to sudden changes from 'grave to gay, from lively to severe.' In the dissecting-room his reverence for the poor body on the table was that of the man who wrote 'The Human Temple,' and who always stood awe-struck upon the threshold of that temple's mystery.

The anti-slavery struggle, which engaged so deeply the sympathies of Whittier, Lowell, and Emerson (Longfellow in a degree less positive), left Holmes only less indifferent than Hawthorne, though his aristocratic temper made him politically a Whig. Over against Whittier's 'Ichabod,' denouncing Webster's defection from the righteous cause, Holmes set a glowing tribute to the great statesman's worth. His rank as a Lyceum lecturer, for all his promise of more popular qualities, was not with Emerson, and was far below that of Theodore Parker, Wendell Phillips, and Henry Ward Beecher. But the establishment of the Atlantic Monthly in 1857, which was so encouraging to all the New England poets and writers, was for Holmes the beginning of a new career, outshining far the course already run. But for that, his purely literary reputation might now be that of a poet of one poem, 'The Last Leaf.' Lowell divined his uncultivated powers, and made it a condition of his own editorship of the Atlantic that Holmes should be taken on as a principal contributor. He was, and with The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table for his spring-board, vaulted at once into a reputation which for some years was the most brilliant among those of the Boston galaxy. In 1831 he had attempted something similar, and had published two numbers; and harking back to these across twenty-six years, he now began, 'I was just going to say, when I was interrupted'—The Autocrat was followed by The Professor at the Breakfast Table, and this by The Poet. They were all good, but a descending series, Holmes himself comparing the Professor and Poet to the squeezing of the grapes after the first spontaneous running of their juice. Holmes in this series has been compared to so many writers that we are permitted to believe that it was as much his own as the work of a well-read man can ever be his own. The essays were as frank in their self-disclosure as Montaigne's Essays or the Confessions of Rousseau, but, Holmes being what he was, without the slightest taint of their lubricity. The series was as compact of New England sympathies and traditions as the poetry of Whittier and Lowell, while at the same time it had a more intensive local note than Lowell or Whittier ever struck. It was Dr Holmes who gave Boston its most popular name—'the Hub;' and the city had to his table-talk the centrality suggested by that designation. He loved Boston as much as Charles Lamb loved London, its good blood, and breeding best of all. The great war of 1861-65 widened his sympathies, but as some old city is widened without the destruction of its original walls. He had not been a good reformer, but the occasionalism of his verse had been good training for the songs required by the stern exigencies of rebellion and national defence. Such were 'A Voice of the Loyal North' and 'Voyage of the Good Ship Union.' A boy at the front deepened the current of his verse; and when the boy was wounded he hastened to the front to look him up, and then wrote 'My Hunt for the Captain' with all a father's natural pride. But Holmes became more national without becoming less Bostonian, and the future antiquarian will find more of the essence of Boston in the Autocrat and its companion volumes than anywhere else. The social Holmes was like a flitting bird, and as the 'Autocrat' he hovered restlessly from theme to theme, his knowledge of medicine, of books, of men, affording him a thousand happy turns and illustrations. Everywhere, or often, there was that infusion of the tear into the smile which makes humour possible and justifies its name, and through all the gaiety there ran a thread of serious purpose. He must be something of a Puritan even in his tilt against the Puritans. There was so much of this in the Autocrat and its sequels that not a little umbrage was taken, and it began to look as if Holmes would not prove such a good asset to the Atlantic as Lowell had surmised. He liked to run the parallel of his life with Dr Johnson's, who was born a century before him, and like Dr Johnson he was 'a good hater,' hating with a perfect hatred the Calvinistic theology, and more, if possible, the temper which he found associated with it in New England life. Like Longfellow, Bryant, Emerson, and Lowell, he was connected with 'the unsectarian sect called Unitarians,' but they all sat less tightly to it than he, were all less dogmatic than he in their opposition to the dogmas of the traditional theology.

The Autocrat, Professor, and Poet did not give sufficient scope for the anti-Calvinistic passion of the little doctor's heart. Some of it he expressed directly in an article on Jonathan Edwards, stern in its reprehension of that mighty theologian's words and works, one of three biographical ventures; the second a Life of his friend John Lothrop Motley the historian; the third, Ralph Waldo Emerson in the 'American Men of Letters,' wherein the habit of his mind, so foreign to Emerson's, gave piquancy to his delineation. He called Emerson 'an iconoclast without a hammer, who took down our idols from their pedestals so tenderly that it seemed like an act of worship.' In 1861 he published a novel, Elsie Venner, which his principal biographer has called, 'with the exception of the story of Eve, par excellence the snake-story of literature.' His purpose was, under the cover of a suggestion of prenatal poisoning, 'to stir the mighty question of automatic agency in its relation to self-determination.' He wrote to Mrs Stowe that it was 'conceived in the fear of God and the love of man.' But it was not conceived in the spirit of pure literature or pure science, and had, with some attractive aspects, others that were repellent, and these the more dominant. It was in his second novel, The Guardian Angel (1867), that his antipathetic relation to Calvinism took on its boldest shape. His father's Calvinism had been liberal for its day, but in 1829 he was yoked with a colleague whose theology was made of sterner stuff. A good son doesn't like to have his father hustled by a Mr Slope without sense or sensibility, and in the Guardian Angel he pilloried his father's persecutor for the contempt of a new generation. But the virtue of the book was more in those discursive elements which allied it with the Autocrat than in its theological assault.

Those elements were marked by an immense vivacity, a sparkle like the multitudinous laughter of the sea. A third novel, A Mortal Antipathy, appeared in 1885, but it added nothing to the author's better things.

Meantime his lyric muse had not disdained his cordial invitation. For many readers the value of the Autocrat and the Professor, in a less degree the Poet, consisted less in the rambling humour of the prose lucubrations than in the poems which were embedded in their fertile soil. Here and there a malignant compared them to precious stones shaming the spangles of a courtly fool. The poems so introduced took a wide range, 'The Chambered Nautilus' their top and crown for high nobility, 'The One-Hoss Shay' for rollicking humour, the 'Old Horse that won the Bet' not far behind. Of 'The Chambered Nautilus' he said, 'When I wrote that, I did better than I could.' It is commonly accounted his best achievement, but its didactic ending would have spoiled it for Edgar Allan Poe, and Holmes's official biographer is disposed to give to 'The Last Leaf,' which Abraham Lincoln loved, the highest place. Not many others approximate to the height of these, but one's heart must be dull indeed not to leap up to such poems as 'Avis,' 'Iris,' 'Under the Violets,' 'Homesick in Heaven,' 'The Crooked Footpath,' 'The Voiceless,' 'The Silent Melody.' Moreover, in the table-talk and elsewhere there are good ringing ballads such as 'Grandmother's Story' and Come hither God-be-glorified,

And sit upon my knee.

And what a picture is that of Captain Miles Standish of the Plymouth colony stirring a noble posset with his sword!—

He poured the fiery hollands in,—the man that never feared,— [yellow beard ;
He took a long and solemn draught, and wiped his
And one by one the musketeers—the men that fought and prayed— [afraid.
All drank as 'twere their mother's milk and not a man

There was a fine antique flavour about much of Holmes's verse. He loved the Queen Anne men, their metres, their manners, the epigrammatic brilliancy of Pope, Sterne's slow meandering. It would have been pardonable in him if he had fancied himself bringing back not only 'the stretched metre of an antique song,' but much beside, like the good woman who wore her venerable bonnet till its style came in again, and fancied all were copying her mode. Holmes's was her luck without her vanity. He was a survival, not a pioneer. He welcomed the return of 'the knee-buckle men,' but did not dream that he had brought them back. But is it certain that Locker and Dobson and others owed nothing to his inspiration? It is likelier that they owed him much. It is certain that he knew their art before they came, that interpenetration of gaiety with tenderness which is the open secret of all good vers de société. In general he was distinctly the artist among the New England poets, at the farthest remove in this respect from Whittier, filing his lines more consciously than Longfellow, and, as compared with Lowell, perhaps more the artist because having so much less of that poetical exuberance which is impatient of the delays of perfect form.

In one field Dr Holmes was chief without a second among American poets—the poetry of festival and compliment. Who could so graciously welcome a coming, speed a parting guest? Who hide so tenderly with laurel the whitening temples of his friends? For poetry of this kind he had a wonderful facility, and what was so largely impromptu might well lack something of abiding charm. It was enough that it touched some memorable occasion with a momentary gleam of tenderness and beauty. It was at the annual meetings of his college class that he exercised this gift with the most daring playfulness. He was ready with a poem every year from 1851 to 1889, when 'After the Curfew' was the last. Sometimes he sang his poem. It might begin with laughter; a sob was audible before it made an end. 'The Boys' is one of the best of these for fun and tenderness; 'The Old Man Dreams' perhaps the best of all. He died 7th October 1894, the last leaf on the tree of Boston's goodly brotherhood of lettered men. In 1890 there was a meeting of the class, three present, but 'no poem—very quiet—something very like tears.' There were two or three more meetings, but no more poems. Three or four of his class survived him. He should have survived them all, and have read his last class poem to his own silent heart. It was a good work that he wrought for New England and America, and for a wider range. With his joyous laughter he shook to its foundation the traditional distrust of the New England conscience in the undisguised enjoyment of life's various good. He heartily believed in human happiness, and he did much to make it more abundant.

The Chambered Nautilus.

This is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
Sails the unshadowed main,—
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings
In gulfs enchanted, where the Siren sings,
And coral-reefs lie bare,
Where the cold sea-maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl;
Wrecked is the ship of pearl!
And every chambered cell,
Where its dim dreaming life was wont to dwell,
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,
Before thee lies revealed,—
Its irised ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed!

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,

Built up its idle door, [more.
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by thee,
Child of the wandering sea,
Cast from her lap, forlorn!

From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton blew from wreathed horn!

While on mine ear it rings, [sings :—
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,

As the swift seasons roll!

Leave thy low-vaulted past!

Let each new temple, nobler than the last,

Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,

Till thou at length art free,

Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!

The Deacon's Masterpiece; or, The Wonderful
'One-Hoss Shay.'

Have you heard of the wonderful one-hoss shay,
That was built in such a logical way
It ran a hundred years to a day,
And then, of a sudden, it—ah, but stay,
I'll tell you what happened without delay,
Scaring the parson into fits,
Frightening people out of their wits,—
Have you ever heard of that, I say?

Seventeen hundred and fifty-five.

Georgius Secundus was then alive,—
Snuffy old drone from the German hive.
That was the year when Lisbon-town
Saw the earth open and gulp her down,
And Braddock's army was done so brown,
Left without a scalp to its crown.
It was on the terrible Earthquake-day
That the Deacon finished the one-hoss shay.

Now in building of chaises, I tell you what,
There is always somewhere a weakest spot,—
In hub, tire, felloe, in spring or thill,
In panel, or crossbar, or floor, or sill,
In screw, bolt, thoroughbrace,—lurking still,
Find it somewhere you must and will,— Above or below, or within or without,—
And that's the reason, beyond a doubt,
That a chaise breaks down, but doesn't wear out.
But the Deacon swore (as Deacons do,
With an 'I dew vum,' or an 'I tell yeou,')
He would build one shay to beat the taown
'n' the keounty 'n' all the kentry raoun';
It should be so built that it couldn't break daown:
—'Fur,' said the Deacon, 't's mighty plain
Thut the weakes' place mus' stan' the strain;
'n' the way t' fix it, uz I maintain,

Is only jest

T' make that place uz strong uz the rest.'

So the Deacon inquired of the village folk
Where he could find the strongest oak,
That couldn't be split nor bent nor broke,—
That was for spokes and floor and sills;
He sent for lancewood to make the thills;
The crossbars were ash, from the straightest trees,
The panels of white-wood, that cuts like cheese,
But lasts like iron for things like these;

The hubs of logs from the 'Settler's ellum,'—
Last of its timber,—they couldn't sell 'em;
Never an axe had seen their chips,
And the wedges flew from between their lips,
Their blunt-ends frizzled like celery-tips;
Step and prop-iron, bolt and screw,
Spring, tire, axle, and linchpin too,
Steel of the finest, bright and blue;
Thoroughbrace bison-skin, thick and wide;
Boot, top, dasher, from tough old hide
Found in the pit when the tanner died.
That was the way he 'put her through.'
'There!' said the Deacon, 'naow she 'll dew!'

Do! I tell you, I rather guess
She was a wonder, and nothing less!
Colts grew horses, beards turned gray,
Deacon and deaconess dropped away,
Children and grandchildren—where were they?
But there stood the stout old one-hoss shay
As fresh as on Lisbon-earthquake-day!

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED;—it came and found
The Deacon's masterpiece strong and sound.
Eighteen hundred increased by ten;
'Hahnsum kerridge' they called it then.
Eighteen hundred and twenty came;—
Running as usual; much the same.
Thirty and forty at last arrive,
And then came fifty, and FIFTY-FIVE.

Little of all we value here
Wakes on the morn of its hundredth year
Without both feeling and looking queer.
In fact, there's nothing that keeps its youth,
So far as I know, but a tree and truth.
(This is a moral that runs at large;
Take it.—You're welcome.—No extra charge.)

FIRST OF NOVEMBER,—the Earthquake-day—
There are traces of age in the one-hoss shay,
A general flavour of mild decay,
But nothing local, as one may say.
There couldn't be,—for the Deacon's art
Had made it so like in every part
That there wasn't a chance for one to start.
For the wheels were just as strong as the thills,
And the floor was just as strong as the sills,
And the panels just as strong as the floor,
And the whipple-tree neither less nor more,
And the back-crossbar as strong as the fore,
And spring and axle and hub encore.
And yet, as a whole, it is past a doubt
In another hour it will be worn out!

First of November, 'Fifty-five!
This morning the parson takes a drive.
Now, small boys, get out of the way!
Here comes the wonderful one-hoss shay,
Drawn by a rat-tailed, ewe-necked bay.
'Huddup!' said the parson.—Off went they.
The parson was working his Sunday's text,—
He had got to fifthly, and stopped perplexed
At what the—Moses—was coming next.
All at once the horse stood still,
Close by the meet'n'-house on the hill.
—First a shiver, and then a thrill,
Then something decidedly like a spill,—

And the parson was sitting upon a rock,
 At half-past nine by the meet'n'-house clock,—
 Just the hour of the Earthquake shock!
 —What do you think the parson found,
 When he got up and stared around?
 The poor old chaise in a heap or mound,
 As if it had been to the mill and ground!
 You see, of course, if you're not a dunce,
 How it went to pieces all at once,—
 All at once, and nothing first,—
 Just as bubbles do when they burst.
 End of the wonderful one-hoss shay.
 Logic is logic. That's all I say.

The Last Leaf.

I saw him once before,
 As he passed by the door,
 And again
 The pavement stones resound,
 As he totters o'er the ground
 With his cane.

They say that in his prime,
 Ere the pruning-knife of Time
 Cut him down,
 Not a better man was found
 By the Crier on his round
 Through the town.

But now he walks the streets,
 And he looks at all he meets
 Sad and wan.
 And he shakes his feeble head,
 That it seems as if he said,
 'They are gone.'

The mossy marbles rest
 On the lips that he has prest
 In their bloom,
 And the names he loved to hear
 Have been carved for many a year
 On the tomb.

My grandmamma has said—
 Poor old lady, she is dead
 Long ago—
 That he had a Roman nose,
 And his cheek was like a rose
 In the snow.

But now his nose is thin,
 And it rests upon his chin
 Like a staff,
 And a crook is in his back,
 And a melancholy crack
 In his laugh.

I know it is a sin
 For me to sit and grin
 At him here;
 But the old three-cornered hat,
 And the breeches, and all that,
 Are so queer!

And if I should live to be
 The last leaf upon the tree
 In the spring,
 Let them smile, as I do now,
 At the old forsaken bough
 Where I cling.

The Long Path.

I can't say just how many walks she and I had taken together before this one. I found the effect of going out every morning was decidedly favourable on her health. Two pleasing dimples, the places for which were just marked when she came, played, shadowy, in her freshening cheeks when she smiled and nodded good-morning to me from the schoolhouse-steps. I am afraid I did the greater part of the talking. At any rate, if I should try to report all that I said during the first half-dozen walks we took together, I fear that I might receive a gentle hint from my friends the publishers that a separate volume, at my own risk and expense, would be the proper method of bringing them before the public. . . .

Books we talked about, and education. It was her duty to know something of these, and of course she did. Perhaps I was somewhat more learned than she, but I found that the difference between her reading and mine was like that of a man's and a woman's dusting a library. The man flaps about with a bunch of feathers; the woman goes to work softly with a cloth. She does not raise half the dust, nor fill her own eyes and mouth with it,—but she goes into all the corners, and attends to the leaves as much as the covers.—Books are the negative pictures of thought, and the more sensitive the mind that receives their images, the more nicely the finest lines are reproduced. A woman (of the right kind), reading after a man, follows him as Ruth followed the reapers of Boaz, and her gleanings are often the finest of the wheat. But it was in talking of Life that we came most nearly together. I thought I knew something about that,—that I could speak or write about it somewhat to the purpose.

To take up this fluid earthly being of ours as a sponge sucks up water,—to be steeped and soaked in its realities as a hide fills its pores lying seven years in a tan-pit,—to have winnowed every wave of it as a mill-wheel works up the stream that runs through the flume upon its float-boards,—to have curled up in the keenest spasms and flattened out in the laxest languors of this breathing-sickness, which keeps certain parcels of matter uneasy for three or four score years,—to have fought all the devils and clasped all the angels of its delirium,—and then, just at the point when the white-hot passions have cooled down to cherry-red, plunge our experience into the ice-cold stream of some human language or other, one might think would end in a rhapsody with something of spring and temper in it. All this I thought my power and province.

The schoolmistress had tried life, too. Once in a while one meets with a single soul greater than all the living pageant that passes before it. As the pale astronomer sits in his study with sunken eyes and thin fingers, and weighs Uranus or Neptune as in a balance, so there are meek, slight women who have weighed all that this planetary life can offer, and hold it like a bauble in the palm of their slender hands. This was one of them. Fortune had left her, sorrow had baptised her; the routine of labour and the loneliness of almost friendless city-life were before her. Yet, as I looked upon her tranquil face, gradually regaining a cheerfulness that was often sprightly, as she became interested in the various matters we talked about and places we visited, I saw that eye and lip and every shifting lineament were made for love,—unconscious of their sweet office as yet, and meeting the cold aspect of Duty with the natural graces which were meant for the reward of nothing less than the Great Passion.

—I never spoke one word of love to the schoolmistress in the course of these pleasant walks. It seemed to me that we talked of everything but love on that particular morning. There was, perhaps, a little more timidity and hesitancy on my part than I have commonly shown among our people at the boarding-house. In fact, I considered myself the master at the breakfast-table; but, somehow, I could not command myself just then so well as usual. The truth is, I had secured a passage to Liverpool in the steamer which was to leave at noon,—with the condition, however, of being released in case circumstances occurred to detain me. The schoolmistress knew nothing about all this, of course, as yet. It was on the Common that we were walking. The mall, or boulevard of our Common, you know, has various branches leading from it in different directions. One of these runs downward from opposite Joy Street southward across the whole length of the Common to Boylston Street. We called it the long path, and were fond of it.

I felt very weak indeed (though of a tolerably robust habit) as we came opposite the head of this path on that morning. I think I tried to speak twice without making myself distinctly audible. At last I got out the question, —Will you take the long path with me?—Certainly, —said the schoolmistress,—with much pleasure.—Think,—I said,—before you answer; if you take the long path with me now, I shall interpret it that we are to part no more!—The schoolmistress stepped back with a sudden movement, as if an arrow had struck her. One of the long granite blocks used as seats was hard by,—the one you may still see close by the Gingko-tree.—Pray, sit down,—I said.—No, no,—she answered, softly,—I will walk the long path with you!

—The old gentleman who sits opposite met us walking, arm in arm, about the middle of the long path, and said, very charmingly,—‘Good-morning, my dears!’

(From The Autocrat.)

The Standard Library Edition, an excellent edition of Dr Holmes's writings in fifteen volumes (Boston, 1896), includes the official biography by J. T. Morse, jun. There are complete single-volume editions of his poems, the ‘Cambridge’ and ‘Household,’ and there have been numerous English reprints. Morse's Biography and Letters is full of matter and admirable in tone. See also W. D. Howells's Literary Friends and Acquaintance (1900); E. C. Stedman's Poets of America; studies by Wm. L. Schroeder (1909) and L. W. Townsend (1909); and a bibliography by G. B. Ives (1907).

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

Susan Warner (1819–85), born at New York, published under the pen-name of ‘Elizabeth Wetherell’ The Wide, Wide World (1851), in its own day next to Uncle Tom's Cabin the most successful American story; not in virtue of literary style, originality, romantic interest, or profound insight into character. But its sympathetic presentation of an exemplary heroine and her rather commonplace fortunes, its sentimental piety and didactic emotionalism, charmed for a time a large and admiring public. There followed Queechy (1852), The Hills of the Shatemuc (1856), The Old Helmet (1863), Melbourne House (1864), Daisy (1868), and A Story of Small Beginnings (1872). Her other works were mostly religious.

Henry David Thoreau, naturalist, writer in several kinds, and poet, was born in Concord, Massachusetts, 12th July 1817. No other town in the United States is so rich as Concord in literary associations, and to these Thoreau has contributed more than Hawthorne, and only in less degree than Emerson. He took up more of the town than either of these into his mind and work. Its broad meadows, its ‘sluggish artery,’ the Musketaquid, its swift Assabet, its woods and pastures with their plants and creatures—these were the books and teachers that assured him a more liberal education than the Concord schools and Harvard College. On his father's side he was descended from Jerseymen of French extraction, but those who found French traits in him were obliged to reckon with the fact that his Saxon mother, Cynthia Dunbar, obviously supplied these traits. She was vivacious, sprightly, talkative; the father stolid and taciturn, if not quite morose—a maker of good lead-pencils. Henry at one time learned his father's art, but soon resolved that there were better things than pencils with which to make his mark. In 1833 he entered Harvard College, and took the four years' course, a severe strain on his parents' means, and disappointing to their hopes, his graduation being without distinction, because he anticipated the elective system long in advance of its formal adoption. In the event he was an excellent Latin and Greek scholar, his classical reading far beyond any college requirements, while for knowledge of the older English poets he was not easily matched. As naturalist he found his books mainly in the running brooks and along their banks, but knew well the printed kind. He was, moreover, a diligent Orientalist, an English friend, Lord Cholmondeley, making him the rich possessor of a splendid set of Hindu books, original and translated. The North American Indians had for him a profounder fascination. The literature of their manners and history he read exhaustively, digging deep in the Jesuit Relations, when the translator had not made access to them the easy thing it is now.

No profession or form of business life attracting him, for ten years after leaving college he made himself an idler, to men's view, that he might better nurse his secret growth. ‘Never idle or indulgent,’ says Emerson, ‘he preferred, when he wanted money, earning it by some piece of manual labour agreeable to him, as building a boat or a fence, planting, grafting, surveying, or other short work, to any long engagements. With his hardy habits and few wants, his skill in wood-craft, and his powerful arithmetic, he was very competent to live in any part of the world.’ Meantime he was carrying on a business that had no lack of continuity or serious purpose—the business of his literary life. It is likely that he was inspired by Emerson's example to make the production of good literature his secondary purpose; the first, like Emerson's, the living of a simple, natural life after a fashion of his own. In 1837 he began that series of diaries which covered six hundred pages in three years, and in the course of ten years (1850-60) filled thirty manuscript volumes. Here were no mere jottings of his observations, but the deliberate attempt to say what he had seen as exactly and as felicitously as possible. His inclination to verse was also strong, but (the pity of it!) discouraged by Emerson; so that, when thirty, he destroyed much, and afterward wrote little. In 1839 he made that excursion which is reported in his Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, to write which was the main purpose of his retirement to a hut upon the shores of Walden Pond. His brother John was the companion of his voyage, but he is not mentioned in the book. The silent organ chants his requiem. John died a tragic death (from lock-jaw) in 1842, and Henry, passionately attached to him, was deeply affected by his loss and by the horror of his death. Loving a girl whom he found John also loved, he had silently sacrificed his own upon the altar of his brother's hope. He wrote nothing more exquisitely beautiful than his poem of fraternal loss. In 1841 he became an inmate of Emerson's household, remaining for two years. Thoreau's originality was much threatened by this intimacy, and that it triumphed over it is proof how deep it was ingrained. But for a time he took on so much of Emerson that some potted an Emersonian note in his voice, while the less genial declared that he was 'growing an Emerson nose.' He had traits which Emerson disliked, while his own more sensitive nature was wounded by Emerson's occasional retirement into his deeper self. During his stay with Emerson he was writing for the Dial and helping Emerson to edit that organ of the Transcendentalists, which counted many sun-bright and some moonshine hours. Other Concord friends were Alcott, Hawthorne, and Ellery Channing, a poet of real but uncertain power, and personally the most difficult of the Concord set—his Thoreau the Poet-Naturalist is a standing proof of his unique appreciation. Hardly less was that of F. B. Sanborn, another of Thoreau's numerous biographers. Much less was that of Margaret Fuller, one of the brilliant Concord women; but Elizabeth Hoar, who went near to realise Emerson's ideal of womanhood, said that Concord was Thoreau's monument, covered all over with inscriptions of his genius and his work.

In 1843 Thoreau did some teaching in New York, and in the second year after his return to Concord he engaged (1845) in that enterprise which has excited more vulgar curiosity than any other action of his life—his retirement (for two years and two months) to the solitude of Walden Pond. Its character has been misconceived, but its importance has not been exaggerated. It enabled him to write the Week in peace and quietness, and to gather material for his more popular, but hardly more precious, Walden. It was a successful experiment in plain living, and a manly protest against the general opinion that a man's life does consist in the abundance of things that he possesses. The motive was not anti-social, much less misanthropic. At Walden, Thoreau kept in close connection with his Concord friends, much visiting and visited. There was no attempt to demonstrate the independence of the individual. He began by borrowing an axe, and he took with him much of 'the seasoned life of men' which is compacted in good books.

After leaving Walden, his next business was to publish the book which he had written there. One thousand copies of the Week were published, and in 1853 seven hundred of these were returned to him as unsalable, an experience on which his humour batted and which he seriously accounted valuable. Long since every copy of that edition was a collector's prize. In 1846 he had been to the Maine woods, and in 1853 and 1857 he went to them again; and his accounts of these excursions, partly published in his lifetime, made a posthumous volume, The Maine Woods, in 1864. In 1849 he made an excursion to Cape Cod, that sandy peninsula which, like a curled finger, beckoned the Pilgrim Fathers to their first landing-place on the New England coast. This excursion also flowered into a series of articles, brought to completion in the posthumous Cape Cod of 1865. A Yankee in Canada had a similar history. Walden appeared in 1854, and met with more favour than the Week, a small edition selling before Thoreau's death. An occasional lecture added something to his income, if little to his reputation. Emerson wrote of his lecturing manner that his appearance of contempt for his audience only varied to express a more absolute scorn. In 1841 he refused to pay taxes in support of a Government implicated in war and slavery, and was put in jail for a few hours. Emerson came to see him, and asked, 'Henry, why are you here?' 'Why are you not here?' said the prisoner. The theory of this practice was expanded in 1849 in 'Resistance to Civil Government.' His whole heart and soul were in the anti-slavery reform. When Emerson gave his first anti-slavery address in Concord, Thoreau rang the church-bell to summon the villagers as to a new Concord fight. His Walden hut is rumoured to have been 'a station on the underground railroad'—a hiding-place for fugitive slaves. In 1854 he made a vigorous and rigorous address to an abolitionist convention. Meeting John Brown the revolutionist, he was fascinated by his character and spirit; and a fortnight after Brown's attack on Harper's Ferry, when the old hero had a month to live, Thoreau summoned his fellow-townsmen to hear his 'Plea for John Brown,' two days later giving the same address in Boston; and not even Emerson's good word for Brown was so entirely frank and bold. The Atlantic Monthly, which made so many new openings for New England writers, was promising some enlargement for Thoreau with the rest, when some rash exposure brought on a sickness which was to have no favourable turn. Besides, he was, as he said, 'sick for his country,' protesting that he should not be better while the war went on. It had yet three years to lengthen out its misery when he died, 6th May 1862.

Thoreau was never better named than by his friend and biographer Channing, who called him the Poet-Naturalist. Even his methods of observation were poetic rather than scientific. He thought a bird in the bush worth two in the hand. He liked to study living things as undisturbed as possible by knife or glass. It is probably true that he made few fresh discoveries. But he saw things with his own eyes; discovered for himself what others read and heard; and 'he was yet in some sort,' says Grant Allen, 'a vague and mystical anticipatory precursor of the modern school of functional biologists.' 'His power of observation,' says Emerson, 'seemed to indicate additional senses. He saw as with microscope, heard as with ear-trumpet, and his memory was a photographic register of all he saw and heard.' It was when he came to tell what he had seen and heard that the poet side of the naturalist was most plainly visible. Few are his descriptions that do not flower into some metaphor or simile, confounding to the merely scientific. Paley was not more teleological. 'What is man,' he says, 'is all in all; nature nothing but as she draws him out and reflects him.' He thought the most important part of a description of any creature 'to tell what it is to man.' He held a mirror up to human nature in animal and vegetable forms—in the strutting turkey and the malodorous skunk fancying familiar aspects of humanity.

This humanity of his nature-worship ill agrees with the opinion that he was misanthropic and lacked interest in men. 'What is nature,' he said, 'if there be not an eventful human life passing within her? Many joys and many sorrows are the lights in which she shows most beautiful.' He conceived himself as passionately devoted to the welfare of his fellow-men. He could not imagine any possible service that he would not cheerfully render them, only stipulating that it should appeal to him as real. His instincts were literary through and through. Good books for him were nature's fairest flowers and birds of sweetest song. To write one or more was the thing nearest to his heart, so to say what he had seen, so to help other men to live. To talk of his indifference to style is gross absurdity. He would build sentences, he said, as durable as a Roman aqueduct. And Lowell, one of his harshest critics, testifies that 'there are sentences of his as perfect as anything in the language, and thoughts as clearly crystallised.' It is true that, with the beauty, there was much disfigurement. Hyperbole and paradox were the rhetorical forms into which his humour ran too easily. 'I trust that you realise,' he said, 'what an exaggerator I am—pile Pelion upon Ossa to reach heaven so.' But sometimes he got a fall. His fondness for resemblances led him too far afield, as where in low-roofed houses he saw low-browed monkeys; and his conceits were often madly fanciful, as where the June morning was for him 'the bursting bead on the surface of the uncorked day.' On the other hand, there is often a marvellous felicity of phrase, and there are extended passages of unfaltering charm. With much roughness in his verses, he was often master of an exquisite music. It was for other qualities that Emerson declared his 'Smoke' to be better than any poem of Simonides. His influence has been great and wide. He has raised up a host of literary naturalists, and a much greater one of people for whom all natural things are different and better since he passed this way; while still his best service is that which has made for the simplification of life. If here his followers have been too few, there is promise of a multitude in the conditions of a society whose intolerable noise and hurry must bring some sane reaction before long.

Building the Chimney.

When I came to build my chimney I studied masonry. My bricks, being second-hand ones, required to be cleaned with a trowel, so that I learned more than usual of the qualities of bricks and trowels. The mortar on them was fifty years old, and was said to be still growing harder; but this is one of those sayings which men love to repeat whether they are true or not. Such sayings themselves grow harder and adhere more firmly with age, and it would take many blows with a trowel to clean an old wiseacre of them. Many of the villages of Mesopotamia are built of second-hand bricks of a very good quality, obtained from the ruins of Babylon, and the cement on them is older and probably harder still. However that may be, I was struck by the peculiar toughness of the steel which bore so many violent blows without being worn out. As my bricks had been in a chimney before, though I did not read the name of Nebuchadnezzar on them, I picked out as many fireplace bricks as I could find, to save work and waste, and I filled the spaces between the bricks about the fireplace with stones from the pond shore, and also made my mortar with the white sand from the same place. I lingered most about the fireplace, as the most vital part of the house. Indeed, I worked so deliberately that though I commenced at the ground in the morning, a course of bricks raised a few inches above the floor served for my pillow at night; yet I did not get a stiff neck for it that I remember; my stiff neck is of older date. I took a poet to board for a fortnight about those times, which caused me to be put to it for room. He brought his own knife, though I had two, and we used to scour them by thrusting them into the earth. He shared with me the labours of cooking. I was pleased to see my work rising so square and solid by degrees, and reflected that, if it proceeded slowly, it was calculated to endure a long time. The chimney is to some extent an independent structure, standing on the ground and rising through the house to the heavens; even after the house is burned it still stands sometimes, and its importance and independence are apparent. This was towards the end of summer. It was now November.

(From Walden.)

What he Lived for.

We must learn to reawaken and keep ourselves awake, not by mechanical aids, but by an infinite expectation of the dawn, which does not forsake us in our soundest sleep. I know of no more encouraging fact than the unquestionable ability of man to elevate his life by a conscious endeavour. It is something to be able to paint a particular picture, or to carve a statue, and so to make a few objects beautiful; but it is far more glorious to carve and paint the very atmosphere and medium through which we look, which morally we can do. To affect the quality of the day, that is the highest of arts. Every man is tasked to make his life, even in its details, worthy of the contemplation of his most elevated and critical hour. If we refused, or rather used up, such paltry information as we get, the oracles would distinctly inform us how this might be done.

I went to the woods because I wished to live deliberately, to front only the essential facts of life, and see if I could not learn what it had to teach, and not, when I came to die, discover that I had not lived. I did not wish to live what was not life, living is so dear; nor did I wish to practise resignation, unless it was quite necessary. I wanted to live deep and suck out all the marrow of life, to live so sturdily and Spartan-like as to put to rout all that was not life, to cut a broad swath and shave close, to drive life into a corner, and reduce it to its lowest terms, and, if it proved to be mean, why then to get the whole and genuine meanness of it, and publish its meanness to the world; or if it were sublime, to know it by experience, and be able to give a true account of it in my next excursion. For most men, it appears to me, are in a strange uncertainty about it, whether it is of the devil or of God, and have somewhat hastily concluded that it is the chief end of man here to 'glorify God and enjoy Him forever.'

Still we live meanly, like ants; though the fable tells us that we were long ago changed into men; like pygmies we fight with cranes; it is error upon error, and clout upon clout, and our best virtue has for its occasion a superfluous and evitable wretchedness. Our life is frittered away by detail. An honest man has hardly need to count more than his ten fingers, or in extreme cases he may add his ten toes, and lump the rest. Simplicity, simplicity, simplicity! I say, let your affairs be as two or three, and not a hundred or a thousand; instead of a million count half-a-dozen, and keep your accounts on your thumb-nail. In the midst of this chopping sea of civilised life, such are the clouds and storms and quicksands and thousand-and-one items to be allowed for, that a man has to live, if he would not founder and go to the bottom and not make his port at all, by dead reckoning, and he must be a great calculator indeed who succeeds. Simplify, simplify. Instead of three meals a day, if it be necessary eat but one; instead of a hundred dishes, five; and reduce other things in proportion. . . .

Why should we live with such hurry and waste of life? We are determined to be starved before we are hungry. Men say that a stitch in time saves nine, and so they take a thousand stitches to-day to save nine to-morrow. As for work, we haven't any of any consequence. We have the Saint Vitus' dance, and cannot possibly keep our heads still. If I should only give a few pulls at the parish bell-rope, as for a fire, that is, without setting the bell, there is hardly a man on his farm in the outskirts of Concord, notwithstanding that press of engagements which was his excuse so many times this morning, nor a boy, nor a woman, I might almost say, but would forsake all and follow that sound, not mainly to save property from the flames, but, if we will confess the truth, much more to see it burn, since burn it must, and we, be it known, did not set it on fire,—or to see it put out, and have a hand in it, if that is done as handsomely; yes, even if it were the parish church itself. Hardly a man takes a half-hour's nap after dinner, but when he wakes he holds up his head and asks, 'What's the news?' as if the rest of mankind had stood his sentinels. Some give directions to be waked every half-hour, doubtless for no other purpose; and then, to pay for it, they tell what they have dreamed. After a night's sleep the news is as indispensable as the breakfast. 'Pray tell me anything new that has happened to a man anywhere on this globe,'—and he reads it over his coffee and rolls, that a man has had his eyes gouged out this morning on the Wachito River; never dreaming the while that he lives in the dark unfathomed mammoth cave of this world, and has but the rudiment of an eye himself.

(From Walden.)

Rumours from an Æolian Harp.

There is a vale which none hath seen,
Where foot of man has never been,
Such as here lives with toil and strife,
An anxious and a sinful life.

There every virtue has its birth,
Ere it descends upon the earth,
And thither every deed returns,
Which in the generous bosom burns.

There love is warm, and youth is young,
And poetry is yet unsung,
For Virtue still adventures there,
And freely breathes her native air.

And ever, if you hearken well,
You still may hear its vesper bell,
And tread of high-souled men go by,
Their thoughts conversing with the sky.

Haze.

Woof of the sun, ethereal gauze,
Woven of Nature's richest stuffs,
Visible heat, air-water, and dry sea,
Last conquest of the eye;
Toil of the day displayed, sun-dust,
Aerial surf upon the shores of earth,
Ethereal estuary, frith of light,
Breakers of air, billows of heat,
Fine summer spray on inland seas;
Bird of the sun, transparent-winged,
Owlet of noon, soft-pinioned,
From heath or stubble rising without song,—
Establish thy serenity o'er the fields.

My Prayer.

Great God, I ask Thee for no meaner pelf
Than that I may not disappoint myself;
That in my action I may soar as high
As I can now discern with this clear eye.

And next in value, which Thy kindness lends,
That I may greatly disappoint my friends,
Howe'er they think or hope that it may be,
They may not dream how Thou'st distinguished me.

That my weak hand may equal my firm faith,
And my life practise more than my tongue saith;
That my low conduct may not show, nor my relenting lines,
That I Thy purpose did not know, or overrated Thy designs.

Nature.

O Nature! I do not aspire
To be the highest in thy quire,—
To be a meteor in the sky,
Or comet that may range on high;
Only a zephyr that may blow
Among the reeds by the river low;
Give me thy most privy place
Where to run my airy race.

In some withdrawn, unpublic mead
Let me sigh upon a reed,
Or in the woods, with leafy din,
Whisper the still evening in:
Some still work give me to do,—
Only—be it near to you!

For I'd rather be thy child
And pupil, in the forest wild,
Than be the king of men elsewhere,
And most sovereign slave of care:
To have one moment of thy dawn,
Than share the city's year forlorn.

The Fisher's Boy.

My life is like a stroll upon the beach,
As near the ocean's edge as I can go;
My tardy steps its waves sometimes o'erreach,
Sometimes I stay to let them overflow.

My sole employment 'tis, and scrupulous care,
To place my gains beyond the reach of tides,
Each smoother pebble, and each shell more rare,
Which Ocean kindly to my hand confides.

I have but few companions on the shore:
They scorn the strand who sail upon the sea;
Yet oft I think the ocean they've sailed o'er
Is deeper known upon the strand to me.

The middle sea contains no crimson dulse,
Its deeper waves cast up no pearls to view;
Along the shore my hand is on its pulse,
And I converse with many a shipwrecked crew.

The 'Riverside Edition' of Thoreau's writings is in eleven volumes (1893); the Manuscript Edition (20 vols. 1906) contains his Journal. His letters, edited by Emerson, were better edited, with additions, by F. B. Sanborn (1894), giving a less stoical impression. A great body of literature, biographical and critical, has grown up about Thoreau's name. Channing's Thoreau the Poet-Naturalist (1873) is the best quarry. Sanborn's Thoreau ('American Men of Letters,' 1882; 1910), The Personality of Thoreau (1901), and Life of Thoreau (1917) are admirable studies. There are good English Lives by H. A. Page (1877) and H. S. Salt (1890 and 1896). There are many side-lights in Lives of Emerson, Alcott, Hawthorne, and in E. W. Emerson's Emerson in Concord, which best shows Thoreau as the children's friend. Critical essays include Lowell's in My Study Windows, best known and least just; John Burroughs's, in Literary Values and elsewhere; and Mark Van Doren's (1916). F. H. Allen compiled a Biography (1908).

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

James Russell Lowell,

poet, essayist, publicist, humourist, scholar, and diplomatist, was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, 22nd February 1819, fated, as it were, by his birthday (Washington's) to that lofty patriotism which was the most distinguishing feature of his life. Elmwood, his birthplace, was one of several spacious houses built before the Revolutionary War, and together constituting 'Tory Room.' The builder and occupant in the troublous times before the Revolution was Thomas Oliver, lieutenant-governor of the colony and President of the Council, who was forced to resign his office by a visitation of four thousand citizens. Oliver joined the loyalists that swarmed to Halifax, and his house being seized and sold, it was bought and occupied by Elbridge Gerry, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, for two years Governor of Massachusetts, and at the time of his death (1814) Vice-President of the United States. Thus the house had a variety of political associations to please the fancy of the growing boy and the grown man, and something better in the noble woods surrounding it, with their leafy 'choirs in which the sweet birds sang,' never when Lowell was at home to inattentive ears. Harvard College was a little way off across the open fields, and, just as Lowell was entering on his studies there, Longfellow came to live in the Cragie house, a few rods from Elmwood, his early laurels no doubt disturbing Lowell's sleep. His father, Rev. Charles Lowell, was a Unitarian clergyman, minister of the West Church in Boston, a man so sweet and gracious, and of so much simplicity, that his likeness to the Vicar of Wakefield did not escape the filial eye, so quick to mark resemblances and differences of any kind. Dr Charles Lowell's education was carried on in Edinburgh under Sir David Brewster and Dugald Stewart, but the son had forebears on his mother's side that gave him a much closer Scotch alliance. The blood of Orkney Trails and Highland (or north-country) Spences flowed in his veins, and it pleased him to imagine that Sir Patrick Spens and Minna Troil contributed some of its ruddier drops. It is certain that his mother had an hereditary passion for the Scotch ballad poetry, and her recitation of 'Annie of Lochroyan' and other pieces was one of the influences that mixed his clay with heavenly fire. A local school fitted him for Harvard College, which he entered in 1834. He profited less by the regular course of study than by his miscellaneous reading, which tended, at first fitfully and then steadily, to the best English literature. A tendency to waywardness was aggravated by his parents' departure for a long European journey. The father's pecuniary bribes, nicely proportioned to degrees of possible distinction, seemed base compared with the allurements of frolicsome escapades which subjected him to private and public admonition. The worst offence was on the event of his election by his class to be its poet, when for his excessive gaiety he was banished from Cambridge to Concord for some weeks on the eve of his graduation. In Concord he made Emerson's acquaintance, and was invited to walk with him; but he was not prevented by so much graciousness from lashing out at him in his Class-Day Poem, debarred from reading which, he printed it with additions. Emerson suffered in good company, that of Carlyle and Garrison and the advocates of total abstinence and Women's Rights. As touching Emerson and the abolitionists, and in general, the satire was an inverted prophecy of the enthusiasms of the full-grown man.

The last year of Lowell's college life and that succeeding had much deeper troubles than those following on neglected recitations and undue hilarity. They coincided with a period of eager and joyous and then hopeless passion, its object a girl possessing every intellectual and personal attraction. When he was separated from her by some untoward chance, there was no measure to the bitterness of Lowell's grief and rage. We have his miserable confession that he put a loaded pistol to his head, but was too cowardly to fire. The fate that seemed so cruel was the friendliest possible, for without his love for and marriage with Maria White, the comfortress who helped him to forget the past and set a happy future in his eyes, it is conceivable that he would have achieved no honourable fame. She was the good genius of his life, leading him to quick repentance of his reactionary tendencies, enlisting him among the Transcendentalists and in the anti-slavery cause, making Lowell the reformer possible. Lowell met her in 1839, and they were married on Christmas Eve, 1844. In the meantime he had chosen a profession, law, and abandoned it after taking his degree and entering a lawyer's office in Boston. The turmoil of his affections added to the perturbation of his mind. In 1841 he published A Year's Life, a small collection of poems; its motto, Ich habe gelebt und geliebet, a frank confession of its autobiographical character. Here, equally plain, was the inspiration of his new-found happiness and of Keats and Tennyson. Of its sixty-eight poems and sonnets, his 'after-approbation' admitted nine to his collected works, where a less exigent taste would have spared more of the innocents. If not so wide and deep as it might have been, it was enough to commit him to literature as the profession of his final choice, and the next step was the projection and publication of the Pioneer, of which three numbers were published. It was the best American magazine of the period, a prophecy fulfilled in the Atlantic Monthly. But Lowell's eyes gave out; so did the credit of the publishers, leaving them deep in debt for printing and contributions. Besides, at this time Lowell's mind was too intent on poetry for him to think or care for anything beside. All his life long the making of poems was his supreme delight. Scratch the publicist or diplomatist and you came at once upon the poet. In 1843 he published a second volume, which marked a sure advance in his powers of poetical conception and expression. It had, too, intimations of the coming humourist, and it gave bonds of that allegiance to the anti-slavery cause which had its most distinct expression in the years from 1845 to 1849. Even those poems whose subject and treatment were remotest from the reformer's zeal could not escape it altogether. Lowell's official biographer, H. E. Scudder, presses on us his opinion that Lowell's engagement with the anti-slavery reform was a misfortune to him as poet, distracting him from the main haunt of his peculiar power. That he was poet in the first, reformer only in the second degree, there is no doubt. But for his high-souled wife he might not have been the reformer in any manner or degree. Failing of her pure chrism he might have carried far the type of poetry of which his 'Legend of Brittany' (as sweet as Keats's Endymion, but far less exquisitely sweet) was typical, but in missing the anti-slavery poems we should have missed much of his best work, not only the splendid tributes to Wendell Phillips and Garrison, the 'Vision of Miles Standish,' and the ringing stanzas of 'The Present Crisis,' but the Biglow Papers, the first series and the second; for if Lowell had not played the part he did as opposing the annexation of Texas and the Mexican War (a sequence of pro-slavery turpitude), he never could have risen to the height of his great argument in 1861-64, either in verse or prose. His contributions to the Anti-Slavery Standard were neither first-rate literary nor anti-slavery work, but they helped to train the 'prentice hand which later worked so efficiently in his political articles in the Atlantic and North American Review, and in such crowning glories of his prose as his 'Democracy' of 1884 and his 'Independent in Politics' of 1888. But it is not at all as if Lowell's literary energy was exhausted by his work on anti-slavery lines. Studying the bibliography of his writings for the years 1845-50, we discover that these years were remarkably prolific of poetry of the less strenuous kind. The waters troubled by the reform-spirit did more than strengthen him for his anti-slavery work. They touched his poetic genius in its most ethereal part to finer issues. The slackening of the anti-slavery impulse (1850-60) coincided with the minimum of his poetical production:

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

From a Photograph by Elliott & Fry.

To one reading Lowell's Biography, or Letters, or his Writings in the order of their production, the period 1845-49 is the most engaging which his life presents. Then he was poor; then he was happy; then he was tingling with the consciousness of various power. Sorrow came to him (the death of his first child, 1847), but it could not depress him long. The Broadway Journal might offer him a dollar a page for his best thoughts, and refuse them as smacking too much of reform; Edgar A. Poe and Margaret Fuller might touch sore spots; but none of these things could move him (if at all, for long) from the jocund temper of his habitual life. Never again is he so interesting, so lovable. His letters of this period lend themselves to the contention that letter-writing was his rarest gift; but only those can be convinced of this who did not know the boundless affluence and effervescence of his talk. These years, all vivid and abundant, had their degrees, and 1848 was Lowell's annus mirabilis. The bibliography furnishes abundant proof of this. From the multitude of the year's publications there stand out Poems, a third collection, bettering the second but not shaming it; A Fable for Critics; The Biglow Papers; and The Vision of Sir Launfal. The Fable, on one side witty and excellent criticism of Lowell's literary contemporaries, the caricatures better than poor likenesses, on the other side fell away into execrable puns and fantastic tricks in rhyming that would make the most perverse of Browning's weep, finding themselves outdone. In the Vision he was the reformer, wearing a disguise as thin as Vivien's samite robe, 'which more exprest than hid her.' Its best parts were the introductions to the first and second sections of the poem, one a winter piece, the other a rhapsody of June. Of Lowell's many variants of this theme, the best is the prelude part of Under the Willows. Great was his joy in the world out-of-doors, and excellent his gift for noting and for naming every suggestive aspect of the earth and sky. His beloved Keats was not more sensitive to the touch of natural beauty. The Biglow Papers, now collected, had for two years been adding wit to wit, satire to satire, scorn to scorn. Nowhere else did Lowell strike a note at once so powerful and unique. They painted the Mexican War just as it was, a sordid crime. Poetry was the best vehicle of his politics. The Yankee dialect of the Papers was not an invention nor an acquisition, but a reminiscence of that 'Cambridge Thirty Years Ago' of which he wrote so well. Fears have been expressed that the aptness of the Papers to their time would be fatal to their persistency. But the most recent history has found them quotable to a remarkable degree, and, so long as history repeats the folly and the meanness of mankind, here are bodkins to impale the one and swords to strike the other down. ('The Courtin,' first published with the Biglow Papers as 'an extract from a supposed ballad by Mr Biglow,' was originally written to fill a blank page, but was ultimately rounded off so as to make a connected and charming idyl or pastoral in twenty-four verses.)

Coincident with the mid-century there was a great divide in Lowell's life: where it had been eager, joyous, and productive, it became weary, sorrowful; spontaneity and enthusiasm vanished and invention failed. He had good reason to be sad. The 'reaper whose name is death' had been very busy in his field. Within a few years he had lost three children and his mother, and in 1853 the gentle wife, impassioned and impassioning, died also. A little property had come to them, and they had gone abroad; but their son Walter died in Rome, and after that the wife's decline went on with swifter pace. Bordering on her death there was for Lowell a region of thick darkness, a boding horror of intellectual ruin, in part excited by the spectacle of his father's miserable decay. Fortunately a plodding task made his life more endurable. In 1855 he succeeded Longfellow as Smith Professor of Belles Lettres in Harvard College. A course of Lowell Lectures on English Poetry marked him infallibly as the right man for this succession. It also marked the gain that he had made upon his early Conversations with some of the Old Poets (1845). Lowell's confession of indolence meant that he had his 'drowsy days,' alternating with seasons of furious activity. But with all the loss of the first Lowell, there was with the second a gain of steady effort. With less force—to use his own distinction—there was more power.

To say that Lowell the scholar was born of those mid-century pains would be no gross mistake. The strength of his professorial work went pre-eminently into studies of Dante and Shakespeare. Much of it enjoyed a second birth in the Atlantic Monthly and the North American Review, and is preserved in Among my Books, first series 1870, and second series 1876. The year 1857 was marked for Lowell by two notable events—his second marriage and his engagement as editor of the newly established Atlantic. From the completeness of his second marriage there was one serious deduction: his wife did not like his humour and detested his Biglow Papers. A new series of these was a dangerous venture, the first had set the mark so high; but the poet proved himself equal to it. With less spontaneity than the first series, they have more intellectual substance. Lowell's temperament was not more sensitive to private sorrow than to public spirit, and the Civil War drew from him not only the lightning of the new Biglow Papers, shattering every fallacy and blasting every baseness of the time, but also a series of great political essays, the earlier in the Atlantic, the later in the North American Review, of which he became joint-editor with Professor C. E. Norton in 1863. The war inspired poems besides those of the Papers, and, at its close, the Harvard Commemoration Ode (1865), the most significant product of his poetic faculty from a national point of view. The joy of its swift shaping (523 lines in six hours) made him feel young again. A great ode, it is not one of the most perfect in its form, having the defects of its improvisation. The splendid characterisation of Lincoln was not originally a part of it. Its reputation selected Lowell as the writer of three other odes, celebrating great national anniversaries in 1875, 1876; but, while Under the Great Elm contained a tribute to Washington which was only less splendid than the earlier tribute to Lincoln, in general these were far below the height of the Ode of 1865. The years following the war were as prodigal of poems as a battlefield of flowers, and these, with earlier ones, were gathered up in Under the Willows (1869). In 1870 appeared The Cathedral, Lowell's brilliant poetic comment on the interrelations of science and religion, marred here and there by spurts of irrepressible jocosity. A final volume, Hearts-ease and Rue (1888), was variously rich, not least in poems that were stern reflections on the political turpitude into which the country fell away too soon from the impassioned ardours of its most fearful hour. Giving great offence to the political Bourbons, these poems endeared him to reformers and independents in politics, and because of them, or in spite of them, he was made minister to Spain by President Hayes (1877), and to England in 1880, remaining in this position till 1885. The diplomatic situation was not exigent, but his social opportunities were great, and his success with them did much to commend his country to the British mind. For one who had so long skirted the coasts of Bohemia, his skill in steering along those of Philistia was certainly immense. His Birmingham address, 'Democracy,' was distinctly a bearding of the British lion in his den; but its noble frankness won him the respect which he would have forfeited by a less manly course. The address was as impromptu as the Harvard ode; but by this time Lowell's prose was pruned of all its earlier excess, if with some loss for things in lighter vein, with distinct gain for such addresses as the 'Democracy,' and the later (1888) 'Independent in Politics.' In the former he had glorified American principles abroad; in the latter the defects of American practice at home invited the genial satire of his ripest power. His increasing sense that 'there is something magnificent in having a country to love' was on the reverse side a growing scorn of those who did political iniquity. His own conception of patriotism was never better indicated than in his 'Epistle to his high-minded friend George William Curtis, where he wrote:

I loved my country so as only they
Who love a mother fit to die for may;
I loved her old renown, her stainless fame,—
What better proof than that I loathed her shame?

Lowell wished that he might die at Elmwood, and he had his wish, after much suffering, on the 12th of August 1891. He was a brilliant wit and a delightful humourist; a discursive essayist of unfailing charm; the best American critic of his time; a scholar of wide learning, deep also where his interest was most engaged; a powerful writer on great public questions; a patriot 'passionately pure;' but first, last, and always he was a poet, never so happy as when he was looking at the world from the poet's mount of vision and seeking for fit words and musical to tell what he had seen. But his emotion was not sufficiently 'recollected in tranquillity.' Had he been more an artist he would have been a better poet, for he would then have challenged the invasions of his literary memory, his humour, his animal spirits, within limits where they had no right of way. If his humour was his rarest, it was his most dangerous, gift; so often did it tempt him to laugh out in some holy place. Accused of literary inspiration, for first-hand acquaintance with Nature he had no superior; nor did Thoreau rejoice in her companionship with more unaffected joy. What is most subjective in his verse, its keenest notes of joy and sorrow, draws us by a yet stronger cord. Less charming than Longfellow, less homely than Whittier, less artistic than Holmes, less grave than Bryant, less vivid than Emerson, less unique than Poe, his qualities, intellectual, moral, and æsthetic, in their assemblage and co-ordination assign him to a place among American men of letters which is only a little lower than that which is Emerson's, and his alone.

From 'A Fable for Critics.'

'There's Lowell, who's striving Parnassus to climb
 With a whole bale of isms tied together with rhyme;
 He might get on alone, spite of brambles and boulders,
 But he can't with that bundle he has on his shoulders;
 The top of the hill he will ne'er come nigh reaching Till he learns the distinction 'twixt singing and preaching;
 His lyre has some chords that would ring pretty well,
 But he'd rather by half make a drum of the shell,
 And rattle away till he's old as Methusalem,
 At the head of a march to the last new Jerusalem.'

Massachusetts.

Massachusetts, God forgive her,
 She's akneelin' with the rest,
 She, thet ough' to ha' clung fer ever
 In her grand old eagle-nest;
 She thet ough' to stand so fearless
 Wile the wracks are round her hurled,
 Holdin' up a beacon peerless
 To the oppressed of all the world!

Haint they sold your colored seamen?
 Haint they made your env'ys wiz?
 Wut'll make ye act like freemen?
 Wut'll git your dander riz?
 Come, I'll tell ye wut I'm thinkin'
 Is our dooty in this fix,
 They'd ha' done 't ez quick ez winkin'
 In the days o' seventy-six.

Clang the bells in every steeple,
 Call all true men to disown
 The tradocers of our people,
 The enslavers o' their own;
 Let our dear old Bay State proudly
 Put the trumpet to her mouth,
 Let her ring this messidge loudly
 In the ears of all the South:—

'I'll return ye good fer evil
 Much ez we frail mortils can,
 But I wun't go help the Devil
 Makin' man the cus o' man;
 Call me coward, call me traider,
 Jest ez suits your mean idees,—
 Here I stand a tyrant-hater,
 An' the friend o' God an' Peace!'

Ef I'd my way I hed ruther
 We should go to work an' part,—
 They take one way, we take t' other,—
 Guess it wouldn't break my heart;
 Man had ough' to put asunder
 Them thet God has noways jined;
 An' I shouldn't gretly wonder
 Ef there's thousands o' my mind.

(From Biglow Papers, 1st Series, No. 1.)

The Pious Editor's Creed.

I du believe in Freedom's cause,
 Ez fur away ez Payris is;
 I love to see her stick her claws
 In them infarnal Phayrisees;
 It's wal enough agin a king
 To dror resolves an' triggers—
 But libbaty's a kind o' thing
 Thet don't agree with niggers. . . .

I du believe thet I should give Wut's his'n unto Cæsar,
 Fer it's by him I move an' live,
 Frum him my bread an' cheese air;
 I du believe thet all o' me
 Doth bear his superscription,—
 Will, conscience, honor, honesty,
 An' things o' thet description. . . .

I du believe thet holdin' slaves
 Comes nat'ral tu a Presidnt,
 Let 'lone the rowdowed it saves
 To hev a wal-broke precedunt;
 Fer any office, small or gret,
 I couldn't ax with no face,
 Without I'd ben, thru dry an' wet,
 Th' unrizzest kind o' doughface.

I du believe wutever trash
 'Il keep the people in blindness,—
 Thet we the Mexicuns can thrash
 Right inter brotherly kindness,
 Thet bombshells, grape, an' powder 'n' ball
 Air good-will's strongest magnets,
 Thet peace, to make it stick at all,
 Must be druv in with bagnets.

In short, I firmly du believe
 In Humbug generally,
 Fer it's a thing thet I perceive
 To hev a solid vally;
 This heth my faithful shepherd ben,
 In pasturs sweet heth led me.
 An' this 'll keep the people green
 To feed ez they hev fed me.

(From Biglow Papers, 1st Series, No. vii.)

Jonathan to John.

It don't seem hardly right, John,
 When both my hands was full,
 To stump me to a fight, John,—
 Your cousin, tu, John Bull.
 Ole Uncle S. sez he, 'I guess
 We know it now,' sez he,
 'The lion's paw is all the law,
 Accordin' to J. B.,
 Thet's fit for you an' me!' . . .

We own the ocean, tu, John:
 You mus'n't take it hard,
 Ef we can't think with you, John,
 It's just your own back-yard.
 Ole Uncle S. sez he, 'I guess,
 Ef thet's his claim,' sez he,
 'The fencin'-stuff 'll cost enough
 To bust up friend J. B.,
 Ez wal ez you an' me!' . . .

We know we've got a cause, John,
 Thet's honest, just, an' true;
 We thought 't would win applause, John,
 Ef nowheres else, from you.
 Ole Uncle S. sez he, 'I guess
 His love of right,' sez he,
 'Hangs by a rotten fibre o' cotton:
 There's natur' in J. B.,
 Ez wal ez you an' me!'

The South says, 'Poor folks down!' John,
 An' 'All men up!' say we—
 White, yaller, black, an' brown, John :
 Now which is your idee?
 Ole Uncle S. sez he, 'I guess,
 John preaches wal,' sez he ;
 'But, sermon thru, an' come to du,
 Why, there 's the old J. B.
 A-crowdin' you an' me !'

Shall it be love, or hate, John ?
 It's you thet 's to decide ;
 Ain't your bonds held by Fate, John,
 Like all the world's beside?
 Ole Uncle S. sez he, 'I guess,
 Wise men forgive,' sez he,
 'But not forget ; an' some time yet
 Thet truth may strike J. B.,
 Ez wal ez you an' me !'

God means to make this land, John,
 Clear thru, from sea to sea,
 Believe an' understand, John,
 'The wuth o' bein' free.
 Ole Uncle S. sez he, 'I guess,
 God's price is high,' sez he ;
 'But nothin' else than wut He sells
 Wears long, an' thet J. B.
 May learn like you an' me !'
 (From Biglow Papers, 2nd Series, No. ii.)

From 'The Vision of Sir Launfal.'

And what is so rare as a day in June?
 Then, if ever, come perfect days ;
 Then Heaven tries the earth if it be in tune,
 And over it softly her warm ear lays :
 Whether we look, or whether we listen,
 We hear life murmur, or see it glisten ;
 Every clod feels a stir of might,
 An instinct within it that reaches and towers,
 And groping blindly above it for light,
 Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers ;
 The flush of life may well be seen
 Thrilling back over hills and valleys ;
 The cowslip startles in meadows green,
 The buttercup catches the sun in its chalice,
 And there 's never a leaf nor a blade too mean
 To be some happy creature's palace ;
 The little bird sits at his door in the sun,
 Atitl like a blossom among the leaves,
 And lets his illumined being o'errun
 With the deluge of summer it receives ;
 His mate feels the eggs beneath her wings,
 And the heart in her dumb breast flutters and sings ;
 He sings to the wide world, and she to her nest,—
 In the nice ear of Nature which song is the best ?

Now is the high-tide of the year,
 And whatever of life hath ebbed away
 Comes flooding back with a ripply cheer,
 Into every bare inlet and creek and bay ;
 Now the heart is so full that a drop overfills it,
 We are happy now because God wills it ;
 No matter how barren the past may have been,
 'Tis enough for us now that the leaves are green ;
 We sit in the warm shade and feel right well
 How the sap creeps up and the blossoms swell ;

We may shut our eyes, but we cannot help knowing
 That skies are clear and grass is growing ;
 The breeze comes whispering in our ear,
 That dandelions are blossoming near,
 That maize has sprouted, that streams are flowing,
 That the river is bluer than the sky,
 That the robin is plastering his house hard by ;
 And if the breeze kept the good news back,
 For other couriers we should not lack ;
 We could guess it all by yon heifer's lowing,—
 And hark ! how clear bold chanticleer,
 Warmed with the new wine of the year,
 Tells all in his lusty crowing !

Under the Willows.

Frank-hearted hostess of the field and wood,
 Gypsy, whose roof is every spreading tree,
 June is the pearl of our New England year.
 Still a surprisal, though expected long,
 Her coming startles. Long she lies in wait,
 Makes many a feint, peeps forth, draws coyly back,
 Then, from some southern ambush in the sky,
 With one great gush of blossom storms the world.
 A week ago the sparrow was divine ;
 The bluebird, shifting his light load of song
 From post to post along the cheerless fence,
 Was as a rhymer ere the poet come ;
 But now, O rapture ! sunshine winged and voiced,
 Pipe blown through by the warm wild breath of the West
 Shepherding his soft droves of fleecy cloud,
 Gladness of woods, skies, waters, all in one,
 The bobolink has come, and, like the soul
 Of the sweet season vocal in a bird,
 Gurgles in ecstasy we know not what Save June! Dear June! Now God be praised for June.

Abraham Lincoln.

Nature, they say, doth dote,
 And cannot make a man
 Save on some worn-out plan,
 Repeating us by rote :
 From him her Old World moulds aside she threw,
 And, choosing sweet clay from the breast
 Of the unexhausted West,
 With stuff untainted shaped a hero new,
 Wise, steadfast in the strength of God, and true.
 How beautiful to see
 Once more a shepherd of mankind indeed,
 Who loved his charge, but never loved to lead ;
 One whose meek flock the people joyed to be,
 Not lured by any cheat of birth,
 But by his clear-grained human worth,
 And brave old wisdom of sincerity !
 They knew that outward grace is dust ;
 They could not choose but trust
 In that sure-footed mind's unfaltering skill,
 And supple-tempered will
 That bent like perfect steel to spring again and thrust.
 His was no lonely mountain-peak of mind,
 Thrusting to thin air o'er our cloudy bars,
 A sea-mark now, now lost in vapours blind ;
 Broad prairie rather, genial, level-lined,
 Fruitful and friendly for all human kind,
 Yet also nigh to heaven and loved of loftiest stars.
 Nothing of Europe here,

Or, then, of Europe fronting mornward still,
 Ere any names of Serf and Peer
 Could Nature's equal scheme deface ;
 Here was a type of the true elder race,
 And one of Plutarch's men talked with us face to face.
 I praise him not ; it were too late ;
 And some innate weakness there must be
 In him who condescends to victory
 Such as the Present gives, and cannot wait,
 Safe in himself as in a fate.
 So always firmly he ;
 He knew to bide his time,
 And can his fame abide,
 Still patient in his simple faith sublime,
 Till the wise years decide.
 Great captains, with their guns and drums,
 Disturb our judgment for the hour,
 But at last silence comes ;
 These all are gone, and standing like a tower,
 Our children shall behold his fame,
 The kindly-earnest, brave, foreseeing man,
 Sagacious, patient, dreading praise, not blame,
 New birth of our new soil, the first American.

(From the Commemoration Ode.)

From 'Books and Libraries.'

To wash down the drier morsels that every library must necessarily offer at its board, let there be plenty of imaginative literature, and let its range be not too narrow to stretch from Dante to the elder Dumas. The world of the imagination is not the world of abstraction and nonentity, as some conceive, but a world formed out of chaos by a sense of the beauty that is in man and the earth on which he dwells. It is the realm of Might-be, our haven of refuge from the shortcomings and disillusion of life. It is, to quote Spenser, who knew it well—

'The world's sweet inn from care and wearisome turmoil.'

Do we believe, then, that God gave us in mockery this splendid faculty of sympathy with things that are a joy forever? For my part, I believe that the love and study of works of imagination is of practical utility in a country so profoundly material (or, as we like to call it, practical) in its leading tendencies as ours. The hunger after purely intellectual delights, the content with ideal possessions, cannot but be good for us in maintaining a wholesome balance of the character and of the faculties. I for one shall never be persuaded that Shakespeare left a less useful legacy to his countrymen than Watt. We hold all the deepest, all the highest transactions of life as tenants of imagination. Nature will keep up the supply of what are called hard-headed people without our help, and, if it come to that, there are other as good uses for heads as at the end of battering-rams.

I know that there are many excellent people who object to the reading of novels as a waste of time, if not as otherwise harmful. But I think they are trying to outwit nature, who is sure to prove cunninger than they. Look at children. One boy shall want a chest of tools, and one a botany, and of those who want books one shall ask for a book, another for a romance. They will be sure to get what they want, and we are doing a grave wrong to their morals by driving them to do things on the sly, to steal that food which their constitution craves and which is wholesome for them, instead of having it freely and frankly given them as the wisest possible diet.

If we cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, so neither can we hope to succeed with the opposite experiment. But we may spoil the silk for its legitimate uses. I can conceive of no healthier reading for a boy, or girl either, than Scott's novels, or Cooper's, to speak only of the dead. I have found them very good reading at least for one young man, for one middle-aged man, and for one who is growing old. No, no—banish the Antiquary, banish Leather Stocking, and banish all the world ! Let us not go about to make life duller than it is.

From 'Our Literature.'

Literature has been put somewhat low on the list of toasts, doubtless in deference to necessity of arrangement, but perhaps the place assigned to it here may be taken as roughly indicating that which it occupies in the general estimation. And yet I venture to claim for it an influence, whether for good or evil, more durable and more widely operative than that exerted by any other form in which human genius has found expression. As the special distinction of man is speech, it should seem that there can be no higher achievement of civilised men, no proof more conclusive that they are civilised men, than the power of moulding words into such fair and noble forms as shall people the human mind forever with images that refine, console, and inspire. It is no vain superstition that has made the name of Homer sacred to all who love a bewitchingly simple and yet ideal picture of our human life in its doing and its suffering. And there are books which have kept alive and transmitted the spark of soul that has resuscitated nations. It is an old wives' tale that Virgil was a great magician, yet in that tale survives a witness of the influence which made him, through Dante, a main factor in the revival of Italy after the one had been eighteen and the other five centuries in their graves.

I am not insensible to the wonder and exhilaration of a material growth without example in rapidity and expansion, but I am also not insensible to the grave perils latent in any civilisation which allows its chief energies and interests to be wholly absorbed in the pursuit of a mundane prosperity. 'Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth ; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth ; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.'

I admire our energy, our enterprise, our inventiveness, our multiplicity of resource, no man more ; but it is by less visibly remunerative virtues, I persist in thinking, that nations chiefly live and feel the higher meaning of their lives. Prosperous we may be in other ways, contented with more specious successes, but that nation is a mere horde supplying figures to the census which does not acknowledge a truer prosperity and a richer contentment in the things of the mind. Railways and telegraphs reckoned by the thousand miles are excellent things in their way, but I doubt whether it be of their poles and sleepers that the rounds are made of that ladder by which men or nations scale the cliffs whose inspiring obstacle interposes itself between them and the fulfilment of their highest purpose and function.

The literature of a people should be the record of its joys and sorrows, its aspirations and its shortcomings, its wisdom and its folly, the confidant of its soul. We cannot say that our own as yet suffices us, but I believe that he who stands, a hundred years hence, where I am standing now, conscious that he speaks to the most powerful and prosperous community ever devised or developed by man, will speak of our literature with the assurance of one who beholds what we hope for and aspire after become a reality and a possession forever.

There is an excellent biography of Lowell in two volumes by H. E. Scudder (Boston, 1901); another by F. H. Underwood (1893); a third by E. E. Hale, jun.; a fourth by Ferris Greenslet (1905)—besides James Russell Lowell and his Friends, by Dr E. E. Hale (1899). The best critical study is E. C. Stedman's in Poets of America. Lowell's complete works are published in eleven volumes ('Riverside Edition,' Boston, 1890-91; issued in London by Messrs Macmillan); his Letters in two volumes 8vo, edited by C. E. Norton (New York, 1899). There are complete one-volume editions of the Poems, 'Household' and 'Cambridge.' See also J. J. Reilly's Lowell as a Critic (1915), and G. W. Cooke's Bibliography (1906).

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

Walter Whitman,

better known as 'Walt Whitman' or 'The Good Gray Poet,' was born at West Hills, in the township of Huntington, Long Island, New York, 31st May 1819. The farm on which he was born had been in the Whitman family since the early settlement. His mother, a Van Velsor, was of Dutch descent. For two centuries the Whitmans and Van Velsors were neighbours on Long Island, which strikes eastward from the harbour of New York City for a hundred miles. This island, the 'Paumanok' of his poems, with its rude spaciousness and interminable sandy beaches, was just the place to nourish Whitman's expansiveness naturewards; while, only a few miles off, the cities of New York and Brooklyn nourished his equal passion for a swarming and tumultuous human life. Both parents heralded his big body, but he fancied his the features of his mother's mind, which the thick veil of her illiteracy hid from others, but could not hide from him. While Walt was still in petticoats the family, a large one, moved to Brooklyn, where he got an elementary education in the public schools, passing from them at thirteen into a printing-office, three and four years later doing a little school-teaching in the Long Island towns, already writing for the newspapers, and soon (1839-40) publishing and editing one of his own at Huntington. His first book (1842) was Franklin Evans, a temperance novel of the intemperate kind, and without one prophetic gleam of the coming man. But he was now entering on the period of his 'liberal education,' the soil of which after fifteen years of preparation would produce Leaves of Grass. These were years of strenuous idleness and insatiable curiosity. He did some work as printer and writer, but not more than he could help. His main business was to 'loaf and invite his soul.' Born into a political family (three of his brothers were named for Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson), he took kindly to political meetings, and had some success as a stump-orator. Meantime he was getting together the raw material for his ultimate creations, some of it very raw indeed. His official eulogists assure us that he now 'sounded all experiences of life, with all their passions, pleasures, and aban-donments.' The lonely shores and downs of his native island frequently enticed him, but oftener the city's boundless provocation, its busy streets, its libraries, museums, slums, music and dance halls, and places of all kinds where human nature was on exhibition, 'naked and not ashamed.' Best of all he loved the top of a Broadway omnibus, unrolling for him an endless panorama with moving figures, and the Brooklyn ferry-boats, on which for hours of the day or night he went back and forth, often sharing his house with the pilot, sometimes taking a hand at the wheel. Nothing found him indifferent; least of all the human comedy. In music, especially in the great singers of the time, he took a passionate delight, which lived a second life in many of his poems, if it did not distinctly mark their rhythmic form. A fertile incident was a long visit to New Orleans in 1848. It excited his sense of American bigness and inclusiveness, and gave a doubtful colour to his poetical phraseology.

Middle-age was thus reached without one memorable stroke of literary work, when in 1855 appeared Leaves of Grass, a startling apparition. Now it was clear enough what he had been doing with himself, to what purpose he had mingled with all sorts and conditions of men, making himself 'a motley to men's view,' the intimate 'Old Walt' of many questionable shapes, in Shakespeare's and another sense. The first edition of the Leaves contained but twelve poems. For frontispiece it had Whitman's picture in shirt-sleeves, with a slouched hat, tipped to one side, his arms akimbo. Here was a hint of Whitman the poseur, an aspect confessed by so warm an admirer as John Burroughs; by less friendly critics found everywhere obvious and aggressive, and fundamental to the spirit of Whitman's poetry and life. For friends he has not lacked at any time, such as John Burroughs and John Addington Symonds bringing him well-considered praise, while every mean attack has raised up for him some loyal defender and a new body of adherents. Putnam's Magazine, the dignified precursor of the Atlantic, reviewed the Leaves on its first coming in a generous and sympathetic manner. It was a matter of much more significance that Emerson hailed it as 'the most extraordinary piece of wit and wisdom that America had yet contributed,' finding in it 'incomparable things said incomparably well.' He did not like the frankness of the sexual celebration, nor the endless catalogues of incongruous articles, but he never drew back from his first general admiration. With the wider public the book excited little interest, some ridicule and disgust. In a second edition (1856) the number of poems was increased to thirty-two, and the original preface, a very noble piece of writing, was withheld. A third edition (1860) kept intact the 'Children of Adam,' after a long talk with Emerson, who insisted on 'the impolicy, the utter inadvisability' of that part of the book, which left

Whitman with 'a clear and unmistakable conviction to disobey all and go his own way.' This edition had some sale. In 1862 Whitman went to Washington, and for two years did patient and efficient service as a volunteer nurse in the soldiers' hospitals. Of these years there is ample and affecting record in his Drum-Taps and in The Wound-Dresser (a series of letters to his mother) and the prose Specimen Days. Appointed to a clerkship in the national Department of the Interior, he was dismissed by the Secretary as 'the author of an indecent book.' From this incident came W. D. O'Connor's splendid vindication, 'The Good Gray Poet,' and Whitman got another government appointment, which he held till he was stricken with paralysis in 1873. Apparently the emotional strain of the hospital service had sapped the foundations of his health. The remainder of his life was spent in Camden, New Jersey, an unlovely extension of Philadelphia, where he had noble visitors and faithful friends, with some whose flatteries would have sickened him had his appetite for such meat been less robust. New editions of his poems appeared from time to time, seed for the collector's harvest further on, a significant one in 1876, so broad the stamp on it of his individuality; and one in 1882, nearly complete, which his Boston publishers abandoned when threatened with prosecution by the Massachusetts Attorney-General. They begged Whitman to make some concessions to the official censor, but he stubbornly refused. Luther at Worms was not more intrac-table. Here he stood: he could no otherwise.

WALTER WHITMAN.

From a Photograph by Notman.

For some years of his homefaring his engagement with the thought of death was steady and profound, and embodied itself in much beautiful expression. He died as he had sung, with quiet confidence, 26th March 1892.

Carlyle found his earliest clear response in America; contrariwise Whitman, another 'hairy man,' his in England. But it is too often forgotten or concealed that it was an expurgated edition that made for Whitman his first English friends. Yet it is perhaps true that, like Poe, he has his most enthusiastic following abroad. Again, as with Poe, his theories of versification seem afterthoughts. We may as easily doubt that his irregular dithyrambs were deliberately adopted as the form best suited to his thought as that 'The Raven' was as mechanically set up and stuffed as Poe averred. Whitman wrote as he did because he could write in this way and could not write in the more formal rhythms. The method was not a defect. It was the inevitable expression of his character, which he described as 'disorderly, fleshly, and sensual.' It fitted him much better than his clothes—never a strong point with him. It was not, by any means, mere formlessness. With less melody than some other forms, it had more of harmony. Such poems as 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' 'Out of the Cradle,' 'Passage to India,' have the genesis and exodus of great musical compositions. It was not mere fancy on Whitman's part that he and Wagner made one music. There are, too, if not 'countless' particular felicities, as J. A. Symonds wrote, more than few. Many of the titles are short poems; many initial lines as musical as the conventional Apollo's lute. Many phrases are as picture-making as Carlyle's, as vivid as Emerson's, while others are particularly bad, as where the grass is called 'the uncut hair of graves' and God's perfumed handkerchief which he has dropped with his name in the corner. Both of these phrases have been admired, but the first would be as bad as possible were it not for the second. There are other defects which qualify but do not neutralise the better parts. The diction is often prosaic, but a worse fault is its inventions of mongrel French and Spanish words, the monstrous phrenological terminology, the paste-jewels of Whitman's own manufacture, and the lapses into mere prettiness. With many noble cadences, he has cacophonies that he might easily have smoothed away. His catalogues of things innumerable, pitch-forked together without order or congruity, have grieved his more judicious friends and inspired amusing parodies; but without them the total impression would be less powerful than it is now. He carries us away as with a flood, and they are the scouring of its banks, swirled on its tossing breast. A splendid anthology could be culled from Whitman's poems, but it would give us no idea of his prairial 'leagues of sun-illuminated corn,' bowed by a rushing wind. The multitude of his particulars is necessary to his main effect. He prevails in virtue of the volume and momentum of his stream. At his best he gives us a sense of elevation and expansion which is to the spirit what the height and air of mountains is to the bodily sense.

The audacity of Whitman's treatment of sex relations has given pause not only to his detractors à outrance, but to his admirers here and there. It is permitted us to doubt his taste and wisdom, but not his brave sincerity. Despising the 'snickering pruriency' and innuendo which are the warp and woof of men's habitual regard for sexual things, he would redeem them by an absolute frankness. But, pleading for their sacredness, he makes them so repulsive that his poems are discouragements of the normal relationships of sex, and he raises the question whether certain instinctive silences are not as sacred as the functions of the sexual man. Moreover, there is no recognition of romantic love in his poems. The procreative aspect swallows up every other.

The section of the Leaves called 'Calamus' has troubled some of Whitman's friends for whom his blessing on things sexual in 'Children of Adam' is not too frank and bold. It celebrates the mutual friendship of man with man in terms that are too sweet and soft for the more manly sort. A manly man likes not to be caressed by one of his own sex. Such a prophecy as this ought not to be of any private interpretation, yet J. A. Symonds had to wait for Whitman's private assurance of his intention before he could read without misunderstanding. It is at this point that we feel that Whitman, whose virility is so much vaunted by himself and others, has an invirile strain, a predilection for certain mushy words and sentiments and traits. His feeling for nature is involved in this, and there is in his natural descriptions a surplusage of such words as 'luscious,' 'voluptuous,' 'delicious.' It should, however, be said of 'Calamus' that it is highly representative of that passion for comradeship which was ever one of the master-passions of Whitman's mind.

If Whitman were an 'art for art's sake' decadent, these considerations would be irrelevant, but his friends claim for him, as he for himself, that his work was one of moral elevation. Hence a difficulty, much greater than that inherent in 'Children of Adam,' obtruded by such poems as 'Native Moments,' and passages of similar import which seem to teach a doctrine of moral indifference.

What blurt is this about virtue and vice?
Evil propels me and reform of evil propels me—
I stand indifferent.

And when he cries :

O to be relieved of distinctions! to make as much of vices as virtues,

we wonder at his dissatisfaction with his achieved success. Here, we are told, is the high-water mark of Whitman's sympathy: he is Terence's man to whom nothing human is foreign. But even though, 'if all were known, all would be forgiven,' it does not follow that it would be cordially assumed and re-enacted, as Whitman seems to say.

Before the face of Whitman's message, as this appeals to those who know him best and love him most, every defect of his manner, every exaggeration of his doctrine, hides a diminished head. Let the character of his admirers plead for him, barring some foolishness, and in the court of fame he will be gloriously crowned. No admiration did him more honour than that of Anne Gilchrist; and it was typical of a wide range. It fed upon his confidence in God and man, the universe and the immortal life. This confidence is not so much Whitman's as Whitman. It might be written of the Leaves as of the Koran, 'There is no doubt in this book.' This dauntless optimism attracts as does nothing else in Whitman's range. But that range is wide, and several points are salient in majestic rivalry. One that emerges conspicuously is the importance of the individual, the worth of every individual soul. Not Edwards nor Channing was more sure of this, and Emerson's 'First soul, and second soul, and evermore soul' might be a leaf of Whitman's grass. It is as the soul's organ and minister that the body is so much to him. It is as nourishing the soul that the universe is most wonderful, while still the soul is ever more than it.

Swiftly I shrivel at the thought of God,
At Nature and its Wonders, Time and Space and Death,

But that I, turning, call to thee, O Soul, thou actual Me,
And lo, thou gently masterest the orbs,
Thou matest Time, smilest content at Death,
And fillest, swellest full the vastnesses of Space.

It is as the arena of individuality, as the soul's opportunity, that Democracy is so important and its 'vistas' so encouraging. (It should be said, however, that in his prose Democratic Vistas (1871) there was much less brag than in the earlier poems, and a sure finger on some ailing spots.) It is because every individual is so precious that Whitman in his representative capacity—which qualifies at many points his towering egotism, or what appears to be such—disdains companionship with no fellow-being, even the most vile. The note of universal sympathy continually recurs, and it is so eloquently written because it is so genuinely felt. And, finally, it is because the individual soul is so great a being, the pride and darling of the universe, all things subordinate to it, that it is secure of endless life. God is not surer, and of Him the meanest thing in nature is a proof that 'sextillions of individuals' cannot confute.

The tragedy of Whitman's life and art is that, while he was so proudly and joyously the poet of the people in every aspect of their swarming life, they did not care for him. They preferred the cultivated Longfellow, the 'snow-bound' Whittier. And Whitman is still the poet of a literary class, and there is little sign of his approaching recognition and adoption by the Democracy with which he identified himself so heartily. So heartily, and yet not perfectly, so indifferent was he to those attractions of material wealth which are so powerful for his countrymen. Here, possibly, we have the secret of his failure to engage their interest.

Hours for the Soul.

July 22nd, 1878.—Living down in the country again. A wonderful conjunction of all that goes to make those sometime miracle-hours after sunset—so near and yet so far. Perfect, or nearly perfect days, I notice, are not so very uncommon; but the combinations that make perfect nights are few, even in a lifetime. We have one of those perfections to-night. Sunset left things pretty clear; the larger stars were visible soon as the shades allow'd. A while after eight, three or four great black clouds suddenly rose, seemingly from different points, and sweeping with broad swirls of wind but no thunder, underspread the orbs from view everywhere, and indicated a violent heat-storm. But without storm, clouds, blackness and all, sped and vanish'd as suddenly as they had risen; and from a little after nine till eleven the atmosphere and the whole show above were in that state of exceptional clearness and glory just alluded to. In the north-west turned the Great Dipper with its pointers round the Cynosure. A little south of east the constellation of the Scorpion was fully up, with red Antares glowing in its neck; while dominating, majestic Jupiter swam, an hour and a half risen, in the east—(no moon till after eleven). A large part of the sky seem'd just laid in great splashes of phosphorus. You could look deeper in, farther through, than usual; the orbs thick as heads of wheat in a field. Not that there was any special brilliancy either—nothing near as sharp as I have seen of keen winter nights, but a curious general luminousness throughout to sight, sense, and soul. The latter had much to do with it. (I am convinced there are hours of Nature, especially of the atmosphere, mornings and evenings, address'd to the soul. Night transcends, for that purpose, what the proudest day can do.) Now, indeed, if never before, the heavens declared the glory of God. It was to the full the sky of the Bible, of Arabia, of the prophets, and of the oldest poems. There, in abstraction and stillness (I had gone off by myself to absorb the scene, to have the spell unbroken), the copiousness, the removedness, vitality, loose-clear-crowdedness, of that stellar concave spreading overhead, softly absorb'd into me, rising so free, interminably high, stretching east, west, north, south—and I, though but a point in the centre below, embodying all.

As if for the first time, indeed, creation noiselessly sank into and through me its placid and untellable lesson, beyond—O, so infinitely beyond!—anything from art, books, sermons, or from science, old or new. The spirit's hour—religion's hour—the visible suggestion of God in space and time—now once definitely indicated, if never again. The untold pointed at—the heavens all paved with it. The Milky Way, as if some superhuman symphony, some ode of universal vagueness, disdaining syllable and sound—a flashing glance of Deity, address'd to the soul. All silently—the indescribable night and stars—far off and silently.

(From Specimen Days.)

Boston Common—More of Emerson.

Oct. 10-13.—I spend a good deal of time on the Common, these delicious days and nights—every midday from 11.30 to about 1—and almost every sunset another hour. I know all the big trees, especially the old elms along Tremont and Beacon Streets, and have come to a sociable-silent understanding with most of them in the sunlit air (yet crispy-cool enough), as I saunter along the wide unpaved walks. Up and down this breadth by Beacon Street, between these same old elms, I walk'd for two hours, of a bright sharp February midday twenty-one years ago, with Emerson, then in his prime, keen, physically and morally magnetic, arm'd at every point, and when he chose, wielding the emotional just as well as the intellectual. During those two hours he was the talker and I the listener. It was an argument—statement, reconnoitring, review, attack, and pressing home (like an army corps in order, artillery, cavalry, infantry) of all that could be said against that part (and a main part) in the construction of my poems, 'Children of Adam.' More precious than gold to me that dissertation—it afforded me, ever after, this strange and paradoxical lesson; each point of E.'s statement was unanswerable, no judge's charge ever more complete or convincing, I could never hear the points better put—and then I felt down in my soul the clear and unmistakable conviction to disobey all, and pursue my own way. 'What have you to say then to such things?' said E., pausing in conclusion. 'Only that, while I can't answer them at all, I feel more settled than ever to adhere to my own theory, and exemplify it,' was my candid response. Whereupon we went and had a good dinner at the American House. And thenceforward I never waver'd or was touch'd with qualms (as I confess I had been two or three times before).

(From Specimen Days.)

From 'Song of Myself.'

I believe a leaf of grass is no less than the journey-work of the stars,
And the pismire is equally perfect, and a grain of sand,
and the egg of the wren,
And the tree-toad is a chef-d'œuvre for the highest,
And the running blackberry would adorn the parlours of heaven,
And the narrowest hinge in my hand puts to scorn all machinery,
And the cow crunching with depress'd head surpasses any statue,
And a mouse is miracle enough to stagger sextillions of infidels. . . .

I think I could turn and live with animals, they are so placid and self-contain'd,
I stand and look at them long and long.

They do not sweat and whine about their condition,
They do not lie awake in the dark and weep for their sins,
They do not make me sick discussing their duty to God,
Not one is dissatisfied, not one is demented with the mania of owning things,
Not one kneels to another, nor to his kind that lived thousands of years ago,
Not one is respectable or unhappy over the whole earth.

So they show their relations to me and I accept them,
They bring me tokens of myself, they evince them plainly in their possession.

The City Dead-House.

By the city dead-house by the gate,
 As idly sauntering wending my way from the clangour,
 I curious pause, for lo, an outcast form, a poor dead prostitute brought,
 Her corpse they deposit unclaim'd, it lies on the damp brick pavement,
 The divine woman, her body, I see the body, I look on it alone,
 That house once full of passion and beauty, all else I notice not,
 Nor stillness so cold, nor running water from faucet, nor odours moribific impress me,
 But the house alone—that wondrous house—that delicate fair house—that ruin!
 That immortal house more than all the rows of dwellings ever built!
 Or white-domed capitol with majestic figure surmounted, or all the old high-spired cathedrals,
 That little house alone more than them all—poor, desperate house!
 Fair, fearful wreck—tenement of a soul—itself a soul, Unclaim'd, avoided house—take one breath from my tremulous lips,
 Take one tear dropt aside as I go for thought of you,
 Dead house of love—house of madness and sin, crumbled,
 crush'd,
 House of life, erewhile talking and laughing—but ah,
 poor house, dead even then,
 Months, years, an echoing, garnish'd house—but dead, dead, dead.

To the Man-of-War-Bird.

Thou born to match the gale, (thou art all wings,)
 To cope with heaven and earth and sea and hurricane,
 Thou ship of air that never furl'st thy sails,
 Days, even weeks untired and onward, through spaces,
 realms gyrating,
 At dusk that look'st on Senegal, at morn America,
 That sport'st amid the lightning-flash and thunder-cloud,
 In them, in thy experiences, hadst thou my soul,
 What joys! what joys were thine!

Prayer of Columbus.

A batter'd, wreck'd old man,
 Thrown on this savage shore, far, far from home,
 Pent by the sea and dark rebellious brows, twelve dreary months,
 Sore, stiff with many toils, sicken'd and nigh to death,
 I take my way along the island's edge,
 Venting a heavy heart.
 I am too full of woe!
 Haply I may not live another day;
 I cannot rest O God, I cannot eat or drink or sleep,
 Till I put forth myself, my prayer, once more to Thee, Breathe, bathe myself once more in Thee, commune with Thee,
 Report myself once more to Thee. . . .

One effort more, my altar this bleak sand;
 That Thou O God my life hast lighted,
 With ray of light, steady, ineffable, vouchsafed of Thee,
 Light rare untellable, lighting the very light,
 Beyond all signs, descriptions, languages;
 For that O God, be it my latest word, here on my knees,
 Old, poor, and paralysed, I thank Thee.

My terminus near,
 The clouds already closing in upon me,
 The voyage balk'd, the course disputed, lost,
 I yield my ships to Thee.

My hands, my limbs grow nerveless,
 My brain feels rack'd, bewilder'd,
 Let the old timbers part, I will not part,
 I will cling fast to Thee, O God, though the waves buffet me,
 Thee, Thee at least I know.

Is it the prophet's thought I speak, or am I raving?
 What do I know of life? what of myself?
 I know not even my own work past or present,
 Dim ever-shifting guesses of it spread before me,
 Of newer better worlds, their mighty parturition,
 Mocking, perplexing me.

And these things I see suddenly, what mean they?
 As if some miracle, some hand divine unseal'd my eyes,
 Shadowy vast shapes smile through the air and sky,
 And on the distant waves sail countless ships,
 And anthems in new tongues I hear saluting me.

The Death of Lincoln.

O Captain! my Captain! our fearful trip is done,
 The ship has weather'd every rack, the prize we sought is won,
 The port is near, the bells I hear, the people all exulting, While follow eyes the steady keel, the vessel grim and daring;
 But O heart! heart! heart!
 O the bleeding drops of red,
 Where on the deck my Captain lies,
 Fallen cold and dead.

O Captain! my Captain! rise up and hear the bells;
 Rise up—for you the flag is flung—for you the bugle trills,
 For you bouquets and ribbon'd wreaths—for you the shores a-crowding,
 For you they call, the swaying mass, their eager faces turning;
 Here Captain! dear father!
 This arm beneath your head!
 It is some dream that on the deck,
 You've fallen cold and dead.

My Captain does not answer, his lips are pale and still,
 My father does not feel my arm, he has no pulse nor will,
 The ship is anchor'd safe and sound, its voyage closed and done,
 From fearful trip the victor ship comes in with object won;

Exult O shores, and ring O bells!
 But I with mournful tread,
 Walk the deck my Captain lies,
 Fallen cold and dead.

From 'Passage to India.'

Swiftly I shrivel at the thought of God,
 At Nature and its wonders, Time and Space and Death.
 But that I, turning, call to thee O soul, thou actual Me,
 And lo, thou gently masterest the orbs,
 Thou matest Time, smilest content at Death,
 And fillest, swellest full the vastnesses of Space.

Greater than stars or suns,
 Bounding O soul thou journeyest forth;
 What love than thine and ours could wider amplify?
 What aspirations, wishes, outvie thine and ours O soul?
 What dreams of the ideal? what plans of purity, perfection, strength?

What cheerful willingness for others' sake to give up all?
 For others' sake to suffer all? . . .

Sail forth—steer for the deep waters only,
 Reckless O soul, exploring, I with thee, and thou with me,
 For we are bound where mariner has not yet dared to go,
 And we will risk the ship, ourselves and all.

O my brave soul!
 O farther, farther sail!
 O daring joy, but safe! are they not all the seas of God?
 O farther, farther, farther sail!

From 'Song of the Universal.'

The measur'd faiths of other lands, the grandeurs of the past,
 Are not for thee, but grandeurs of thine own,
 Deific faiths and amplitudes, absorbing, comprehending all,
 All eligible to all.

All, all for immortality,
 Love like the light silently wrapping all,
 Nature's amelioration blessing all,
 The blossoms, fruits of ages, orchards divine and certain,
 Forms, objects, growths, humanities, to spiritual images ripening.

Give me O God to sing that thought,
 Give me, give him or her I love this quenchless faith,
 In Thy ensemble, whatever else withheld withhold not from us,
 Belief in plan of Thee enclosed in Time and Space,
 Health, peace, salvation universal.

Is it a dream?
 Nay but the lack of it a dream,
 And failing it life's lore and wealth a dream,
 And all the world a dream.

Whitman's complete writings were issued in 1902 (10 vols., including Letters, Biography, and Bibliography). Recent mono-graphs are by H. B. Binns (1905), Bliss Perry ('American Men of Letters,' 1908), G. R. Carpenter ('English Men of Letters,' 1909), L. Bazalgette (Paris, 1908), B. De Selincourt (1914). For critical estimates see also Stedman's Poets of America; studies by Burroughs, A. Symonds, W. Clarke, and W. M. Salter, and a bibliography in Cambridge History of American Literature (vol. ii.
 1919). The editions of Leaves of Grass published during Whit-man's lifetime are the delight of bibliophiles and bibliographers.

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

William Lloyd Garrison (1805-79), born at Newburyport in Massachusetts, was apprenticed to the printer of a local paper, at seventeen began to write for it, and in 1824 became editor. In 1829 he was joint-editor of the Genius of Universal Emancipa-tion, published in Baltimore; and when the vigorous expression of his anti-slavery views led to his imprisonment for libel, friends paid his fine. He delivered emancipation lectures in New York and elsewhere, and returning to Boston, in 1831 started the Liberator, a paper which he carried on until slavery was abolished, though at first he suffered personal violence and was constantly threatened with assassination and prosecution. It was he who organised the Anti-Slavery Society. His Sonnets and other Poems (1847) were not his chief claim to remembrance. See Lives by his sons (4 vols.

 1885-89; new ed. 1893) and Goldwin Smith (1892).

Horace Greeley (1811-72) was born a small farmer's son at Amherst in New Hampshire, entered a printing-office, assisted in editorial work, and in 1834 started the weekly New Yorker, for which he wrote essays, poetry, and miscellaneous articles. In 1841 he founded the New York Tribune—successively Whig, anti-slavery Whig, and extreme Republican—of which he was leading editor till his death. In 1848 he was elected to Congress by a New York district. Before the Civil War he upheld the right of the Southern states to secede;
 when the war began he strenuously supported it;
 and after Lee's surrender he warmly advocated a universal amnesty. In 1872 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the presidency. His works include The American Conflict (1864-66), Recollections of a Busy Life (1868), Essays on Political Economy (1870), and What I know of Farming (1871).
 There are Lives by Patton (new ed. 1882), Ingersoll (1873), Zabriskie (1890), and Sotheran (1892).

Wendell Phillips (1811-84), born at Boston,
 Massachusetts, graduated at Harvard in 1831, and was called to the Bar in 1834; but he found himself irresistibly drawn to the real work of his life, and by 1837 was the principal orator of the anti-slavery party. He also championed the causes of temperance and women, and advocated the rights of the Indians. His speeches and letters were collected in 1863 (new ed. 1884). There is a Life by Austin (1888).

Thomas Wentworth Higginson (1823-1911), born at Cambridge in Massachusetts, was ordained to the ministry, from which he retired in 1858. Meanwhile he had been active in the anti-slavery agitation, and, with others, had been indicted for the murder of a man killed during an attempt to rescue a fugitive slave, but had escaped through a flaw in the indictment. In the Civil War he commanded the first regiment raised from among former slaves; in 1880-81 was a member of the Massachusetts legislature. Besides histories of the United States and of England for Americans, poems, Lives of Margaret Fuller Ossoli, Longfellow, and Whittier, and books about Massachusetts and old Cambridge, his works include
Outdoor Papers (1863), Army Life in a Black Regiment (1870), Oldport Days (1873), Common-Sense about Women (1881), Hints on Writing and Speechmaking (1887), Concerning All of Us (1892), Cheerful Yesterdays (1898), which is autobiographical, and a book on Contemporaries (1899).
 His collected works were reprinted in seven volumes in 1900. Later came Parts of a Man's Life (1905) and Carlyle's Laugh (1909). See Benton's A Typical American (1902), and the Life by Mary Thacher Higginson (1914).

Harriet Beecher Stowe,

the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin, was born in Litchfield, Connecticut, 14th June 1811. Her father was Lyman Beecher, a powerful preacher of New England orthodoxy with some personal variations, who in 1826 was called to Boston to check the rising flood of Unitarianism there, and met with some success. Harriet was the sixth of eight children by Roxanna Foote, after whose death Dr Beecher went on marrying and increasing his family. The seventh child of the first marriage was Henry Ward Beecher, the most popular preacher America has produced, mingling much poetry and humour with a profound spirituality, and carrying much farther his father's tentative reforms of the traditional theology. It was a remarkable family, not only for its ultimate size, but for the ability of its members. Harriet and Henry were its most shining lights, and their two hearts had but one beat as children and lifelong, especially in the anti-slavery struggle. The mother, a bright and beautiful spirit, contributed their finer parts. The father found her reading Sir Charles Grandison when he went to woo, and Evelina was another of her early joys. She died when Harriet was hardly four years old. When twelve the poor child wrote an essay on Immortality, and about the same time was as deeply affected by Lord Byron's death as young Tennyson by the same event; but his was grief for the dead poet, hers for the lost soul. During her father's Boston ministry he became aware of her as an individual and not merely one of his many children; and when in 1832 he removed to Cincinnati, Ohio, she joined his caravan. His object was to found the Lane Theological Seminary, hers to assist her sister Catherine in a female academy. She remained in Cincinnati eighteen years, a period of chronic illness and low spirits, poverty, anxiety, and domestic drudgery. Marrying Calvin E. Stowe, a teacher in her father's school, in 1836, she bore six children in swift succession; her husband, meantime, less the supporting oak than the dependent vine. His most brilliant moment was in 1842, when he advised his wife to drop her original middle name (Elizabeth) and go in for literary fame. The next year a volume of her stories was published, but they were not much. For her tract of this period, Earthly Care a Heavenly Discipline, she had but to look into her own heart and write.

The year 1850 was signalised by her removal to Brunswick, Maine, the seat of Bowdoin College, where Hawthorne and Longfellow had been classmates at an earlier date, and where now her husband was to occupy a professor's chair. The labour of moving and getting settled fell largely to her share; so that she was 'really glad of an excuse to lie in bed'—the birth of her seventh child, with whom in arms, and full of household care, she wrote Uncle Tom's Cabin in 1851-52, publishing it in the National Era, a semi-literary and anti-slavery paper issuing from Washington, District of Columbia. She had no clear idea at the start how she was going on or coming out. She expected to finish it in twelve numbers, and it ran through forty-three. The first part written was 'The Death of Uncle Tom,' which came to her as a kind of vision while she was in church. In the course of its appearance in the Era it excited little attention. Nevertheless, a Boston publisher thought there was something in it, and offered to publish it, giving her a half-share of the profits. She declined the offer because her husband was 'altogether too poor to assume the risk.' The publisher assumed this and gave her 10 per cent. royalty, which brought her $20,000 in the course of six months. The Era had given her $300. The wonderful fortunes of the book are related by Mrs Stowe in the 'Illustrated Edition' of 1879, when there were forty-three English editions in the British Museum and nineteen translations. A literature of imitation, criticism, and counterblast sprang up around the book, above which it easily towered. A little later a circulation of 1,500,000 was reckoned in Great Britain alone. (Dr Charles M. Clarke tells the story of its first publication in England and its phenomenal subsequent success in 'Liber Mirabilis,' Chambers's Journal, Feb. 1921).

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

After a Photograph.

Even more remarkable than the external fortunes of the book is the author's lack of intellectual and moral preparation for it and pre-engagement with it. Her first knowledge of slavery on its own ground was in 1833, when she visited a Kentucky plantation, which became Colonel Shelby's in the book. She saw something of pro-slavery riots in Cincinnati, and something of runaway slaves, only the Ohio's width intervening between Cincinnati and slave territory. Once she had a slave-girl as a servant in her house, and when the man-hounds were on the girl's track Mrs Stowe's husband and brother spirited her away towards Canada, so furnishing Mrs Stowe with one of her strong incidents. Had her own scent upon the trail of slavery been keen, her opportunities for intimate knowledge of it would have been adequate to her demands. But living for eighteen years next door to slavery, and, as it were, in the first station of the 'underground railroad,' she does not appear to have had any deep interest in the matter during those years. She probably sympathised with her father when, at the dictation of the slaveholding interests, he silenced the discussion of slavery in his school and forced the withdrawal of the anti-slavery students. She disliked the abolitionists and was still a 'colonisationist' when she wrote Uncle Tom's Cabin. Apparently she waited, as did many others, for the operation of the Fugitive Slave Law (1850) to wake her sleeping heart, and it was first through another's eyes that she saw the horror of the situation. Her brother Edward's wife in Boston had a close view of the slave captures and renditions, and she wrote to Mrs Stowe commanding her to 'write something that would make this whole nation feel what an accursed thing slavery is.' Mrs Stowe read the letter in her little Brunswick parlour, and then crushing it in her hand, as if it were the monster, said, erecting her tired body, 'I will write something. I will, if I live.' No vow was ever kept more sacredly. Once launched upon the tide of her story, she was swept along with passionate sympathy. Much of it was written in the small hours of the night, after the baking, mending, child-nursing, house-painting, and other drudgery of the day. The book written in this fashion had the defects of its qualities. The plot was loose and rambling; the style had ailing spots; the knowledge of Southern life and character and situation had its defective side. But the author had the divine gift of imagination, and her book was all alive. Every character had reality; so had the scenery of the book; so had its main effect. It did not exaggerate the horrors of slavery. It confessed the better side. But that its general truth was not too harsh the Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin, published in 1853, furnished irrefragable proof. It is difficult to estimate the effect of the book on the anti-slavery cause. It has generally been accounted its most powerful instrument. Lincoln said to Mrs Stowe in 1862, 'Are you the little woman that made this great war?' On the other hand, we have to reckon with the fact that the anti-slavery vote fell off nearly one-half in the presidential election of 1852. Shortly the book had 'great allies'—the repeal of the Missouri compromise in 1854 and the Kansas conflict following. But, however modified or enhanced, its effect on the great struggle, now rapidly approaching its climax, must have been deep and wide.

It helped to liberate the slave; it entirely liberated Mrs Stowe's own genius and in part her spirit. After 1852 she seemed a different woman. In her letters the dignity of great events supplanted her domestic miseries. Her book made her an abolitionist. The grind of poverty was over, while still she must somehow be always scraping her brains for money as if there were still a wolf at the door. In England she was the object of an ovation which would have spoiled a nature less entirely simple than her own. In Dred (1856), a second anti-slavery novel, and in The Minister's Wooing, and especially in Old Town Folks, she attained an artistic excellence denied to her great improvisation. Had Uncle Tom's Cabin rendered Southern life as perfectly as Old Town Folks rendered New England life and character, without loss of lyrical passion, it would have been a greater book. In Dred there was some waking to the perception of the ex-slaveholder, James G. Birney, that the American churches were 'the bulwark of slavery.' In the Minister's Wooing Mrs Stowe's moral nature was more deeply engaged than in Uncle Tom, for slavery never shook her soul with its enormity as did the doctrine of endless future punishment. Agnes of Sorrento and The Pearl of Orr's Island, agreeable stories, suffered from the exigencies of simultaneous production. To drive her spontaneous soul in publisher's harness was always difficult. She anticipated no permanent reputation for her writings subsequent to Old Town Folks. The closing period of her life crowned her with great reverence and affection, while burdening her with domestic sorrow, a fierce attack upon her brother's character, the painful episode of her own attack upon Lord Byron's, and the slow but sure breaking down of her mind some years before her death, which occurred 1st July 1896.

Mrs Stowe's works, as published in the 'Riverside Edition' in seventeen volumes, include a Life written by her friend Annie Fields in one volume. This, an excellent book, is also published separately (1898). There is another Life, 'compiled from her journal and letters,' by her son Charles (1890); and a third (1911) by that son and her grandson, Lyman Beecher Stowe.

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

Henry Ward Beecher (1813-87), Mr Beecher Stowe's brother (see page 812), graduated at Amherst College, preached for eight years at Indianapolis, and in 1847 became pastor of Plymouth (Congregational) Church in Brooklyn, where, practically ignoring formal creeds, he preached what he held to be the gospel of Christ, contended for temperance, and denounced slavery to an immense congregation. He was a strenuous politician; at the close of the war in 1865 he became an earnest advocate of reconciliation. He long wrote for the Independent, and after 1870 edited the Christian Union. A charge of adultery (1874) was not proved. Of his writings, many of them first published in journals, the principal are Star Papers (1855), Summer in the Soul (1858), Eyes and Ears (1864), Lectures to Young Men (1844; revised ed. 1850), Aids to Prayer (1864), Norwood (1867), Lecture-Room Talks (1870), Yale Lectures on Preaching (1872-1874), Evolution and Religion (1885), and A Life of Christ (1891). Many collections of his sermons, lectures, and speeches were published; two volumes of sermons selected by Lyman Abbot in 1868 are of his best. Other volumes were called Life Thoughts and Comforting Thoughts. He was a most eloquent and effective orator in pulpit and on platform, and wrote largely for journals; his sermons and prayers were phonographically reported. Besides his Autobiographical Reminiscences (1898), there are more than half-a-dozen Lives of him; those by Scoville and others (1888) and Lyman Abbott (1903) are the most authoritative.

John Lothrop Motley,

New Englander to the backbone though he was, did not trace his paternal line of ancestry to the Puritan settlers. His great-grandfather, John Motley, who emigrated from Ireland to Maine in the early eighteenth century, may have contributed a new element to the original Massachusetts stock. Still, the typical blood of the American Boston also ran in the historian's veins; his mother was descended from John Lothrop, a Nonconformist minister, who fled to Massachusetts in the seventeenth century to escape imprisonment in England. It was Anna Lothrop who gave his distinguished appearance to her son (one of her eight children), who was born 15th April 1814, at Dorchester, now part of the city of Boston. From a preliminary school, Lothrop went to a school where George Bancroft, one of the head-masters, moved him to acquire German. In 1831 he graduated at Harvard University, where one of his college friends was Oliver Wendell Holmes, later his biographer. From Harvard the eighteen-year-old student passed to Göttingen, where he began an intimacy with Bismarck which continued unbroken to his death; at Berlin the two were fellow-lodgers. Two years of German university life were followed by law studies in Boston. During this period Motley met and married (1837) Mary Benjamin, who for thirty-seven years was an inspiration to him. Two years later (1839) was launched anonymously his first literary venture, a crude and youthful romance called Morton's Hope, into which were worked in modified form many of the author's experiences.

At the age of twenty-seven Motley was sent to St Petersburg as Secretary of Legation; but he disliked the place, and resigned after a very brief experience. By the summer of 1842 he was again in America, and took part in the unsuccessful presidential campaign of Henry Clay (1844). For the North American Review he wrote in 1845 and 1847 two papers, one on Peter the Great, the other on the Puritans, which surprised the critics. In 1849 he served one term in the Massachusetts legislature; and in the same year he published his second novel, Merry-Mount, artistically an improvement on Morton's Hope; in Holmes's opinion it is less suggestive of Pelham and Vivian Gray, and has more in common with Woodstock and Kenilworth. By the time Merry-Mount saw the light Motley was well embarked on his preliminary exploration of the sources of Dutch history. When Motley heard that Prescott was preparing to follow up his Conquest of Peru with his Philip II., he went to him at once to tell him of his own plan, which covered so much of the same ground; and Prescott not only assured the young man that there was room for both enterprises, but offered him all the printed matter he had at so much pains and cost collected. Ere long Motley felt he could not do justice to his subject in America, and in 1851 he went to Europe with his family to continue his preparations.

Over four years were spent in researches at Dresden, the Hague, and at Brussels; and in 1856 The Rise of the Dutch Republic, the fruit of ten years' work, appeared. In the Westminster Review Froude wrote: 'A history as complete as industry and genius can make it now lies before me of the first twenty years of the Revolt of the United Provinces. . . . It has been the result of many years of silent, thoughtful, unobtrusive labour, and unless we are strangely mistaken, unless we are ourselves altogether unfit for this office of criticising which we have here undertaken, the book is one which will take its place among the finest histories in this or any language. . . . All essentials of a great writer Mr Motley eminently possesses. His mind is broad, his industry unwearied. In power of dramatic description no modern historian, except perhaps Mr Carlyle, surpasses him, and in analysis of character he is elaborate and distinct.' Prescott wrote with warm appreciation, his only criticism being, 'You have laid it on Philip rather hard. Indeed, you have whittled him down to such an imperceptible point that there is hardly enough of him left to hang a newspaper paragraph on, much less five or six volumes of solid history, as I propose to do. But then you make it up with your own hero, William of Orange, and I comfort myself that you are looking through a pair of Dutch spectacles often.' The criticism was doubtless just. Orange was seen by Motley through a rose-coloured medium, and was the hero of the story as truly as if he had been created for a more successful novel than the two early efforts. Dutch and French versions of the book were made by Bakhuizen van den Brink, archivist of Holland, and by M. Guizot. Bakhuizen commended Motley's work as an excellent basis for the history of the rise of the republic; and other scholars in the Netherlands bore testimony to the thoroughness with which the American had examined the sources of their national history.

In London, in Rome, and in Boston Motley continued his researches and wrote industriously; and the second harvest of his labours appeared in 1860 in the form of the first two volumes of The United Netherlands. The period treated was only five years (1584-89), but the area dealt with was vast. So closely did the new state come into touch with France and England, its poise as a balance of power was so delicate, that in discussing its history an understanding of conditions in adjacent lands was essential. And even at the time it was fully recognised that Motley had availed himself of many sources of information not used by any earlier writer.

JOHN LOTHROP MOTLEY.

By permission of Mr John Murray.

In 1860-61 Motley was busied in the State Paper Office and the British Museum, and lived with his family in London. His letters give delightful pictures of the social recognition his reputation had won for him; Oxford honoured him with an honorary degree. Meanwhile he was watching events in his own country closely. Absentee though he was, he was keenly and intelligently patriotic, a firm believer in Republican government; and in order to correct the misconceptions of American affairs which he heard constantly expressed, he wrote two long letters to the Times, reprinted later under the title of The Causes of the Civil War.

In the spring of 1861 he returned to America, intending to remain there, but he accepted Lincoln's appointment to represent the United States at the Court of Austria; and the autumn found him established in Vienna at a time when complications in Europe raised many difficult problems, irrespective of events at home, from the early stages of the war to the assassination of Lincoln. While Motley was straining every nerve to maintain the honour of the Union, a Southern writer (John B. Adger in the Southern Presbyterian Review, July 1862) used his Rise of the Dutch Republic as a text to urge the righteousness of the Confederate cause, drawing a close parallel between the condition of the seceding states and the revolting Netherlands. Motley's comments on European affairs in his personal letters are spirited and charming, though sometimes oddly colloquial in phrase. The correspondence between him and Bismarck often sounds as if the grave statesman and the scholarly diplomat were still undergraduates without responsibilities to the world. Motley's long and pleasant official residence in Vienna came to an abrupt close in 1866. The malicious attacks of an unknown person, noticed by Secretary Seward, caused Motley to resign the post that he had filled with dignity and honour, and President Johnson accepted his resignation.

Fortunately for him, his historical work demanded continuous attention. He went on steadily with the concluding volumes of the United Netherlands, published in 1868, in which the narrative is brought down to 1609. As a whole the second work is less interesting than the story of the revolt against Spain—it is looser in construction, and has not the special advantage of presenting two contrasting characters like Philip II. and William of Orange. Furthermore, the author was too much affected by the Civil War in America, and drew his parallels between the situations in the United Netherlands and the United States more closely than was warrantable. During a brief residence in America that same year he delivered two noteworthy addresses, one at Faneuil Hall, Boston, on 'Four Questions for the People at the Presidential Election,' and the other before the New York Historical Society on 'Historic Progress and American Democracy.'

One of the first acts of the administration of President Grant was Motley's appointment as minister to the Court of St James's (1869). His unexpected recall in the summer of 1870 was a painful experience to the man whose disinterested devotion to his country was patent in every word he thought and uttered. The question as to whether, in his preliminary conversation with Lord Clarendon on the question of the settlement of the Alabama claims, Motley overstepped his definite instructions is beyond the scope of a brief summary of his historical work. The sympathy of his contemporaries was with the minister; but in more recent treatment of the history of Grant's administration there is some tendency to hold that, from a diplomatic point of view, Motley was possibly indiscreet.

The remaining seven years of the historian's life were devoted to the continuance of his Netherland history, which he hoped to bring through the Thirty Years' War. From the central figure he called his next two volumes The Life and Death of John of Barneveld. They covered the period of the Truce in the Netherlands (1609-21), were published in 1874, and proved the conclusion of their author's life-work. If Morton's Hope is autobiographical in suggesting some of Motley's youthful aspirations, if the United Netherlands reflects the crisis through which the writer lived as he wrote, his last work must also be regarded as coloured by his personal experience; President Grant, like Maurice, was a military man in civil affairs. Motley's sympathy with Barneveld is pronounced. More than his other works this aroused Dutch writers to dissent; they hastened to defend Maurice, whom they think the American failed to understand; too obviously he had no liking for him.

The last seven years of Motley's life were passed between England and the Hague, with one visit to America. His stay in Holland was peculiarly pleasant. His services to Dutch history were recognised by the King and Queen of Holland as well as by the people. But his hopes of carrying his work through the Thirty Years' War were frustrated by ill-health. Mrs Motley's death in 1874 gave her husband a shock from which he never recovered, and he followed her in 1877. He died (29th May) at Kingston Russell in Dorsetshire, in the house of his daughter, Lady Vernon Harcourt, and was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery near his wife.

Motley's character is plainly to be traced in his work. His laborious researches and his vivifying imagination enabled him to make the past live again; and, within certain limits, he was wonderfully true to his materials. But his keen and eager temperament made it impossible for him to attain to the historian's virtue of judicial impartiality; he hardly conceals the fact that he is a partisan. His picturesque and eloquent style sometimes attains real splendour, but is apt to fatigue; perhaps his work is best where it is least adorned with rhetorical ornament.

The Beggars.

The board glittered with silver and gold. The wine circulated with more than its usual rapidity among the band of noble Bacchanals, who were never weary of drinking the healths of Brederode, of Orange, and Egmont. It was thought that the occasion imperiously demanded an extraordinary carouse, and the political events of the past three days lent an additional excitement to the wine. There was an earnest discussion as to an appropriate name to be given to their confederacy. Should they call themselves the 'Society of Concord,' the restorers of lost liberty, or by what other attractive title should the league be baptized? Brederode was, however, already prepared to settle the question. He knew the value of a popular and original name; he possessed the instinct by which adroit partisans in every age have been accustomed to convert the reproachful epithets of their opponents into watchwords of honour, and he had already made his preparations for a startling theatrical effect. Suddenly, amid the din of voices, he arose, with all his rhetorical powers at command. He recounted to the company the observations which the Seigneur de Berlaymont was reported to have made to the Duchess upon the presentation of the request, and the name which he had thought fit to apply to them collectively. Most of the gentlemen then heard the memorable sarcasm for the first time. Great was the indignation of all, that the state-councillor should have dared to stigmatise as beggars a band of gentlemen with the best blood of the land in their veins. Brederode, on the contrary, smoothing their anger, assured them with good humour that nothing could be more fortunate. 'They call us beggars!' said he; 'let us accept the name. We will contend with the Inquisition, but remain loyal to the King, even till compelled to wear the beggar's sack.'

He then beckoned to one of his pages, who brought him a leathern wallet such as was worn at that day by professional mendicants, together with a large wooden bowl, which also formed part of their regular appurtenances. Brederode immediately hung the wallet around his neck, filled the bowl with wine, lifted it with both hands, and drained it at a draught. 'Long live the beggars!' he cried, as he wiped his beard and set the bowl down. 'Vivent les gueux!' Then for the first time, from the lips of those reckless nobles rose the famous cry which was so often to ring over land and sea, amid blazing cities, on blood-stained decks, through the smoke and carnage of many a stricken field.

(From The Rise of the Dutch Republic.)

The Siege of Antwerp.

With Sainte Aldegonde came the unlucky Koppen Loppen, and all that could be spared of the English and Scotch troops in Antwerp, under Balfour and Morgan. With Hohenlo and Justinus de Nassau came Reinier Kant, who had just succeeded Paul Buys as Advocate of Holland. Besides these came two other men, side by side, perhaps in the same boat, of whom the world was like to hear much from that time forward, and whose names are to be most solemnly linked together so long as Netherland history shall endure; one a fair-faced, flaxen-haired boy of eighteen, the other a square-visaged, heavy-browed man of forty—Prince Maurice and John of Olden-Barneveldt. The statesman had been foremost to urge the claim of William the Silent's son upon the stadholderate of Holland and Zeeland, and had been, as it were, the youth's political guardian. He had himself borne arms more than once before, having shouldered his matchlock under Batenburg, and marched on that officer's spirited but disastrous expedition for the relief of Haarlem. But this was the life of those Dutch rebels. Quill-driving, law-expounding, speech-making, diplomatic missions, were intermingled with very practical business in besieged towns or open fields, with Italian musketeers and Spanish pikemen. And here, too, young Maurice was taking his first solid lesson in the art of which he was one day to be so distinguished a professor. 'It was a sharp beginning. Upon this ribband of earth, scarce six paces in breadth, with miles of deep water on both sides—a position recently fortified by the first general of the age, and held by the famous infantry of Spain and Italy—there was likely to be no prentice-work. To assault such a position was in truth, as Alexander had declared it to be, a most daring and desperate resolution on the part of the States. 'Soldiers, citizens, and all,' said Parma, 'they are obstinate as dogs to try their fortune.'

With wool-sacks, sand-bags, hurdles, planks, and other materials brought with them, the patriots now rapidly entrenched themselves in the position so brilliantly gained; while, without deferring for an instant the great purpose which they had come to effect, the sappers and miners fastened upon the iron-bound soil of the dyke, tearing it with pick, mattock, and shovel, digging, delving, and throwing up the earth around them, busy as human beavers, instinctively engaged in a most congenial task.

But the beavers did not toil unmolested. The large and determined force of Antwerp and English, Hollanders and Zealanders, guarded the fortifications as they were rapidly rising, and the pioneers as they were so manfully delving; but the enemy was not idle. From Fort Saint James, next beyond Saint George, Camillo del Monte led a strong party to the rescue. There was a tremendous action, foot to foot, breast to breast, with pike and pistol, sword and dagger. Never since the beginning of the war had there been harder fighting than now upon that narrow isthmus. 'Twas an affair of most brave obstinacy on both sides,' said Parma, who rarely used strong language. 'Soldiers, citizens, and all—they were like mad bulldogs.' Hollanders, Italians, Scotchmen, Spaniards, Englishmen, fell thick and fast. The contest was about the entrenchments before they were completed, and especially around the sappers and miners, in whose picks and shovels lay the whole fate of Antwerp. Many of the dyke-breakers were digging their own graves, and rolled, one after another, into the breach which they were so obstinately creating. Upon that slender thread of land the hopes of many thousands were hanging. To tear it asunder, to roll the ocean-waves up to Antwerp, and thus to snatch the great city triumphantly from the grasp of Philip—to accomplish this the three thousand had come forth that May morning. To prevent it, to hold firmly the great treasure entrusted to them, was the determination of the Spaniards. And so, closely pent and packed, discharging their carbines into each other's faces, rolling, coiled together, down the slimy sides of the dyke into the black waters, struggling to and fro, while the cannon from the rebel fleet and from the royal forts mingled their roar with the sharp crack of the musketry, Catholics and patriots contended for an hour, while still, through all the confusion and uproar, the miners dug and delved.

At last the patriots were victorious. They made good their entrenchments, drove the Spaniards, after much slaughter, back to the fort of Saint George on the one side, and of the Palisade on the other, and cleared the whole space between the two points. The centre of the dyke was theirs; the great Kowenstyn, the only key by which the gates of Antwerp could be unlocked, was in the deliverers' hands. They pursued their victory, and attacked the Palisade Fort. Gamboa, its commandant, was severely wounded, many other officers dead or dying; the outworks were in the hands of the Hollanders; the slender piles on which the fortress rested in the water were rudely shaken; the victory was almost complete.

(From The United Netherlands.)

The library edition of Motley's works in seventeen volumes (1900) does not include the novels, but it contains the Correspondence, originally edited in two volumes by G. W. Curtis in 1889. Dr Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote a Memoir (1879; new ed. 1889). There is a short Life by Professor Jameson (1897); and to an edition of The Dutch Republic in 1896 Moncure Conway prefixed a biographical introduction. See also E. P. Whipple in Recollections of Eminent Men (1878), and Motley and his Family, edited by his daughter and H. St. J. Mildmay (1910).

RUTH PUTNAM.

Francis Parkman

belongs to the 'picturesque school' of American writers of history, of which Prescott and Motley, and, in so far as he was a historian, Irving also, are conspicuous representatives. He was born 16th September 1823, the eldest son of the Rev. Francis Parkman, minister of the New North Church (Unitarian) in Boston, and died there on the 8th of November 1893. Frail in youth, he was allowed by his parents to roam at will in the splendid woods of the Middlesex Fells, then standing near his maternal grandfather's home at Medford, and there he learned to love the forest. In 1844 he graduated from Harvard College. To gratify his father, who disapproved of his literary and historical projects, he proceeded to a degree in the Harvard Law School, but without intending to practise at the Bar. While a student he had notably increased his physical strength by systematic exercise in the open air; and it was partly for the purpose of further improving his uncertain health that he joined a young kinsman in an adventurous trip beyond the Rocky Mountains. As a tonic the expedition proved a failure. The hardships to which Parkman recklessly exposed himself in hope of building up his constitution in fact broke it down, putting an end for ever to his 'boyish fancy of a life of action and a death in battle.' But the account of his adventures, first printed in the Knickerbocker Magazine in 1847, and published two years later in the book now known as The Oregon Trail, shows that the journey had also another purpose. It was, in part, a conscious preparation for historical work already planned. In an autobiographical sketch, written in 1886, he says: 'Before the end of the sophomore [second undergraduate] year my various schemes had been crystallised into a plan of writing a story of what was then known as the "Old French War"—that is, the war that ended in the conquest of Canada—for here, as it seemed to me, the forest drama was more stirring and the forest stage more thronged with appropriate actors than in any other passage of our history. It was not till some years later that I enlarged the plan to include the whole course of the American conflict between France and England, or, in other words, the history of the American forest; for this was the light in which I regarded it. My theme fascinated me, and I was haunted with wilderness images day and night.' The precise degree in which the formation of these plans may be traced to the influence of Cooper's tales and of Irving's Astoria, or their development to the appearance in 1843 and 1847, of Prescott's histories of the Spanish conquest of America, is still a matter of doubt. But there can be no doubt that Parkman's fitness to execute them was vastly increased by his summer on the prairies. The frontier changes its longitude far more readily than its life. For the young historian, the trip to the Medicine Bow was also a journey backward in time. The St Louis of 1846 revealed to him much that was not unlike the Montreal of a century before. Fort Laramie was in some respects the counterpart of Etherington's Michillimackinac. The Oregon pioneers helped him to understand the Scotch-Irish backwoodsmen of the Alleghenies; the fur-trader and the French half-breed trapper were still the same; and, above all, life in a Sioux village gave him insight into the character of the American Indian. His experience was unique. No student can now repeat it. It has impressed upon Parkman's histories certain characteristics which give them, in some measure, the quality of sources.

The first of Parkman's historical works, The Conspiracy of Pontiac (1851), is in reality an appendix to the main story which he was to tell. He chose the period (1763-69) 'as affording better opportunities than any other for portraying the forest life and the Indian character,' and he never saw reason to change that opinion. Pontiac was written under conditions which would have discouraged a less resolute man. In the preface Parkman says—and none of the later histories makes such explicit allusion to his lifelong infirmities—that 'for about three years the light of day was unsupportable, and every attempt at reading or writing completely debarred. Under these circumstances the task of sifting the materials and composing the work was begun and finished. The papers were repeatedly read aloud by an amanuensis, copious notes and extracts were made, and the narrative written down from my dictation. The process, though extremely slow and laborious, was not without its advantages; and I am well convinced that the authorities have been even more minutely examined, more scrupulously collated, and more thoroughly digested than they would have been under ordinary circumstances.' Although he burned to continue work, ten of the next fourteen years were passed in absolute separation from his historical labours, and there were long periods when even the slightest intellectual effort was possible only at the risk of most serious mental disturbance. During his stronger hours he produced a romantic novel, Vassal Morton (1856), now forgotten, and devoted himself with much success to gardening. The experience thus gained he afterwards embodied in his Book of Roses (1866). Meanwhile, his health having slightly improved, he was able to issue in 1865 The Pioneers of France in the New World, which announced the matured design of a history of 'France and England in America.' The first part of the Pioneers narrated the history of the Huguenot settlement in Florida and its destruction by the Spanish; the second described the beginnings of the French dominion in the north: the settlement of Acadia and the labours of Champlain and his companions. In 1867 came The Jesuits in North America, carrying the narrative on from 1635 to 1652. Two years later appeared La Salle and the Discovery of the Great West, treating an episode which had promised consequences of vast importance to New France. In The Old Régime in Canada (1874) the history of the transitional period from 1652 to 1672 was told, and there followed an elaborate survey of the political, social, and ecclesiastical organisation of the colony. Count Frontenac and New France (1877) continued the narrative to 1701; and then, turning to the dream of his youth, Parkman told in Montcalm and Wolfe (2 vols. 1884) the dramatic story of the great contest (1748-63) which brought French power in America to a close. The confused period from 1700 to 1748 remained. In 1892 that gap was bridged by A Half-Century of Conflict (2 vols.), and Parkman's work was done.

Parkman was fortunate in choosing a subject at once fresh and congenial. Famous historians had, indeed, touched incidentally upon it; but their accounts, generally fragmentary, were invariably lifeless. They felt perhaps that happenings in the American forest must be somehow beneath the dignity of history. In any event, the types of man and the sorts of conflict which the forest knew lay outside the range of their experience and needed still to be made real to the world. To that task Parkman devoted his life. He performed it with ever-increasing thoroughness. From the outset he had studied with care the more accessible sources. He soon began to search diligently, and with much success, for unpublished materials which might illustrate his theme. A faint clue to the whereabouts of Montcalm's confidential letters to Bourlamaque was pursued for fifteen years before they were unearthed. In the case of the La Salle papers, improperly withheld from use by a jealous archivist, obstacles even more serious were at length overcome. Fortunately Parkman's means were ample to procure copies of all needed papers, and the Massachusetts Historical Society now possesses nearly two hundred folio volumes of the manuscripts from which he drew the details that crowd his pages. Still, his was by no means 'that pallid and emasculate scholarship of which New England has had too many examples.' For him life out-of-doors was a necessary condition of work within. From Louisburg to Sault Ste Marie he examined the scene of every important event. He knew the Indian and the frontiersman at first hand. By the synthesis of a sympathetic imagination he fused the results of his studies, his observations, and his experience into a narrative of such realism as proceeds more frequently from the novelist than the historian.

Parkman's style of writing changed with the ripening of the man. From the outset his observation was fresh and vivid. But otherwise his early style, influenced perhaps by the prevailing standards of the time, was often florid, the images formal, and the illustrations commonplace. His power of more spontaneous expression developed slowly, in part, it may be, because of his illness. He was seldom able to read more than five minutes without rest, or to listen to reading more than twenty; and the limitations of safety which his nervous condition placed upon his efforts at composition were not less cramping. Still, there is no sign of physical weakness in his manner of writing, not even the tenseness which intermittent dictation might be expected to produce. His style seems rather to reflect the increasing moral strength with which he adhered to the purpose of his youth. Losing nothing of its vividness, it becomes fluent and direct, an adequate medium for the expression of his strong narrative impulse.

But Parkman was more than a mere narrative historian, a picturesque teller of romantic tales. The boy, it may be, had conceived the obscure struggles of the wilderness as presenting matter of romantic interest only. The man soon realised that, unlike merely romantic events, they were the product of potent historical forces determining the destiny of a continent: European civilisation implacably overpowering aboriginal barbarism, the rooted liberty of the common law unconsciously supplanting the absolutism of the Bourbons. The evidence of this realisation is not to be sought in elaborate reflective passages. Parkman did not preach. He had the skill to make his narrative carry its own moral. From the superficial reader that moral may be concealed by profusion of incident. But the more thoughtful will find implicit in his pages a political philosophy not unworthy of his theme.

He was, moreover, a lover of truth for whom no pains were too great that might establish a fact. But he made no parade of his efforts. In the introduction to the Pioneers of France in the New World he describes his ideal method; and his work reached in fact a close approximation to his ideal. 'In this, and still more must it be the case in succeeding volumes, the amount of reading applied to their composition is far greater than the citations represent, much of it being of a collateral and illustrative nature. This was essential to a plan whose aim it was, while scrupulously and rigorously adhering to the truth of facts, to animate them with the life of the past, and, so far as might be, clothe the skeleton with flesh. If at times it may seem that range has been allowed to fancy, it is so in appearance only; since the minutest details of narrative or description rest on authentic documents or on personal observation. Faithfulness to the truth of history involves far more than a research, however patient and scrupulous, into special facts. Such facts may be detailed with the most minute exactness, and yet the narrative, taken as a whole, may be unmeaning or untrue.

The narrator must seek to imbue himself with the life and spirit of the time. He must study events in their bearings near and remote; in the character, habits, and manners of those who took part in them. He must himself be, as it were, a sharer or a spectator of the action he describes.'

Not only was he ever on the watch against the temptations offered by the picturesqueness of his theme and by his own love of striking effects; his sincerity rose above this primary need of accuracy, and reached, in spite of his strong prejudices in contemporary affairs, to a high degree of historical impartiality. Dealing at large, as he did, with a subject into whose recesses many antiquarians and not a few zealots, Canadian and American, had peered, a subject embittered by a century of American conflict, and involving at almost every turn the imported prejudices of English and French, and the inherited animosities of Puritan and Catholic, it was inevitable that his work should be assailed by extremists in both camps. But these attacks have only served, in general, to reveal the thoroughness of his research and the sincerity of his judgments. He has gained appreciation, both at home and abroad, more slowly than some of his contemporaries. But his present reputation as a writer of history is, probably, not inferior to that of any other American. Professor Bourne, of Yale, suggestively says: 'In his conception of the great drama of two rival and diverse civilisations contending for the mastery of the New World, in his nearness to the action and his personal exploration of the scene, and not least in the varied charm of his story, Parkman is the Herodotus of our Western World.'

The Heights of Abraham.

Meanwhile a deep cloud fell on the English. Since the siege began, Wolfe had passed with ceaseless energy from camp to camp, animating the troops, observing everything and directing everything; but now the pale face and tall lean form were seen no more, and the rumour spread that the General was dangerously ill. He had in fact been seized by an access of the disease that had tortured him for some time past; and fever had followed. . . . His illness, which began before the twentieth of August, had so far subsided on the twenty-fifth that Knox wrote in his Diary of that day: 'His Excellency General Wolfe is on the recovery, to the inconceivable joy of the whole army.' On the twenty-ninth he was able to write or dictate a letter to the three brigadiers, Monckton, Townshend, and Murray: 'That the public service may not suffer by the General's indisposition, he begs the brigadiers will meet and consult together for the public utility and advantage, and consider of the best method to attack the enemy.' The letter then proposes three plans, all bold to audacity. . . .

The brigadiers met in consultation, rejected the three plans proposed in the letter, and advised that an attempt should be made to gain a footing on the north shore above the town, place the army between Montcalm and his base of supply, and so force him to fight or surrender. The scheme seemed desperate, but so did all the rest; and if by chance it should succeed, the gain was far greater than could follow any success below the town. Wolfe embraced it at once. . . .

Admiral Saunders lay with the main fleet in the Basin of Quebec. This excellent officer, whatever may have been his views as to the necessity of a speedy departure, aided Wolfe to the last with unfailing energy and zeal. It was agreed between them that while the General made the real attack, the Admiral should engage Montcalm's attention by a pretended one. As night approached, the fleet ranged itself along the Beauport shore; the boats were lowered and filled with sailors, marines, and the few troops that had been left behind; while ship signalled to ship, cannon flashed and thundered, and shot ploughed the beach, as if to clear a way for assailants to land. In the gloom of the evening the effect was imposing. Montcalm, who thought that the movements of the English above the town were only a feint, that their main force was still below it, and that their real attack would be made there, was completely deceived, and massed his troops in front of Beauport to repel the expected landing. But while in the fleet of Saunders all was uproar and ostentatious menace, the danger was ten miles away, where the squadron of Holmes lay tranquil and silent at its anchorage off Cap-Rouge.

The day had been fortunate for Wolfe. Two deserters came from the camp of Bougainville with intelligence that, at ebb-tide on the next night, he was to send down a convoy of provisions to Montcalm. The necessities of the camp at Beauport, and the difficulties of transportation by land, had before compelled the French to resort to this perilous means of conveying supplies; and their boats, drifting in darkness under the shadows of the northern shore, had commonly passed in safety. Wolfe saw at once that, if his own boats went down in advance of the convoy, he could turn the intelligence to good account.

Towards two o'clock the tide began to ebb, and a fresh wind blew down the river. Two lanterns were raised in the maintop shrouds of the Sutherland. It was the appointed signal; the boats cast off and fell down with the current, those of the light infantry leading the way. The vessels with the rest of the troops had orders to follow a little later. . . .

For full two hours the procession of boats, borne on the current, steered silently down the St Lawrence. The stars were visible, but the night was moonless and sufficiently dark. The General was in one of the foremost boats, and near him was a young midshipman, John Robinson, afterwards Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. He used to tell in his later life how Wolfe, with a low voice, repeated Gray's 'Elegy in a Country Churchyard' to the officers about him. Probably it was to relieve the intense strain of his thoughts. Among the rest was the verse which his own fate was soon to illustrate—

'The paths of glory lead but to the grave.'

'Gentlemen,' he said as his recital ended, 'I would rather have written those lines than take Quebec.' None were there to tell him that the hero is greater than the poet.

As they neared their destination the tide bore them in towards the shore, and the mighty wall of rock and forest towered in darkness on their left. The dead stillness was suddenly broken by the sharp 'Qui vive!' of a French sentry, invisible in the thick gloom. 'France!' answered a Highland officer of Fraser's regiment from one of the boats of the light infantry. He had served in Holland, and spoke French fluently.

'À quel régiment?'

'De la Reine,' replied the Highlander. He knew that a part of that corps was with Bougainville. The sentry, expecting the convoy of provisions, was satisfied, and did not ask for the password.

Soon after, the foremost boats were passing the heights of Samos, when another sentry challenged them, and they could see him through the darkness running down to the edge of the water, within range of a pistol-shot. In answer to his questions the same officer replied, in French: 'Provision-boats. Don't make a noise; the English will hear us.' In fact, the sloop-of-war Hunter was anchored in the stream not far off. This time, again, the sentry let them pass. In a few moments they rounded the headland above the Anse du Foulon. There was no sentry there. The strong current swept the boats of the light infantry a little below the intended landing-place. They disembarked on a narrow strand at the foot of heights as steep as a hill covered with trees can be. The twenty-four volunteers led the way, climbing with what silence they might, closely followed by a much larger body. . . .

Montcalm was amazed at what he saw. He had expected a detachment, and he found an army. Full in sight before him stretched the lines of Wolfe: the close ranks of the English infantry, a silent wall of red, and the wild array of the Highlanders, with their waving tartans, and bagpipes screaming defiance. . . .

It was towards ten o'clock when, from the high ground on the right of the line, Wolfe saw that the crisis was near. The French on the ridge had formed themselves into three bodies, regulars in the centre, regulars and Canadians on right and left. Two field-pieces, which had been dragged up the heights at Anse du Foulon, fired on them with grape-shot, and the troops, rising from the ground, prepared to receive them. In a few moments more they were in motion. They came on rapidly, uttering loud shouts, and firing as soon as they were within range. Their ranks, ill ordered at the best, were further confused by a number of Canadians who had been mixed among the regulars, and who, after hastily firing, threw themselves on the ground to reload. The British advanced a few rods, then halted and stood still. When the French were within forty paces the word of command rang out, and a crash of musketry answered all along the line. The volley was delivered with remarkable precision. In the battalions of the centre, which had suffered least from the enemy's bullets, the simultaneous explosion was afterwards said by French officers to have sounded like a cannon-shot. Another volley followed, and then a furious clattering fire that lasted but a minute or two. When the smoke rose a miserable sight was revealed: the ground cumbered with dead and wounded, the advancing masses stopped short and turned into a frantic mob, shouting, cursing, gesticulating. The order was given to charge. Then over the field rose the British cheer, mixed with the fierce yell of the Highland slogan. Some of the corps pushed forward with the bayonet; some advanced firing. The clansmen drew their broadswords and dashed on, keen and swift as bloodhounds. At the English right, though the attacking column was broken to pieces, a fire was still kept up, chiefly, it seems, by sharpshooters from the bushes and corn-fields, where they had lain for an hour or more. Here Wolfe himself led the charge, at the head of the Louisbourg grenadiers. A shot shattered his wrist. He wrapped his handkerchief about it and kept on. Another shot struck him, and he still advanced, when a third lodged in his breast. He staggered, and sat on the ground. Lieutenant Brown, of the grenadiers; one Henderson, a volunteer in the same company; and a private soldier, aided by an officer of artillery who ran to join them, carried him in their arms to the rear. He begged them to lay him down. 'They did so, and asked if he would have a surgeon. 'There's no need,' he answered; 'it's all over with me.' A moment after, one of them cried out, 'They run; see how they run!' 'Who run?' Wolfe demanded, like a man roused from sleep. 'The enemy, sir. Egad, they give way everywhere!' 'Go, one of you, to Colonel Burton,' returned the dying man; 'tell him to march Webb's regiment down to Charles River, to cut off their retreat from the bridge.' Then, turning on his side, he murmured, 'Now, God be praised, I will die in peace!' and in a few moments his gallant soul had fled.

Montcalm, still on horseback, was borne with the tide of fugitives towards the town. As he approached the walls a shot passed through his body. He kept his seat; two soldiers supported him, one on each side, and led his horse through the St Louis gate. On the open space within, among the excited crowd, were several women, drawn, no doubt, by eagerness to know the result of the fight. One of them recognised him, saw the streaming blood, and shrieked, 'O mon Dieu! mon Dieu! le Marquis est tué!' 'It's nothing, it's nothing,' replied the death-stricken man; 'don't be troubled for me, my good friends.' ('Ce n'est rien, ce n'est rien; ne vous affligez pas pour moi, mes bonnes amies.')
(From Montcalm and Wolfe.)

All Parkman's historical books appeared in numerous editions during his life. Since his death collected editions have been published in twelve, in thirteen, in seventeen, and in twenty volumes. The Pioneers and The Jesuits and The Ancient Régime have been translated into German, The Pioneers and The Jesuits translated (much garbled) into French. See A Life of Francis Parkman by Farnham (1901); the Life ('American Men of Letters,' 1904) by H. Dwight Sedgwick; Jameson's History of Historical Writing in America (1891); Bourne's Essays in Historical Criticism (1901), and J. A. Doyle's Historical Writings of Parkman (1911).

CHARLES H. HULL.

Herman Melville (1819-91) was born in New York city, and, irresistibly drawn to a sailor's life, shipped at eighteen as cabin-boy on a ship bound for Liverpool. He took a spell at home as a teacher, but went to sea again in 1842, this time on a South-Sea whaler. At Nukahiva in the Marquesas he and a comrade, the 'Toby' of his story, deserted the ship, owing to the captain's harsh treatment. On the island he was kept four months as the prisoner of the not unkindly cannibals of the Typee Valley, whence he was rescued by an Australian whaler, in which he took service. Returning to the United States, in 1846 he published Typee, a spirited account of his residence in the Marquesas, and in 1847 Omoo, a continuation of his adventures in Oceania. Mardi (1848), in another manner, was a much less happy effort. White Jacket, or the World in a Man-of-War (1850), was in his better vein; and Moby Dick, or the Whale (1851), though not without flaws of style and construction, is a really great sea-story, full of power and the incommunicable charm of the ocean. Melville was a most unequal writer, and many of his stories, especially his later ones, were odd, chaotic, and unworthy of his earlier reputation, though Israel Potter (1855) was commended by Hawthorne for its portraits of Franklin and Paul Jones. His poetry, as in Battle Pieces and Aspects of War (1866), is wholly forgotten. He held a post in the Custom-House, but for many years lived in seclusion, his mental faculties having given way. R. L. Stevenson revived the vogue of Typee and Omoo. A new edition of Moby Dick appeared in 1921; the complete Works (12 vols.) in 1922. See Lives by Weaver (1922) and Mumford (1929).

Donald Grant Mitchell (1822-1908), who became known under the pen-name of 'Ik Marvel,' was born in Norwich, Connecticut, graduated at Yale, studied law, and was in 1853-54 U.S. consul at Venice. He edited the Atlantic Monthly 1868-69, and from 1855 lived on his farm of Edgewood near New Haven, with which several of his books deal. Best known of his writings, combining humour and a graceful element of sentiment and domesticity, were his Reveries of a Bachelor and Dream Life (1850-51). Among his works (15 vols. 1907) are a novel, Dr Johns (1866); English Lands, Letters, and Kings (1889); American Lands and Letters (1897-99).

Bayard Taylor (1825-78) was born of Quaker and German ancestry at Kennett Square in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and was educated at a common school, and for five years at a high school. He acquired a familiar knowledge of Latin, French, Spanish, and, later, German; and from his twelfth year he wrote essays, stories, and poems; and two years after he had become an apprentice in a printing-office he published Ximena, a volume of poems, sold by subscription. Disliking his trade, he bought himself off from his apprenticeship, arranged with the editors of several papers to write a series of letters from abroad, and with a hundred and forty dollars paid in advance for these contributions, he sailed for Liverpool on a pedestrian tour of Europe in 1844, and carried his knapsack through Scotland, England, Belgium, the Rhine countries, Austria, and Italy. His letters, for which he received in all five hundred dollars, were his sole means of support, and were in 1846 published as Views Afoot, or Europe seen with Knapsack and Staff. After his return he edited a country newspaper, then went to New York, and obtained a post on the Tribune. As its correspondent he made extensive travels in California and Mexico, recorded in El Dorado (1850), and up the Nile, and in Asia Minor, Syria, across Asia to India, China, and Japan—recorded in his Journey to Central Africa, The Land of the Saracen (1854), and A Visit to India, China, and Japan (1855). Later explorations are recorded in Northern Travel (1858) and Travels in Greece and Russia (1859). He was a very successful lecturer on his travelling experiences, and on the outbreak of the Civil War warmly advocated the national cause. This led to his being sent in 1862-63 as secretary of legation to St Petersburg. Much of his time after 1863 was spent in Germany, Switzerland, and Italy. In 1870 he lectured on German literature at Cornell University. In 1876 he was again at work on the Tribune (of which he was a part-proprietor); in 1877 he was nominated United States ambassador in Berlin, but entering on his duties in May 1878, only lived to fulfil them till towards the end of the same year. Over and above his own books of travel, he edited a library of travels, and with Ripley a handbook of literature and fine arts; and he did much miscellaneous literary work, editing and translating from German and other tongues. His ambitions were to be remembered as a poet, and he ranks well to the front in the second rank of American poets. His early models were Byron and Shelley; Tennyson's influence is obvious in some of his work, and Goethe's is still more marked. His Oriental Poems are perhaps his most spontaneous and characteristic work; but some of his Pennsylvanian ballads also show him at his best, tender and simple rather than sonorous and rhetorical as much of his work is. His Faust is the book by which he is best known in England, and is one of the most successful of all the attempts yet made to approach an adequate English rendering of Goethe's masterpiece. His poetic works included Rhymes of Travel (1848); Book of Romances, Lyrics, and Songs (1851); Poems of the Orient (1854); Poems of Home and Travel (1855); The Poet's Journal (1862); Poems (1865); The Masque of the Gods (1872); Lars (1873), a Tennysonian narrative poem; The Prophet, a Tragedy (1874); Home Pastorals (1875); The National Ode, which he was chosen to deliver at the Centennial Exhibition (1876); Prince Deukalion, a lyrical drama (1878), perhaps too directly modelled after Faust; and his exceptionally admirable translation of Faust (1870-71). He also wrote several novels, the best Hannah Thurston (1863) and The Story of Kennett (1866). His Life and Letters were edited by his (second) wife, daughter of an Erfurt astronomer, and Horace E. Scudder.

A Bedouin Love-Song.

From the desert I come to thee
On a stallion shod with fire;
And the winds are left behind
In the speed of my desire.
Under thy window I stand,
And the midnight hears my cry:
I love thee, I love but thee,
With a love that shall not die
Till the sun grows cold,
And the stars are old,
And the leaves of the Judgment
Book unfold!

Look from thy window and see
My passion and my pain;
I lie on the sands below,
And I faint in thy disdain.
Let the night-winds touch thy brow
With the heat of my burning sigh,
And melt thee to hear the vow
Of a love that shall not die
Till the sun grows cold,
And the stars are old,
And the leaves of the Judgment
Book unfold!

BAYARD TAYLOR.

My steps are nightly driven,
By the fever in my breast,
To hear from thy lattice breathed
The word that shall give me rest.
Open the door of thy heart,
And open thy chamber door,
And my kisses shall teach thy lips
The love that shall fade no more
Till the sun grows cold,
And the stars are old,
And the leaves of the Judgment
Book unfold!

From 'The Pines.'

Ancient Pines,
Ye bear no record of the years of man.
Spring is your sole historian,—Spring that paints
These savage shores with hues of Paradise;
That decks your branches with a fresher green,
And through your lonely far cañadas pours
Her floods of bloom, rivers of opal dye
That wander down to lakes and widening seas
Of blossom and of fragrance,—laughing Spring,
That with her wanton blood refills her veins,

And weds ye to your juicy youth again
 With a new ring, the while your rifted bark Drops odorous tears. Your knotty fibres yield
 To the light touch of her unfailing pen,
 As freely as the lupin's violet cup.
 Ye keep, close-locked, the memories of her stay,
 As in their shells the avelonés keep
 Morn's rosy flush and moonlight's pearly glow.
 The wild north-west that from Alaska sweeps
 To drown Point Lobos with the icy scud
 And white sea-foam, may rend your boughs and leave
 Their blasted antlers tossing in the gale;
 Your steadfast hearts are mailed against the shock,
 And on their annual tablets naught inscribe
 Of such rude visitation. Ye are still
 The simple children of a guiltless soil,
 And in your natures show the sturdy grain
 That passion cannot jar, nor force relax,
 Nor aught but sweet and kindly airs compel
 To gentler mood. No disappointed heart
 Has sighed its bitterness beneath your shade,
 No angry spirit ever came to make
 Your silence its confessional; no voice,
 Grown harsh in Crime's great market-place, the world,
 Tainted with blasphemy your evening hush,
 And aromatic air. The deer alone,—
 The ambushed hunter that brings down the deer,
 The fisher wandering on the misty shore
 To watch sea-lions wallow in the flood,—
 The shout, the sound of hoofs that chase and fly,
 When swift vaqueros, dashing through the herds,
 Ride down the angry bull,—perchance, the song
 Some Indian heired of long-forgotten sires,— Disturb your solemn chorus.

Stephen Collins Foster (1826-64), author of many of the most popular American songs, was born in Pittsburgh, and was for some time a merchant's clerk or shop assistant in Cincinnati. He had a natural but untrained gift for writing ditties and composing tunes, found time for systematic musical study, and in 1842 published 'Open thy lattice, love,' which was at once taken up by negro minstrels. The popularity of his next ventures encouraged him to give up business and devote himself to music and song. He lived mostly in New York and Pittsburgh, and in New York he died. He is credited with no less than a hundred and twenty-five pieces, words and airs being alike of his own composition; of these nearly a fourth are negro melodies. Among the best-known are 'The Old Folks at Home,' 'Nelly Bly,' 'Uncle Ned,' 'Old Dog Tray,' 'Gentle Annie,' 'Old Kentucky Home,' 'Willie, we have missed you,' 'Camptown Races' (which Mr Gladstone used to intone with such powerful effect), 'Massa's in de cold, cold ground,' 'Poor Old Joe,' and 'Come where my Love lies dreaming.' It may safely be said that no other eleven songs by any one poet or composer are equally familiar in all English-speaking countries. How far the success of the songs depends on the taking tunes it might be hard to say: 'The Old Folks at Home,' otherwise 'Way down upon the Swanee River,' is perhaps as acceptable to some when performed on a street-piano or barrel-organ as when sung. Some of the songs are mere doggerel; others are only sentimental jingles; the best of them hardly satisfy the usual poetic standards. But if to secure world-wide popularity and to touch the heart of the people in two continents be proof of poetic power, S. C. Foster has safely passed the test. Musically, 'Come where my Love lies dreaming' is his highest effort.

Theodore Winthrop (1828-61) was the representative of a family that had been very distinguished in New England since colonial days, having produced governors of Massachusetts and Connecticut, a Harvard professor of physics, and a senator, orator, and publicist. Born at New Haven, Theodore studied at Yale, travelled in Europe and the Far West, did surveying for the railway across the Isthmus of Panamá, was admitted to the Bar (1855), and had prepared a large mass of—mostly unpublished—literary materials, when, having volunteered in the Civil War, he fell in battle at Great Bethel. His novels—for which he had failed to find a publisher—were issued posthumously, and include Cecil Dreeme (1861), a (somewhat crude) romance of New York; John Brent (1861), instinct with the spirit of the Wild West; and Edwin Brothertoft (1862), a story of the Revolution. His tales were somewhat too spasmodic and unconventional in style. The Canoe and Saddle and Life in the Open Air were sketches still later published; and in the eighties his Life and Poems appeared under his sister's supervision.

Lewis Wallace (1827-1905), born at Brookville, Indiana, served in the Mexican War, gained distinction in the Civil War, and was governor of Utah (1878-81) and minister to Turkey (1881). General Lew Wallace became famous in popular literature by his remarkably successful religious novel Ben Hur (1880). The Fair God, The Prince of India, and The Wooing of Malkatoon are his next best-known stories. Besides a book on The Boyhood of Christ and a Life of Benjamin Harrison, he wrote an autobiography (1906).

Richard Henry Stoddard (1825-1903) was born at Hingham in Massachusetts, the son of a ship's-captain who was lost at sea; and the boy, after an education at the public schools in New York, worked in an iron-foundry for some years, meanwhile reading widely in English literature, but especially in poetry. In 1849 he produced a small volume of poems, only to suppress it afterwards; but 1852 saw the birth of a sturdier collection. From 1853 to 1870 he served in the New York custom-house, in 1870-73 was clerk to General McClellan, and for a year city librarian; and he did much reviewing and writing for the book-sellers. He wrote Lives of Washington Irving and Shelley; produced A Century After, picturesque glimpses of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania; and edited the 'Bric-à-Brac Series' and the 'Sans Souci Series.' But it is as a poet that he claims special remembrance. His poems include Songs in Summer (1857); The King's Bell; The Book of the East; Abraham Lincoln, a Horatian Ode; and The Lion's Cub and other Verse (1891). Some of his lyrics are bright and tender; his most characteristic work is rather reflective than original and spontaneous.

Edmund Clarence Stedman (1833–1908) was born the son of a merchant at Hartford in Connecticut. He studied at Yale and early took to journalism, was for a time on the staff of the New York Tribune, was war-correspondent of the New York World during the war, held a post under the Attorney-General of the United States, but from 1869 until 1900 was a stockbroker at New York. He contributed actively to the more important magazines, and published his first volume of verse, Poems, Lyric and Idyllic, in 1860. Later poems or volumes of verse were Alice of Monmouth, an Idyll of the Great War; The Blameless Prince; Hawthorne and other Poems; Lyrics and Idylls; a collected edition was issued in 1884 (new ed. 1908). His critical work on the Victorian Poets (1875), recognised as a work of standard value, went through many editions. The Poets of America, published in 1886, hardly took the same rank even in America. He wrote on The Nature and Elements of Poetry, and edited W. S. Landor, Austin Dobson, and Poe, besides A Victorian Anthology and An American Anthology. The Library of American Literature, edited by him in conjunction with Miss E. M. Hutchinson, completed in 1890, fills eleven volumes. Some of his lyrics are very fresh and admirable, and most of his poetic work shows careful and artistic finish. As a critic he is less remarkable for profound insight and discrimination than for breadth and sympathy. See his Life and Letters by Laura Stedman and G. M. Gould (2 vols. 1910).

Thomas Bailey Aldrich (1836–1907) was born at Portsmouth in New Hampshire. His father's death prevented his going to Harvard; but while engaged in his uncle's New York banking-house he began to contribute verse to the newspapers, and soon after the publication of The Bells, a Collection of Chimes (1855), adopted literature as a profession. He was associated with N. P. Willis's Home Journal, Every Saturday, and other magazines; and from 1881 to 1890 he was editor of the Atlantic Monthly. Amongst his poems are The Ballad of Babie Bell, Pampinea, Cloth of Gold, Flower and Thorn, and Mercedes. He wrote also stories, romances, and sketches, including Daisy's Necklace, The Course of True Love, The Story of a Bad Boy, Marjorie Daw, Prudence Palfrey. He was an accomplished lyricist, and his more ambitious poems are at least graceful and well worded. In some stories and sketches he showed himself a brilliant humourist. His Works (pocket edition, 1916) fill 9 vols. F. Greenleaf wrote his Life (1908).

Francis Richard Stockton (1834–1902), born at Philadelphia, was trained as engraver and journalist, and became assistant-editor of St Nicholas. He attracted notice by his fantastic stories for children, which fill several volumes; but he is best known as author of Rudder Grange (1879), the droll and humorous story of a holiday on a house-boat, with much human nature and a good deal of burlesque. The Lady or the Tiger, a short problem story, made also a great impression. Other humorous or whimsical stories, notably unequal in interest, were The Late Mrs Null, The Casting Away of Mrs Lecks and Mrs Aleshine, and The Dusanter, The Hundredth Man, The Schooner Merry Chanter, The Squirrel Inn, Pomond's Travels, The Shadrach, Captain Chap, The Story Teller's Pack, The Associate Hermits, and A Bicycle of Cathay. To a different category belonged The Buccaneers and Pirates of our Coasts (1898). The Captain's Toll-gate, finished just before his death, was published with a memorial sketch of him by his wife in 1903.

Edward Eggleston (1837–1902), born at Vevay, Indiana, became a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, and had held various pastoral and editorial posts when, about 1880, he withdrew from the ministry and devoted himself to literary work. He wrote many popular books on American history, but is best known for his stories of The Hoosier Schoolmaster, The Hoosier Schoolboy, The Mystery of Metropolisville, The Circuit Rider, Roxy, The Graysons, and The Faith Doctor.

John Burroughs (1837–1921), born at Roxbury in New York State, was brought up on a farm, and after some years of teaching, journalism, clerking in the Treasury department at Washington, and of periodic duties as a bank-examiner, settled down in 1874 on a farm in New York, to divide his time between literature and fruit-culture. Over a score of his books, from Wake Robin in 1871 to Field and Study in 1919, deal mainly with natural history or country life. A sympathetic and scientific observer of nature, a picturesque and pleasing stylist, he continued in a lighter vein the work of Thoreau. In Bird and Bough (1906) he treated the same manner of subject in verse. On his friend Whitman he wrote two books (1867, 1896). Travel sketches, literary studies, and philosophic essays made up the rest of his works. See Life by Clara Barrus (1925) and a book by Johnson (1922).

William Dwight Whitney (1827–94), a younger brother of the geologist Josiah Dwight Whitney, was born at Northampton, Massachusetts; studied at Williams College, at Yale, and in Germany; and was professor at Yale of Sanskrit and of Comparative Philology. He waged war with Max-Müller, and wrote Darwinism and Language, The Life and Growth of Language, and other philological works. He was editor-in-chief of the Century Dictionary.

Charles Elliot Norton (1827–1908), the son of a Unitarian minister at Cambridge in Massachusetts, studied at Harvard, was for a while engaged in commerce, but ere long devoted himself to literature and æsthetics, becoming known as a Dante scholar and an authority on art. From 1875 to 1898 he was Professor of the History of Art at Harvard. His prose translation of Dante is classical; he has written on church building in the Middle Ages and on recent social theories; but he is perhaps most widely known as an accomplished editor, having edited the letters of Lowell and G. W. Curtis, the correspondence of Carlyle and Emerson, and of Goethe and Carlyle, as well as the standard edition of Carlyle's letters.

Silas Weir Mitchell (1829–1914), born in Philadelphia, studied at the Jefferson Medical College and Edinburgh University, and settling as a practitioner in his native city, became distinguished especially in the treatment of nervous diseases. Besides books on physiology and neurology and serpent poisons, he wrote articles in prose and verse for the magazines; and Hephzibah Guinness and other stories in 1880 gave him rank as a capable novelist. In War Time and Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker, are amongst his best-known works. Later came The Adventures of François, The Red City, and Westways (1913). His Complete Poems were issued in 1914. See Life by B. R. Tucker (1914).

John William Draper (1811–82) was born at St Helens near Liverpool, and in 1833 emigrated to Virginia. Having studied physics and chemistry in England and the United States, he taught these two subjects in a Virginian college, but from 1839 was associated with the University of the City of New York, first as Professor of Chemistry, and, after 1850, of Physiology. He wrote handbooks of chemistry, natural philosophy, and physiology, and a series of memoirs on radiant energy; but is chiefly remembered for his History of the American Civil War (3 vols. 1867–70), for his History of the Intellectual Development of Europe (2 vols. 1863), and, most of all, for his History of the Conflict between Religion and Science (1874), in which his attitude was frankly rationalistic.

Andrew Dickson White (1832–1918), born at Homer, New York, studied at Yale, Paris, and Berlin, and was Professor of History in the University of Michigan and President of Cornell, U.S. Minister to Germany and to Russia, and in 1897–1903 ambassador in Germany. His best-known book is A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology (1896); but he wrote studies in general, mediæval, and modern history, on European schools of history, on comets, on currency questions, on The New Germany, and an Autobiography (1905).

Horace Howard Furness (1833–1912), the son of a Unitarian minister in Philadelphia, studied at Harvard, and was admitted to the Bar, but was early attracted to the studies in virtue of which he was to become America's greatest Shakespearean scholar. In 1871 he began his great life-work, the Variorum edition of Shakespeare. Latterly his wife, Helen Kate Rogers (1837–83), and his son, Horace Howard Furness, were associated with him in his labours.

Phillips Brooks (1835–93), born at Boston, Massachusetts, studied at Harvard and elsewhere, and in his cures at Philadelphia and Boston became known as one of the most eloquent and powerful preachers in America. In 1891 he was made Bishop of Massachusetts in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Several volumes of his sermons and lectures show his independence of judgment and catholicity of spirit. There is a Life of him by A. V. G. Allen (1901).

John Hay (1838–1905), born of Scottish ancestry at Salem in Indiana, educated at Brown University, and admitted to the Illinois Bar in 1861, was assistant private secretary to President Lincoln till his death, and during the war served for some months, attaining the rank of colonel. In 1865–70 he was secretary of legation at Paris and Madrid, and chargé d'affaires at Vienna (1867–68); in 1870–75 he worked as a journalist on the staff of the New York Tribune; and in 1879–81 he was first Assistant-Secretary of State. Thereafter he was for a time mainly engaged in literary work, till in 1897 he was sent by President McKinley as ambassador to Great Britain, where both as man and as diplomat he won golden opinions. As Secretary of State at home from 1898, he showed in a critical time exceptional foresight, strength, and tact. As an author he is known for his command of peculiarly American humour and pathos in pithy, simple verse. His Pike County Ballads (1871) include 'Little Breeches' and 'Jim Bludso'; he also published Castilian Days (1871), and, with Nicolay, a Life of Lincoln (1891) and an edition of Lincoln's Complete Works. Another volume of poems was issued in 1890, and Addresses in 1906. The popular anonymous novel The Bread-Winners (1883) was his, though not acknowledged by him as such.

Edward Payson Roe (1838–88), born in New Windsor, New York, was chaplain in the volunteer service during the war, and afterwards pastor of a Presbyterian church at Highland Falls. The great success of his first novel, Barriers Burned Away (1872), encouraged him to make literature his profession; and his fifteen novels include The Opening of a Chestnut Burr (1874), Without a Home (1881), Nature's Serial Story (1884), and He Fell in Love with his Wife (1886). He also wrote on gardening and fruit culture.

Charles Heber Clark (1841–1915), a Philadelphia journalist, born in Berlin, Maryland, is better known by his pen-name of 'Max Adeler,' and as author of Out of the Hurly Burly (1874), Elbow-room, Random Shots, Fortunate Island, and other somewhat boisterously humorous stories.

Charles Farrar Browne (1834-67), not so well known by his own name as by that of his creation, 'Artemus Ward,' was born at Waterford in Maine, worked at Boston and elsewhere as a compositor, became a reporter, and in 1858, under the style of 'Artemus Ward, showman,' wrote for the Cleveland Plaindealer a description of an imaginary travelling menagerie. This was followed by letters in which the original, characteristic, whimsical humour was enhanced by grotesque spelling and naïve moralising. In 1861 'Artemus Ward' entered the lecture field, and started a panorama, whose artistic wretchedness furnished occasion for countless jokes; the success of his humorous lecture, 'The Babes in the Wood,' decided him to abide by lecturing. In 1864 he was disabled by pulmonary consumption; but in 1866, having rallied somewhat, he went to London, where he contributed to Punch, and was very popular as 'the genial showman.' His publications include Artemus Ward, His Book (1862); Artemus Ward, His Travels (Miscellaneous and Among the Mormons, 1865); Artemus Ward in London (1867); Artemus Ward's Panorama (1869). M. D. Landon prefixed a Life to an edition of the Works (1875). He was the first American humourist to make a European reputation; for a decade or two he was the most outstanding representative of American humour. Though his books are little read now, some of his jests and phrases have become part of the Anglo-Saxon store of proverbial sayings.

Samuel Langhorne Clemens, best known to his readers by his pen-name of 'Mark Twain,' was born at Florida, Missouri, on November 30, 1835. After learning the trade of a printer and working as a pilot on the Mississippi, he eventually became a journalist in San Francisco. His first book, The Jumping Frog, appeared in 1867. His Innocents Abroad (1869), the result of a foreign tour, had an enormous success, and thenceforward his reputation as a humourist was established. Subsequent books included Tom Sawyer, A Tramp Abroad, Life on the Mississippi, The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, The £1,000,000 Bank-Note, Pudd'nhead Wilson, Following the Equator, The Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg, Extracts from Adam's Diary, Eve's Diary, The $30,000 Bequest, Christian Science, and The Mysterious Stranger (1916). His share in an unfortunate publishing house drove him to a lecturing tour round the world (1895-96), which enabled him pluckily and fully to re-establish his fortunes. He died on April 21, 1910. Mark Twain's humour secured him a large audience not only in America and this country, but also in Europe. It is the dry, incisive humour of a shrewd man of the world who, having gone through life with his eyes wide open, has cheered himself by laughing not merely at the foibles of his fellow-men, but, by implication, at his own as well. Disrespectful towards what he considered worn-out survivals of old beliefs and superstitions, he sometimes poked fun without much discrimination, as in A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur and Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc; but when his humour is, as it generally is, at its best and freshest the result to his readers is delightful. In Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, perhaps, Mark Twain showed his power at its highest point, his humour and pathos developed with consummate ease and force

SAMUEL LANGHORNE CLEMENS.

From a Photograph by Elliot & Fry.

in a succession of vividly adventurous episodes. America regards Mark Twain as one of its great representative men, a fitting countryman of Whittman and Lincoln—a man, in the words of Professor Sherman, 'unconventional, self-reliant, mirthful, profane, realistic, cynical, boisterous, popular, tender-hearted, touched with chivalry, and permeated to the marrow of his bones with the sentiment of democratic society and with loyalty to American institutions.'

The authorised edition of his works is in 25 volumes (1869-1910). A. B. Paine edited his letters (2 vols. 1917) and wrote his Biography (3 vols. 1912). His Autobiography was published in 1924. See studies by W. D. Howells (1910), A. Henderson (1912), S. Leacock (1932), and Van W. Brooks (new ed. 1934).

Julia Ward Howe (1819-1910), born in New York, was the daughter of Samuel Ward, and in 1843 she married Samuel Gridley Howe, reformer and philanthropist, best known as the teacher of the famous deaf-mute Laura Bridgman. Mrs Howe shared many of her husband's labours, not only assisting him in editing an anti-slavery paper, but lecturing with him on social subjects, and even on occasion preaching in Unitarian pulpits. By far her best-known achievement, however, was her 'Battle Hymn of the Republic,' inspired in 1861 by the sight of Northern troops marching to the tune of 'John Brown's body;' but she had before that published two collections of poems, as later, in 1866, she published Later Lyrics. Mrs Howe was a conspicuous advocate of prison reform and of woman's suffrage. She published books on sex and society and on education, a Life of Margaret Fuller, a collection of Margaret Fuller's love-letters to a Mr Nathan (1903), and a volume of her own Reminiscences (1899). From Sunset Ridge (1898) was a collection of her poems, new and old.

Alice Cary (1820-71) and Phœbe Cary (1824-71), daughters of a farmer near Cincinnati, published poems jointly in 1851, attained great literary and social success through their gifts, secured the patronage and friendship of Horace Greeley and Whittier, and in their deaths were divided by only three months. Alice was the author of the Clovernook Papers and Clovernook Children, tales of Western life. Besides more than one collection of poems, she published several domestic novels, including Hagar, Married not Mated, and The Bishop's Son. Phœbe's principal books were Poems and Parodies and Poems of Faith, Hope, and Love, besides some excellent hymns and occasional pieces. Her best-known hymns are 'Nearer Home' and 'One sweetly solemn thought.' There is a Memorial of the two sisters by Mrs Mary C. Ames (1873).

Maria Susanna Cummins (1827-66), born at Salem, Massachusetts, began to write in 1850 for the Atlantic Monthly and other magazines. Her The Lamplighter (1854)—a rather sentimental and lachrymose tale of the fortunes of an orphan girl—had an amazing success; 40,000 copies sold in two months; and it was read and reprinted almost as zealously in Britain as at home. Later novels, Mabel Vaughan (1857), El Fureidis (1860), and Haunted Hearts (1864), did not add to her reputation.

Alfred Thayer Mahan (1840-1914), born at West Point, the son of one of the professors there, studied at the United States Naval Academy, and from 1856 till 1896 served in the navy, and became rear-admiral. His writings on naval science and history are luminous and authoritative, and include The Gulf and Inland Waters (1883), The Influence of Sea Power on History (1890), The Influence of Sea Power on the French Revolution and the Empire, The Interest of the United States in Sea Power, The Problem of Asia, Types of Naval Officers, Sea Power in its Relation to the War of 1812 (1905), besides Lives of Admiral Farragut and of Nelson, books on the war in Cuba and the South African War of 1899-1902, and the autobiographical From Sail to Steam (1907).

Francis Bret Harte

was born in Albany, New York, on 25th August 1839. As a boy of fifteen he went with his mother to California, and became in turn a schoolmaster, a miner, and a compositor, eventually in 1857 obtaining an engagement on the Golden Era of San Francisco, to which he contributed his first sketches (Miss amongst others) dealing with mining life. From 1864 to 1870 he was Secretary of the United States Mint in San Francisco. In the former year he wrote for the newly founded literary magazine The Californian, which also numbered among its contributors C. W. Stoddard and S. L. Clemens ('Mark Twain'). The Condensed Novels, parodies of celebrated novelists, which he began in the Golden Era, were continued in the Californian. In 1868 he had founded the Overland Monthly, and to this magazine he contributed many of the stories that made him famous, The Luck of Roaring Camp, The Outcasts of Poker Flat, Miggles, Tennessee's Partner, and The Idyll of Red Gulch, as well as Plain Language from Truthful James (better known as The Heathen Chinee), a humorous poem that achieved a remarkable popularity throughout the English-speaking world. Later he became a contributor to the Atlantic Monthly, and spent much time in lecturing tours. In 1870 and 1871 he published three volumes of his collected poems. In 1878 he was sent to Crefeld as United States Consul, and two years later in the same capacity to Glasgow. In 1885 he gave up official work and came to London, where he resided until his death.

FRANCIS BRET HARTE.

From a Photograph by Elliott & Fry.

Bret Harte did many things in literature, and did nearly all of them well. He was a poet, often humorous, sometimes tender, and again nobly patriotic; his Condensed Novels show a power of parody unequalled in pungency and aptness by any writer since Thackeray; he could write romances distinguished by gentle and refined feeling. It is, perhaps, as the delineator of the life of Californian miners in the early days that he will chiefly be remembered. His characters are rough and lawless men, and the language they speak suits their nature. But Bret Harte's magic touch shows the soul of goodness in things evil. In his sketches the gambler, the outcast, the lost woman, even the ruffian with the guilt of blood on his conscience, are capable of noble acts of self-sacrifice and devotion. We are not allowed to forget that they are uncouth human beings, but their essential humanity rather than their uncouthness is insisted on. In Bret Harte's method there is no mawkishness. From this defect he was saved by his abundant humour. This quality of his, rooted as it was in his deeper feelings, cannot be specially defined as American. It is the humour of the great masters of literature all the world over. Bret Harte was a most prolific writer up to the day of his death, but his later work, admirable as much of it is, lacks the freshness of those earlier efforts of which it is, indeed, often a mere repetition. He died on 5th May 1902, and was buried at Frimley in Surrey. His Life was written by T. E. Pemberton (1903) and by H. C. Merwin (1912); his Letters were published in 1926.

Joaquin Miller is the pen-name of CINCINATUS HEINE MILLER (1839-1913), an American poet, born in Wabash district, Indiana. Removing with his parents to Oregon in 1854, he became a miner in California, was with Walker in Nicaragua, and afterwards lived with the Indians till 1860. He then studied law in Oregon, and set up in practice in 1863, after a Democratic paper that he edited had been suppressed for disloyalty. He was a county judge from 1866 to 1870, and then visited Europe; in England his first volume of verse was published. He afterwards settled as a journalist in Washington, and in 1887 in California, ultimately making his home in Oakland. In 1890 he revisited England; and in 1897-98 was correspondent in Klondyke for a New York journal. His pen-name he adopted on the publication of his first volume of poetry from the baptismal name of a Mexican brigand in whose defence he had written a pamphlet. His poems include Songs of the Sierras (1871), of the Sunlands (1873), of the Desert (1875), of Italy (1878), and of the Mexican Seas (1887), and Chants for the Boer (1900); his prose works, The Danites in the Sierras (1881), Shadows of Shasta (1881), and '49, or the Gold-seekers of the Sierras (1884). He also wrote The Danites, The Silent Man, '49 (dramatised from his story by himself), Tally Ho, and one or two other plays and melodramas, a Life of Christ, and My Life among the Modocs (1873). A collected edition of his poems first appeared in 1882; and in a long poem called As it was in the Beginning (1903) he claims to 'call aloud from his mountain-top as a seer.' See Peterson's Life (1937).

Sidney Lanier (1842-81) was born at Macon in Georgia, of Huguenot stock, and graduated at Oglethorpe College before he entered the Confederate army. His health suffered much in hardships endured as a blockade-runner; after the war he was a shopman, a teacher, and a lawyer in succession; and next, an accomplished musician, he earned his livelihood as first flute in the orchestras of Baltimore and New York. A romance, Tiger Lilies (1867), had proved a failure; but his literary ability was so manifest that he was asked to write the ode for the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876, and in 1879 he was installed as lecturer on English literature in the Johns Hopkins University. A course of lectures on The Science of English Verse, original and suggestive, was published as a book (1881); another course on The English Novel (1883) was unfinished at his death. Shakespeare and his Forerunners was not published till 1902. In spite of his ill-health and the distractions of his laborious life, he wrote poems in virtue of which he is by many regarded as the most important American poet of his time, 'Corn,' 'The Song of the Chattahoochee,' 'The Marshes of Glynn,' and the Centennial cantata being amongst the best known. His adaptations of Froissart and of the Mabinogion have made him known to several generations of youthful readers; his Letters reveal the poet and the musician; and there is a memoir of him by W. H. Ward prefixed to his poems as edited by his widow (1881), and one by E. Mims (1905).

John Fiske (1842-1901) was originally called Edmund Fiske Green, but at thirteen adopted the name of his maternal grandfather. Born at Hartford, Connecticut, he studied at Harvard, where afterwards he was lecturer, librarian, and member of the board of overseers. He was admitted to the Bar, but never practised; he wrote much on philosophy and history, contributed to the development of the evolution doctrine, and was well known throughout the Union as a lecturer. His first publication (on tobacco and alcohol) in 1868 was followed in 1872 by his work on Myths and Myth-makers. His Cosmic Philosophy was mainly an exposition of Herbert Spencer; his Darwinism and other Essays was eminently suggestive; he applied the evolution theory to historical problems; and in Man's Destiny, The Idea of God, The Origin of Evil, and Through Nature to God (1899) he defended spiritual religion. His Discovery of America (1892) was but one of a long series of important works on American history, which included Old Virginia and her Neighbours, The Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America, New France and New England, The American Revolution, and The Mississippi Valley in the Civil War (1900). He wrote on American Political Ideals, A Century of Science, and with J. G. Wilson edited Appleton's Cyclopædia of American Biography. See his Life and Letters (1917) by J. S. Clark.

William Dean Howells was born at Martin's Ferry, Belmont County, in the state of Ohio, on 1st March 1837. His father, William Cooper Howells, a busy but not always prosperous printer and journalist, was of Welsh Quaker descent, and a Swedenborgian, in which creed the future novelist was brought up. According to his own account he was 'self-taught'; in boyhood he had no regular schooling. From the age of eleven he worked under his father as a compositor, and ten years later he developed into a journalist. A Life of Abraham Lincoln, written as part of the 'literature' of the momentous presidential election of 1860, won him the post of consul at Venice, where he lived from 1861 to 1865, acquiring a knowledge of the Italian language and literature. His impressions were reproduced in 1866 in Venetian Life. Returning to America, he contributed to the New York Tribune, Times, and Nation, and wrote for the Atlantic Monthly, which he edited from 1872 to 1881. Their Wedding Journey (1871), his first venture in fiction, had an immediate popularity, well deserved by its brightness and cleverness. A Chance Acquaintance (1873) showed fuller mastery of the novelist's art, but it was A Modern Instance (1882) that established Howells's headship of American realists. In The Rise of Silas Lapham (1885), a description of the prosperity and fall of a parvenu family in Boston, the novelist is seen in full exercise of his powers. It was in the year 1886 that Howells began his long association with Harper's Magazine, writing first for 'The Editor's Study,' and then for 'The Easy Chair.' A deeper note was struck in A Hazard of New Fortunes (1889), by competent critics ranked as the best of all novels of New York. W. D. Howells's output during some sixty years of literary activity—he died on 11th May 1920—was enormous, comprising, apart from magazine articles, prefaces, and the like, over a hundred volumes of verse and prose: novels and short stories, comedies and farces, travels, criticism, biography, and autobiography. Typical books, outside fiction, were Tuscan Cities (1885), Modern Italian Poets, Criticism and Fiction, My Literary Passions (1895), Impressions and Experiences, Literary Friends and Acquaintance (1900), Literature and Life, London Films (1905), Roman Holidays, My Mark Twain (1910), Familiar Spanish Travels, and Years of my Youth (1916). Among later novels may be instanced The Quality of Mercy (1892), A Traveller from Altruria (1894), Their Silver Wedding Journey (1899), The Kentons (1902), The Son of Royal Langbrith (1904), Through the Eye of the Needle (1907), and The Leatherstocking God (1916). Deeply influenced by Tolstoi and the Russians, W. D. Howells mellowed his realism with native kindliness; a keen admirer of Jane Austen, he loved to dwell in his stories on commonplace everyday life. To his easy charm and thoughtful humour he owed his wide popularity, more marked, so far as his novels are concerned, in the United States than in Britain. An Hon. D.Litt. of Oxford (1904) and the Gold Medal (1915) of the National Institute of Arts and Letters 'for distinguished work in fiction' betokened the appreciation on both sides of the Atlantic of the founder of the school of American realism and a great man-of-letters. See books by his sister (1929) and Firkins (1925).

WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS.

From a Photograph by Notmau.

George Washington Cable (1844-1925) was born in New Orleans of Virginian and New England stock, and as a slenderly educated clerk at nineteen volunteered into the Confederate service. After the war he earned for some time a precarious living at survey and other work, became an accountant in a cotton agency, and began to write for the New Orleans papers. His Creole sketches in Scribner made his reputation, revealing as they did an interesting and as yet unexploited phase of American social life. Old Creole Days (1879) was followed by The Grandissimes (1880), perhaps his best book, a tender and sympathetic rendering of the American-French life of Louisiana; in the same key were Madame Delphine (1881), Dr Sevier, Bonaventure, and Strange True Stories of Louisiana (1889). The Creoles of Louisiana (1884), The Silent South (1885), The Negro Question (1890) are political, social-economic disquisitions. Later novels are John March, Southerner (1895), The Cavalier (1901), Bylow Hill, Kincaid's Battery (1908), and Lovers of Louisiana (1918). See his Life and Letters by L. L. C. Bikle (1928).

Henry James.

at once an American and an English novelist, was born in New York on 15th April 1843. His father was Henry James (1811-82), a well-known original and theological writer and lecturer, whose doctrine is described by one of the historians of American literature as 'a sort of Ishmaelish Swedenborgianism,' which only his two sons—'inheritors of his style'—the novelist and William James, philosopher and psychologist, were 'capable of analysing.' Yet Henry James, senior, expounded his views in a long series of works (Christianity the Logic of Creation one of them) which are admittedly acute, profound, suggestive, and sometimes entertaining. (William James edited his father's Literary Remains; and Henry drew a vivid picture of his father in A Small Boy and Others and Notes of a Son and Brother, 1913-14.)

HENRY JAMES.

From a Photograph by Elliott & Fry.

Henry James, junior, was educated under the paternal eye in a cosmopolitan fashion at New York, Geneva, Paris, and Boulogne. In 1862 he became a student at the Harvard Law-School, but his bent was not to jurisprudence, and after the usual preparation of magazine work, he won public notice as a novelist with his Roderick Hudson (1875). He had gone for good to Europe in 1869; in England he finally made his home, and there during the War (1915) he was naturalised, to mark his sympathy. A few weeks before his death, which occurred on February 28, 1916, the Order of Merit was conferred upon him.

His earlier novels dealt mainly with American life and character at home and abroad, and were produced with great fertility and rapidity. In 1877 appeared The American, in 1878 The Europeans and Daisy Miller, the last a delightful sketch of the naïveté of the American girl, and the author's nearest approach to a popular success. Even more keen and delicate are some of the shorter stories—The Pension Beaurepas, for example, and A Bundle of Letters (1886). In the following years appeared Washington Square and The Portrait of a Lady (1881), rather spoilt by its prolixity; The Bostonians (1886); The Princess of Casamassima (1886), a study of English society; The Aspern Papers (1888); A London Life (1889); and The Tragic Muse (1890).

In his analytical treatment of character and incident, Henry James was strongly influenced by Flaubert, and in his later work sometimes carried that method to a degree of refinement approaching morbidity. This manner was developed (after an interval mainly occupied with short stories and plays) in Terminations (1896), and even more strikingly in What Maisie Knew (1897), a perfectly pitiless analysis of the thoughts and feelings of an unfortunate child. In The Cage (1898) carried the art of abstraction to the farthest limit in the withholding of the heroine's name. The Turn of the Screw (1898) grimmest of ghost tales, well illustrated, in long-short story form, its author's power of concentrating on one theme, of creating an atmosphere, and of representing his characters' point of view. Among more recent novels may be named The Awkward Age (1899); The Ambassadors (1903)—'quite the best all round of my productions,' in James's own estimation; The Golden Bowl (1904); The Outcry (1911). The uncompleted stories, The Ivory Tower and The Sense of the Past (1917), cast valuable light on the writer's methods as a craftsman. Character, not plot, was his one constant preoccupation; and his characters were almost invariably drawn from the leisured, lettered, and artistic classes of Europe or America. From the end of the 19th century Henry James's method became so superlatively subtle that, while admiring the extreme cleverness of the performance, one is perplexed and irritated by the studious allusiveness of the narrative, the long, involved sentences, and the incessant rapier-play of elliptical dialogue.

Henry James also distinguished himself as a critic. His best achievement in this line is French Poets and Novelists (1878). Partial Portraits (1888) too amply justifies its title, and the monograph on Hawthorne (1879) in the 'English Men of Letters' series is hardly weighty enough for its theme. In 1903 he published a Life of W. W. Story; in 1907 The American Scene; and in The Middle Years (1917) he continued his autobiography.

America has produced many more powerful writers than Henry James, but none perhaps that has attained a greater delicacy of touch or a more perfect literary finish.

The New York Collected Edition (26 vols. 1907-17) of the novels and tales is not complete, but represents the author's own choice, and has valuable prefaces. The Complete Edition (London, 1921 et seq.) is in 33 volumes. Henry James's Letters (2 vols.) were issued in 1920. There are monographs on him by E. L. Cary (1905), W. C. Brownell (1909), Ford Madox Hueffer (1913), Rebecca West (1916), J. W. Beach (1918), Bosanquet (1924), and Brooks (1928).

William James (1842-1910), son of Henry James, senior, was born in New York, and, educated at home and in Europe, took the Harvard M.D. From 1872 he lectured at Harvard on anatomy, physiology, psychology, and philosophy in succession, becoming a professor in 1881. He was a keen and pregnant thinker, a luminous and attractive writer, defended what have been thought theological paradoxes on non-theological grounds, maintained orthodox positions in an unorthodox and original manner, and combined empirical method with a strongly idealistic body of thought. As an analytical psychologist he exercised even more influence than as a metaphysician. His works include Principles of Psychology (1890); The Will to Believe; Human Immortality; The Varieties of Religious Experience (Gifford Lectures at Edinburgh, 1899-1901); his famous exposition and defence of philosophical Pragmatism (1907); and Some Problems in Philosophy (1911).

Richard Watson Gilder (1844-1909), born at Bordentown, New Jersey, studied law, served in the army, and did journalistic work on various papers in New Jersey before he became editor of Scribner's Monthly and then of The Century Magazine. Founder of many literary and artistic clubs, he ranks high amongst recent American poets in virtue of The New Day (1875), The Celestial Passion, The Great Remembrance, Five Books of Song, For the Country, In Palestine, Poems and Inscriptions, Fire Divine (1908), and other volumes. His Letters were published in 1916.

Edward Noyes Westcott (1846-98), born in Syracuse, New York, was a banker in his native town, and died before his first novel was published—David Harum, a story in which the interest turned on the shrewd, humorous, eccentric character of a country banker; probably no work of American fiction has had such instantaneous success. An unfinished work by him, The Teller, was published in 1901 with a short memoir.

Julian Hawthorne (1846-1934), biographer of his famous father (see page 778), was born at Boston, studied at Harvard and Dresden, and did much journalistic work. In addition to his Saxon Studies and Hawthorne and his Circle (1904), he wrote a history of the United States, a book on American literature, and over a score of novels and stories, Garth (1877) among the first.

Joel Chandler Harris (1848-1908), born in Eatonton, Georgia, was in turn printer, lawyer, and journalist. His Uncle Remus (1880), with its thoughts and sayings and doings of 'Brer Rabbit,' as conceived by the negroes of the South, opened a new field in literature, and quickly carried his name to the Old World, at once to children and to students of folklore. The Tar Baby, Nights with Uncle Remus, Uncle Remus and his Friends, Told by Uncle Remus, Uncle Remus and Brer Rabbit, Uncle Remus and the Little Boy (1910), continued, among others, the tradition. There is a Life (1918) by Julia C. Harris.

James Lane Allen (1849-1925), was born in Kentucky, taught in Kentucky University and elsewhere, and from 1891 was famous for his novels, tales, and sketches illustrating various aspects of his native Blue Grass region—Flute and Violin, A Kentucky Cardinal (the cardinal bird), Aftermath, A Summer in Arcady, The Choir Invisible, The Reign of Law, and others.

Eugene Field (1850-95), born at St Louis, Missouri, was a journalist at twenty-three, and sent much of his best work to a Chicago paper, his column of 'Sharps and Flats' being a characteristic feature. His work varies from tender pathos and delicate humour to the broadly farcical; he is most known as a humourist and as a poet of childhood. His best verses for children are in With Trumpet and Drum (1892); A Little Book of Western Verse represents another type of work; and his humour is well illustrated in The Love Affairs of a Bibliomaniac.

Edward Bellamy (1850-98), born at Chicopee Falls, Massachusetts, studied at home and in Germany, and was admitted to the Bar; but most of his life was devoted to journalism and authorship. Looking Backward (1888), a Utopian romance, had a prodigious success. A sequel, Equality (1897), was less brilliant.

James Whitcomb Riley (1849-1916), born at Greenfield, Indiana, of Pennsylvania Dutch and Irish stock, painted signboards, cobbled plays for a theatrical troupe, and in 1875 began contributing to the papers verses in the local dialect. Some of these purported to be by an unlettered farmer, 'Benj. F. Johnson of Boone, the Hoosier Poet.' The Ole Swimmin' Hole, issued in pamphlet form in 1883, attained immense popularity. Other notable collections followed: Afterwhiles, Old-Fashioned Roses, Rhymes of Childhood, &c. Poems like 'When the Frost is on the Punkin' and 'Little Orphant Annie' made the name of the 'People's Laureate' a household word in America. The homely verses of the 'Hoosier Poet' won the hearts of old and young, cultured and uncultured alike. His Complete Works (1913) fill six volumes.

Francis Marion Crawford (1854-1909), son of a famous American sculptor (Thomas Crawford, 1814-57) long resident in Rome, was born at Bagni di Lucca in North Italy, and studied at Concord in New Hampshire, at Trinity College, Cambridge, at Carlsruhe, and at Heidelberg. At Rome he devoted himself to the study of Sanskrit, and during 1879-80 was engaged in press work at Allahabad, where he was admitted to the Catholic Church. In his later years his home was at Sorrento in Italy, though he often spent some part of the year in America. His first novel, Mr Isaacs (1882), a story of Indian life, was succeeded by a long series of tales, including Dr Claudius, A Roman Singer, Zoroaster, Marzio's Crucifix, Saracinesca, Paul Patoff, Greifenstein, Sant' Ilario, A Cigarette-maker's Romance, The Witch of Prague, Don Orsino, Pietro Ghisleri, The Ralstons, Corleone, Via Crucis, In the Palace of the King, Cecilia, The Heart of Rome (1903). Descriptive or historical works are Constantinople, Ave Roma Immortalis, and The Rulers of the South (a history of Sicily); and in The Novel—What it Is, a brochure, he expounded the view he cherished of his art. His earlier novels had more mystery or adventure, his later ones more careful character-drawing; and in both series he moves easily to and fro between the sphere of fact and the occult world. His American novels have proved on the whole the least popular; the Italian Saracinesca series comprises his most accomplished and artistic work.

Harold Frederic (1856-98), born in Utica, New York, was bred a journalist, but before his premature death had proved himself a novelist of exceptional gifts and powers, keen insight, rich humour, satirical strength, and constructive skill. Most of his novels, dealing largely with country life in New York State, were written after he settled in England. Sett's Brother's Wife (1887) was his first important story; The Copperhead (1894) was a tale of the Civil War; and in Marsena (1895) were collected admirably humorous sketches of character. The Damnation of Theron Ware (in England called Illumination; 1896) was a trenchant analysis of religious life; Gloria Mundi (1898), strangely unlike, was equally a human document. The New Exodus (1892) was a realistic study of Russian anti-Semitism. The Market-place, a Stock Exchange story, appeared in 1899.

Owen Wister (1860-1938), born at Philadelphia, graduated at Harvard, and had been three years at the Philadelphia Bar when The Dragon of Wantley: his Tail (1892), attracted notice to his literary gifts. The Virginian (1902), a cowboy story, made his name known in Britain. Later works are Lady Baltimore, Members of the Family, A Straight Deal (1920). He wrote a Life of President Grant, verse and magazine contributions.

Richard Harding Davis (1864-1916), born at Philadelphia, had made a name for himself as a correspondent of the New York papers ere he became known to another world of readers as an original, vigorous, and facile novelist by such stories, short or long, as Gallegher (1891), Soldiers of Fortune, Van Bibber, In the Fog, Captain Macklin, The Lost Road (1913). He also wrote plays, and books on Cuba, S. Africa, &c. C. B. Davis edited his Adventures and Letters (1917).

Paul Leicester Ford (1865-1902), born in Brooklyn, edited the works of Jefferson, and wrote on Washington, Franklin, and other subjects in American history. But his fiction was even better known—The Honorable Peter Sterling (1894), The Great K. and A. Train Robbery, The Story of an Untold Love, Janice Meredith, Wanted a Match-maker, Wanted a Chaperon. He was editor of The Bibliographer (which he founded) at the time of his tragic death.

Robert William Chambers (1865-1933), born at Brooklyn, became a painter, and after studies in Julian's studio in Paris, exhibited in the Salon. His first considerable literary venture, In the Quarter, appeared in 1893; The Red Republic, a tale of the Commune, in 1894; Lorraine (1898) was a romance of the Franco-German War; Cardigan (1901) sought its subject in colonial experiences before the War of Independence; besides a play, Ellangowan, he wrote many short stories (e.g. The Maker of Moons, 1896), romances, and novels of society and bohemian life.

Stephen Crane (1871-1900), born at Newark, New Jersey, and educated at Lafayette College and Syracuse University, became an active journalist, and showed special gifts as war correspondent in Greece (1897) and in Cuba. His first essay in fiction was Maggie, a Girl of the Streets (written in 1891, but not published, except privately, till 1896). It was The Red Badge of Courage (1895), an episode of the Civil War and a marvellously life-like study of the mind and thought of a soldier in action, that made him known to the English-speaking world. Neither in The Third Violet, a story in dialogue and dialect, nor in collections such as The Monster and The Little Regiment, did he attain the same level. His Irish story, The O'Ruddy, was completed by Mr Robert Barr. Bowery Tales, Wounds in the Rain, and Whilomville Stories were published from his manuscripts after his death.

Winston Churchill, born at St Louis in 1871, was educated at the United States Naval Academy. In 1898 he made a success as an author with The Celebrity; even more popular was the series of historical romances, Richard Carvel (1899), The Crisis, and The Crossing (1904). Later stories—Coniston, A Modern Chronicle, The Inside of the Cup, &c.—depict serious phases of American life, political, social, and religious.

Ambrose Bierce (1838-1914?), born in Ohio, distinguished himself in the Civil War, wrote for Fun (London) and many American papers, and with Tales of Soldiers and Civilians (1891), &c., took rank as a short story writer of superb craftsmanship and Poe-like gruesome power. His collected works (1909-12), including verse, fill 12 volumes. See De Castro's Portrait of Ambrose Bierce.

William Sydney Porter (1862-1910), humourist, wrote under the name of 'O(liver) Henry.' Born at Greensboro, North Carolina, he was everything in turn (including a convict for embezzlement as a bank-teller) ere settling down in New York in 1902 as a masterly short story writer. Typical O. Henry collections are Cabbages and Kings (1904), The Gentle Grafter (1908), and The Four Million (1909). Great technical finish, amazing climax and unexpected dénouement, extravagant situation, verbal smartness, and pungent jargon mark the work of this brilliant (if shallow), immensely popular, and typically American humourist. See a Life (1917) by C. A. Smith.

Edward Rowland Sill (1841-1887), poet of the Far West, was born at Windsor, Connecticut. Graduating from Yale, he went to California for his health, and after trying ranching, journalism, and other occupations, took up teaching, ultimately becoming Professor of English at California University. In 1867 he published The Hermitage, a volume of verse (reissued with later poems in 1889). This collection, with his essays and post-humous poems, reflects the mind of a diffident, delicate, æsthetic, and music-loving solitary, saved from morbid gloom by a sense of humour and a love of beauty and of nature. W. B. Parker wrote his Life (1915).

Richard Hovey (1864-1900), poet, was born in Illinois, graduated from Dartmouth College, studied theology, but made literature his profession, latterly being lecturer in Columbia University. His Launcelot and Guinevere (1891-1900; 5 vols. 1907) is a poetic cycle in dramatic form. Of the nine dramas he planned, he lived to write only half. The fourth, Taliesin: A Masque, 'of imagination all compact,' is perhaps the most ambitious. He collaborated with Bliss Carman in exuberant Songs from Vagabondia (3 series: 1893-1900). In Along the Trail (1898), a book of lyrics, is maturer work, including the oft-quoted 'Spring.' Hovey shows the influence of the Elizabethans and Whitman, and his early death robbed America of a poet who, if over-facile at times, strove ever 'to reveal the beauty in things, and breathe into his fellows a love of it.'

William Vaughn Moody (1869-1910), poet and dramatist, born at Spencer, Indiana, graduated from Harvard, and was instructor in English at Chicago University. His first published work, The Masque of Judgment (1900), was one of a trilogy of philosophic dramas in blank verse, the others being The Death of Eve (unfinished) and The Fire-Bringer. In 1901 appeared Poems, including strenuous lyrics and patriotic stanzas (e.g. 'On a Soldier Fallen in the Philippines'), instinct with lofty indignation against injustice and wrong. His prose play, The Great Divide (1906), achieved instant success; not so his mystical prose drama, The Faith Healer (1909). A complete edition of the Poems and Poetic Dramas (2 vols.) was issued in 1912.

Emily Dickinson (1830-1886), poetess, was born at Amherst, where she spent all her days. Renouncing love at the call of duty, she lived a strict recluse, yet found 'ecstasy in living,' absorbed in the world of the mind and the soul. Introspection led to verse-writing, and, with no thought of publication, she accumulated little poems, which were not issued till after her death, (3 series: 1890-96). A later volume, A Single Hound, appeared in 1914, with a preface by her niece, who edited her Life and Letters in 1924. Seventy-six new poems were discovered and published in 1929. Tense, terse, delicate, mystical, vivid in imagery, her work proved a beacon of growing brightness to poets of the century that followed her own.

Frances Hodgson Burnett (1849-1924), born Frances Eliza Hodgson at Manchester, went with her family to Tennessee in 1865, and in 1873 married Dr Burnett (whom in 1898 she divorced). In 1900, long since settled in England, she became Mrs Stephen Townsend. Her reputation was founded on That Lass o' Lowrie's (1877), and confirmed by Haworth's, A Fair Barbarian, A Lady of Quality (also dramatised), Little Lord Fauntleroy (1886; by far her most popular work—afterwards dramatised), The Making of a Marchioness (1901), and other stories.

Mary Noailles Murfree (1850-1922), born at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, great-granddaughter of a noted revolutionary soldier, became a successful novelist under the pen-name of Charles Egbert Craddock. Her first notable story was in The Tennessee Mountains (1884); The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains (1885) more fully displayed her power; The Despot of Bromsedge Cove (1889) was equally popular. She revealed strange depths in the lives of the mountain backwoodsmen.

Margaret Deland, whose maiden name was Margaret Wade Campbell, was born in 1857 in Pennsylvania, at Allegheny ('Old Chester' of her best stories), and in 1880 married Mr L. F. Deland of Boston. In 1886 she published The Old Garden and other Verses. It was her John Ward, Preacher (1888), with its keen analysis of the struggle between a husband's Calvinism and a wife's agnosticism, that made her known. A score of volumes (short stories and novels) followed.

Kate Douglas Wiggin, née Smith (1857-1923), born at Philadelphia, married Mr Samuel Wiggin (died 1889) in 1880, and Mr G. C. Riggs in 1895. Her first triumphs were The Birds' Christmas Carol, The Story of Patsy, A Summer in a Cañon, Timothy's Quest (1889-90). A Cathedral Courtship, and Penelope's Experiences in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively, are amusing tourist fiction. Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (1903; dramatised 1908) and New Chronicles of Rebecca (1907) deal agreeably with rural New England life. See the Life, by her sister Nora Smith (1925).

Gertrude Franklin Atherton, daughter of Mr T. L. Horn and a great-grand-niece of Benjamin Franklin, was born in 1859 in San Francisco, and married Mr G. H. B. Atherton. In 1892 she published The Doomsdwoman, a tale of old California. Other books of hers are Patience Sparhawk and her Times, American Wives and English Husbands, The Californians, The Conqueror (on the life of Alexander Hamilton), Ancestors, Tower of Ivory, The Living Present, The Avalanche (1919). Her work is unequal, but has intellectual force.

Mary Eleanor Wilkins (1862–1930), born at Randolph, Massachusetts, became well known for her convincing pictures of New England life and character, as in A Humble Romance (1887) and A New England Nun. Other volumes of short stories followed, as well as verse and full-length novels, such as Pembroke (1894) and The Shoulders of Atlas (1907). By marriage Miss Wilkins became Mrs C. M. Freeman. Mary Wilkins never mastered the technique of the novel, but her short stories are as sound in form as they are in substance. Some of her later work shows a morbid strain.

Edith Wharton (1862–1937), born in New York, daughter of George F. Jones, married in 1885, and published her first volume of stories, The Greater Inclination, in 1899. Crucial Instances and other collections of tales followed, and in The House of Mirth (1905), Madame de Treymes (1907), Ethan Frome (1911), The Custom of the Country (1913), and The Age of Innocence (1920), among other novels, Mrs Wharton found fuller scope for her analytical faculty. Her work is marked by psychological acumen, irony, and sense of style, and has been translated into more than one foreign language. Besides fiction, she wrote on Italy, Morocco, and France before and during the Great War. After the War she was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

John Oliver Hobbes was the pen-name of PEARL MARY TERESA RICHARDS (1867–1906), born in Boston, U.S.A., who from 1887 bore the name of Craigie; but in 1895 she secured a divorce from an unworthy husband. She lived in England, and by 1892, when she entered the Roman Catholic Church, had made her pen-name known by Some Emotions and a Moral and The Sinner's Comedy. The Gods, Some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham (1895) confirmed her repute for invention, vivacity, and epigrammatic strength as an author, as did The Herb Moon and The School for Saints (1897), whose sequel, Robert Orange (1900), turned on problems of the soul, and showed power in dealing with questions of creed and religious aspiration. Love and the Soul Hunters appeared in 1902; The Ambassador, A Re- pentance, The Wisdom of the Wise, The Bishop's Move, and The Flute of Pan were plays. The Dream and the Business was published after her death.

Mary Johnston, born at Buchanan in Virginia in 1870, published a spirited historical romance of Virginian plantation life before the Revolution, Prisoners of Hope (in England called The Old Dominion; 1898). This was followed by To Have and to Hold (in England, By Order of the Company), Audrey, and other tales of old Virginia. To the 'Chronicles of America Series' she contributed Pioneers of the Old South (1918).

Willa Sibert Cather was born in 1876 in Virginia, but went to college in Nebraska. There and in Arizona she found her first material in the patient heroism of pioneer immigrants from Europe, of whom she wrote in O Pioneers! (1913), My Antonia (1918), and A Lost Lady (1923). Shadows on the Rock (1932) is a tale of Old Quebec, which deeply interested her as a Roman Catholic. Miss Cather trusts more to observation than to imagination. Her characters, especially her female characters, are better than her plots. In The Professor's House (1925) she experimented with a technique imitative of musical construction. In the straightforward narrative of her masterpiece, Death Comes for the Archbishop (1927), and in long-short stories such as compose Obscure Destinies (1932), she found the art-form that suits her genius best. Not Under Forty (1936) is a collection of essays, reminiscences, and criticisms. One of Ours won the Pulitzer novel-prize in 1923. Miss Cather's deep and reverent humanity conserves precious elements in American life that the post-war realists of the cities are prone to ignore.

Dorothy Canfield (Dorothea Frances Canfield Fisher) was born in Kansas in 1879, studied at Ohio and Columbia Universities, and was secretary of the Horace Mann experimental school from 1902 to 1905. Her home is in Vermont. Her earlier novels, e.g. The Squirrel Cage (1912) and The Bent Twig (1915), are located in the Middle West; but in the charming Understood Betsy (1917) the action shifts to Vermont, which is also the scene of The Brimming Cup (1921). Her three years' war-work in Paris furnished material for Home Fires in France (1918), and later for The Deepening Stream (1930), the most massive of her novels. Other novels are The Home Maker (1924) and Her Son's Wife (1926). Hillsboro People, The Real Motive, Raw Material, and Basque People are collections of short stories and sketches. Her study of experimental education yielded, inter alia, The Montessori Mother (1913) and Mothers and Children (1914). Few contemporary writers have so wide an experience of life or so understanding a heart as has Dorothy Canfield.

George Santayana, born in Madrid in 1863, was taken to America at the age of nine. He studied at Harvard, and taught there from 1889 to 1912; thereafter he lived and travelled in Europe. He is a poet-philosopher; in point of time a poet first and a philosopher afterwards, for his first published work was the Sonnets of 1894. Other poems are the tragedy of Lucifer (1899) and The Hermit of Carmel (1901). The transition to philosophy was made naturally by way of æsthetics: The Sense of Beauty appeared in 1896. Then came his magnum opus, The Life of Reason (1905-06), Scepticism and Animal Faith (1923), and The Realm of Essence (1927). The Last Puritan (1935) is a memoir. Mr Santayana believes that experience is the sole reality. By 'the Realm of Essence' he means sensations and ideas arising from them, which 'Animal Faith' makes us accept as fairly reporting an external world. In natural philosophy he is a materialist, and believes that there is nothing immortal; yet as a poet he is in sympathy with the aspirations of religion. If his poetry and his philosophy seem thus at odds, his poetic temperament has given his prose style a richness rare among philosophers.

Edwin Arlington Robinson (1869-1935) was born in Maine, but spent most of his life in New York, where he was a subway inspector until his Captain Craig (1902) attracted the attention of Theodore Roosevelt, who gave him a post in the Customs. This, however, he soon resigned to devote himself wholly to literature. He won the Pulitzer prize for poetry three times, and was generally regarded as the foremost American poet of his day, with Mr Frost as his only rival. In truth the two had little in common beyond the fundamental Puritanism which both owed to their New England blood. Mr Frost draws always from the life; Robinson was a literate poet, steeped in the English Romantics and Victorians. His Merlin (1917), Lancelot (1920), and the immense Tristram (1927) rehandle Arthurian themes. He was influenced above all by Browning, though he has nothing of Browning's robust optimism. Content as he was with traditional forms and metres, he yet gave his bleak but unrepining philosophy a distinctive American accent, as in The Man Against the Sky (1916), The Man who Died Twice (1924), and Cavender's House (1929). He wrote two plays, Van Zorn (1914) and The Porcupine (1915). While he may have been overrated by his contemporaries, the uniformly high level of his abundant and careful work ensures him an honourable place on the roll of American poets.

(Newton) Booth Tarkington, novelist, was born at Indianapolis in 1869. His partly French ancestry may help to account for his light, witty touch. He was educated at Princeton. His study of art, though it did not make him a successful artist, enabled him later to portray the art dealer Mr Rumbin. Author of many plays and a few short stories, he is more important as a novelist. His novels fall into three classes: (1) romantic period-pieces like Monsieur Beaucaire (1900); (2) gay studies of boyhood in Penrod (1914), Penrod and Sam (1916), and of adolescence in Seventeen (1916), shading through Gentle Julia (1922) into (3) more serious pictures of middle-class life. From The Gentleman from Indiana (1899) onwards, he laid his scenes in his native Middle West: The Magnificent Ambersons (1918), Turmoil (1915), and The Midlander (1923) form a saga of the growth of a Mid-Western city. Less varied but more poignant is Alice Adams (1921), perhaps his most perfect novel. Equally sincere is the tragic and beautiful Mirthful Haven (1931), where, as in other of his later novels, he transferred his action to the Atlantic seaboard. Mr Tarkington's combination of sentiment and humour with a realism sometimes painful but never sordid appeals irresistibly to the great middle class of and for which he writes. He twice won the Pulitzer novel-prize.

Theodore Dreiser was born in Indiana in 1871, of German stock. The suppression of his first novel, the Zolaesque Sister Carrie (1900), so discouraged him that he did not publish his second, Jennie Gerhardt, till 1911. Other novels followed, besides plays—Plays of the Natural and the Supernatural (1916), The Hand of the Potter (1918)—two autobiographical sketches, and several books of travel, one of them on Russia. It is characteristic of Mr Dreiser that his best known novel, An American Tragedy (1925), was based on an actual crime, while two others, The Financier (1912) and The Titan (1914), were based on the career of a real industrial magnate. His style is clumsy, but his humanity and sincerity, no less than his fidelity to fact and the impressive effects which he achieves by his laboured drawing of detail, stroke upon stroke without comment, have won him a foremost place among the older American realists. He might have been more than a realist had he been able to make up his mind what to believe.

Robert (Lee) Frost, poet, was born in 1875 in San Francisco; but he came of New England stock, and went to New Hampshire in his boyhood. There, except for two short spells at college, he worked as factory hand, teacher, and farmer, writing poetry 'on the side.' As no American editor would look at his verses, he came to England in 1912, made friends with such poets of his own age as Mr Abercrombie, Mr Gibson, Rupert Brooke, and Edward Thomas, and got two volumes published. The lyrics of A Boy's Will (1913), still more the blank verse of North of Boston (1914), were so well received by the London reviewers that when Mr Frost went home in 1915 he found himself famous. Since then he has held various University appointments at Amherst and Ann Arbor, and has published a few more slender volumes: Mountain Interval (1916), a play A Way Out (1917), New Hampshire (1923), West-Running Brook (1928), A Further Range (1937). Mr Frost is the authentic voice of New England, the real New England of to-day. He is not a mere photographer; for him facts are symbols, and he sees the beauty and fun of life as well as its grimness. As an artist he goes beyond Wordsworth, holding that the rhythms as well as the diction of poetry are implicit in common speech. His verses at their best catch the tones of the living voice; we seem not to read but to hear them. His output has been small and his range of subjects narrow, but he is already a classic.

James Branch Cabell (b. 1879) comes of an old Southern family. He studied at William and Mary College, Virginia, where he taught Greek and French for a year. He owes much to French romance, and something to Rabelais; something also to Anatole France, whom his style often recalls. The Rivet in Grandfather's Neck (1915) is an idyll of the Virginia of his youth; but his most characteristic work is to be found in Jurgen (1919) and its sequels, Figures of Earth (1921), and The Silver Stallion (1926). The suppression of Jurgen made him famous. In these stories he has created a world of mediæval French romance, through which symbolic characters move at the bidding of an ironic fancy. Mr Cabell is a romantic ironist, or ironical romancer. Romance, he holds, is the spring of human progress, for man is the only animal that apes his own dreams. Yet romance is an illusion; man's dreams are dreams. Mr Cabell's mannered, rhythmical style is like a tapestry, with queer flowers of modern colloquialism worked on a ground of Malory.

Sinclair Lewis was born in Minnesota in 1885 and studied at Yale. He began life as a journalist, and has travelled extensively in America and Europe. His first novel, the partly autobiographical Our Mr Wrenn (1914), attracted little attention; but he won fame with Main Street in 1920 and consolidated it in 1922 with Babbitt, which actually gave a new word to the language. Main Street exposes the vulgarities and corruptions of small-town life; Babbitt is a sardonic full-length portrait of the average sensual business man. Mr Lewis's satiric animus, while it gives salt to his descriptions of life, sometimes impairs their verisimilitude, as in Elmer Gantry (1927), a savage exposure of a clerical sensualist. But in Arrowsmith (1925) and still more in Dodsworth (1929) the novelist prevails over the satirist and shows himself capable of sympathy, even of tenderness. The Man Who Knew Coolidge (1928) is a satirical sketch in lighter vein. Mr Lewis is no stylist, but he has great satiric force and command of detail. He was awarded the Nobel prize in 1930.

Van Wyck Brooks was born in New Jersey in 1886 and graduated at Harvard in 1907. His social and biographical studies are a sustained criticism of Idealism, more especially of New England Idealism in its successive forms of Puritanism, Unitarianism, and Transcendentalism. His earlier attitude is sufficiently indicated by the titles of his first two books, The Wine of the Puritans (1909) and The Malady of the Ideal (1913). John Addington Symonds (1914) studies another victim of that malady. The Ordeal of Mark Twain (1920) and The Pilgrimage of Henry James (1925) are studies in failure. Meantime his attitude to the New England Idealists was mellowing. In Letters and Leadership (1918) he had called Emerson 'a lofty and inspired sophist'; but in Emerson: a Portrait (1932) his tone, though still detached, is not hostile, and in The Flowering of New England, 1815-1865 (1936) he deals sympathetically with Emerson and his brilliant group.

Eugene (Gladstone) O'Neill, dramatist, was born in New York in 1888. His father was a popular actor of Irish origin. Young O'Neill had a year at Princeton before he was expelled for 'general hell-raising.' A roving youth as prospector, seaman, and beachcomber showed him low life at close quarters. In 1912 five months in a sanatorium under threat of consumption gave him time to 'think things over.' He decided for drama, having known the stage from childhood. He began with one-act melodramas, for several of which, e.g. The Moon of the Caribbees, he drew on his fo'c'sle experience. The Emperor Jones (1921) was his first regular drama; since then he has averaged one play a year. He was awarded the Nobel prize in 1936. Mr O'Neill's most striking characteristics are his blending of realism with poetry, and (closely connected with that) his bold innovations on modern theatrical convention, reversions, some of them, to Greek and Elizabethan practice. He uses masks in The Hairy Ape (1922), The Great God Brown (1925), and Lazarus Laughed (1926); soliloquy in The Emperor Jones; asides in Strange Interlude (1927); while the hallucinatory tableau in Where the Cross is Made recalls Shakespeare's ghosts. Mourning Becomes Electra is a modernized Oresteia; no masks are used, but the 'mask-like faces' of the chief characters are repeatedly emphasized, while visitors and chanties discharge the double function of the Greek chorus. Mr O'Neill's restless search for new forms of drama is a symptom of his restless search for a new religion.

COMPLEMENTARY LISTS OF XIXTH AND XXTH CENTURY AUTHORS

- I. BRITISH WRITERS: MEN
- II. BRITISH WRITERS: WOMEN
- III. AMERICAN WRITERS

COMPLEMENTARY LIST I.

BRITISH AND DOMINION WRITERS: MEN.

Major John Richardson (1796-1852), the first real Canadian novelist, is known chiefly as the author of Wucousta, a historical novel, the forerunner of the many novels based on Canada's romantic early days.

George Long (1800-79), sometime professor in University College, London, edited the Penny Cyclopadia, contributed much to Smith's Classical Dictionaries, and was an accomplished translator and commentator on classical texts.

John Colquhoun (1805-85), army officer, wrote The Moor and the Loch, Rocks and Rivers, Salmon Casts, and Sporting Days.

Charles George William St John (1809-56), for a while a clerk in the Treasury, wrote Wild Sports of the Highlands and valuable Note-books on sport and natural history.

John Bright (1811-89) wrote little directly for publication, though he contributed a few prefatory notes to other people's works, and was co-editor with Thorold Rogers of Cobden's speeches. His own Speeches on Questions of Public Policy, which may fairly claim to rank as literature, were published in 1868 (new ed. 1878); his Public Addresses in 1879; and his Public Letters in 1885.

Sir Edward Shepherd Creasy (1812-78), professor in London University and then Chief-Justice of Ceylon, wrote The Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World.

William George Ward (1812-82), Fellow and tutor of Balliol, became a Tractarian, and wrote The Ideal of a Christian Church, whence he became known as 'Ideal Ward'; turning Roman Catholic, he edited the Dublin Review, and maintained Papal infallibility against liberalism in theology.

Edward Forbes (1815-54), Professor of Natural History at Edinburgh, published more than two hundred works or papers on various departments of zoology and palæontology.

George Jacob Holyoake (1817-1906) wrote many books on the history of co-operation and on secularism (of which he was the foremost exponent), as well as the autobiographical Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life.

William Kirby (1817-1906), though born in England, spent sixty-seven of his eighty-nine years in Canada, and wrote one of the greatest of Canadian historical novels, The Golden Dog, a story of Quebec in the time of Louis XV.

John Campbell Shairp (1819-85), Principal of St. Andrews University and Professor of Poetry at Oxford, was a poet and accomplished critic, amongst his works being Kilmahoe, Studies in Poetry and Philosophy, Culture and Religion, Aspects of Poetry, and a small book on Burns.

Alexander Campbell Fraser (1819-1914), at first a Free Church minister, and for thirty-five years Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh, published the great edition of Berkeley's works, as also of Locke's Essay, with smaller books on Berkeley and Locke, a defence of them (Gifford Lectures), and an autobiographical Biographia Philosophica.

Sir Francis Galton (1822-1911), traveller and anthropologist, by a long life of patient research made himself the supreme authority on all that concerns heredity in man, amongst his books being Tropical South Africa, Hereditary Genius (1869), English Men of Science—their Nature and Nurture, Human Faculty, Natural Inheritance, and works on fingerprints. He was the founder of eugenics.

Sir Edward Bruce Hamley (1824-93), Lieutenant-General and Commandant of the Staff College, contributed to Blackwood and Fraser, and, besides books on wars and campaigns, wrote on Voltaire, on Shakespeare's Funeral, and Lady Lee's Widowhood.

Lord Kelvin (1824-1907), long known as Sir William Thomson, the most eminent mathematician and physicist of his time, published not merely innumerable Mathematical and Physical Papers, but also three volumes of Popular Lectures and Addresses.

Augustus Jessopp (1824-1914), rector of Scarning, wrote much on local and ecclesiastical history, Arcady and The Coming of the Friars amongst many other books.

Sir William Huggins (1824-1910), as an astronomer directing his own private observatory, made himself a supreme authority on spectroscopic astronomy.

George Bruce Malletson (1825-98), colonel, wrote books on the French in India, on the Indian Mutiny, etc.

Frederick James Furnivall (1825-1910) gave a great impulse to the scholarly study of English by annotated editions of old English texts.

William Alexander (1826-94) wrote Johnny Gibb of Gushetneuk, the prose classic of Northern Scots, describing rural life in Disruption times.

Lord Dufferin (1826-1902), statesman and orator, was author of Letters from High Latitudes, first published in 1859. And see page 385.

Charles Hamilton Aldé (1826-1906), author, composer, artist, wrote songs, novels, and plays, among his stories being Confidences (1859) and Carr of Carlyon; We are Seven (1902) contains short plays.

St George Mivart (1827-1900), Professor of Zoology at the Roman Catholic College of Kensington, wrote The Genesis of Species and other works from the standpoint of a sincere evolutionist save as regards mind, but an opponent of natural selection.

Simon Somerville Laurie (1829-1909), from 1876 till 1902 Professor of Education at Edinburgh, published a Life of Comenius; works on the institutes of education, on the history of mediæval education, on the philosophy of ethics, and on British theories of morals; and as 'Scotus Novanticus,' Metaphysica Nova et Vetusta and Ethica. Synthetica (1906) embodied his Gifford lectures.

William Michael Rossetti (1829-1919), editor of the famous Pre-Raphaelite Germ in 1850, wrote much on his father, his brother and sister, and on the Pre-Raphaelites; produced a Life of Keats; and edited Shelley, Blake, and 'Moxon's Popular Poets.'

- Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant Duff (1829-1906) published, besides political speeches and miscellanies, Studies of European Politics, books on Sir Henry Maine, Renan, and Lord de Tabley, and Notes from a Diary (1897-1905).
- Stanley Leathes (1830-1900), Prebendary of St. Paul's, was Boyle lecturer, Hulsean lecturer, and author of many conservative theological works.
- Sir George Tomkyns Chesney (1830-95), general and member of the Council of the Viceroy of India, wrote, besides The Battle of Dorking (1871), The Dilemma and other novels.
- Joseph Parker (1830-1902), preacher at the City Temple in London, was a copious and popular theological writer.
- Sir John Knox Laughton (1830-1915), Professor of Modern History at University College, London, was an authority on navigation and on naval history, his books on Nelson, on Nelson and his Companions, and on Sea Fights and Adventures being among the most popular; he also wrote a Life of Sir Henry Reeve.
- James Clerk Maxwell (1831-79), Professor of Physics at Cambridge, was one of the most creative thinkers on electricity and magnetism, produced epoch-making books and papers on physical science, and was a brilliant letter-writer.
- Edward Spencer Beesly (1831-1915), Professor of History (1860-93) in University College, London, wrote Catiline, Clodius, and Tiberius (1878), a book on Queen Elizabeth (1892), and translations of Comte.
- George Manville Fenn (1831-1909) produced from 1867 nearly two hundred boys' stories and novels.
- George Alfred Henty (1832-1902), war correspondent and novelist, was author from 1868 of eighty books for boys, usually military in theme.
- Frederick Sleigh Roberts, 1st Earl Roberts (1832-1914), distinguished soldier, field-marshal, and commander-in-chief, ranks as a successful author in virtue of his Rise of Wellington and Forty-one Years in India.
- Thomas Fowler (1832-1904), President of Corpus Christi, Oxford, wrote manuals of deductive and inductive logic, books on the principles of morals, and works on Locke, on Bacon, on Shaftesbury and Hutcheson, besides two histories of his own college.
- Henry Fawcett (1833-84), though totally blinded by an accident in 1856, became Professor of Political Economy at Cambridge in 1863, and Postmaster-General in 1880. He is best known for his Manual of Political Economy, and a book on Protection and Free Trade.
- Richard Watson Dixon (1833-1900), vicar of Warkworth and honorary canon of Carlisle, published, besides poetry, a scholarly History of the Church of England in the Reformation period.
- Garnet Joseph, 1st Viscount Wolseley (1833-1913), field-marshal and commander-in-chief (1895-1900), wrote on Marlborough and on Napoleon, and the (autobiographical) Story of a Soldier's Life (1903).
- George Du Maurier (1834-96), artist and Punch illustrator, was author of Peter Ibbetson, Trilby (1894), and The Martian (1897).
- William (Bury) Westall (1834-1903), originally a business man, then journalist and novelist, published Larry Lohengrin in 1879, The Old Factory in 1881, and many later stories.
- Robert Flint (1834-1910), for a quarter of a century Professor of Divinity at Edinburgh, published the first volume of his great History of the Philosophy of History in 1874 (revised in 1894 as Historical Philosophy in France and Switzerland), and wrote also on theism, anti-theistic theories, and socialism.
- James Bass Mullinger (1834-1917), University Lecturer on History at Cambridge, wrote the great history of his university and one of St John's College, books on the ancient African Church, The Schools of Charles the Great, and, with S. R. Gardiner, an Introduction to English History.
- Philip Stanhope Worsley (1835-66) was the author of verse translations of the Odyssey and twelve books of the Iliad.
- George Birkbeck Hill (1835-1903), at one time headmaster of a school at Tottenham, wrote Dr Johnson, his Friends and his Critics; produced the masterly (but over-annotated) Oxford edition of Boswell's Johnson; and edited Hume's and Boswell's letters.
- Paul Belloni Du Chaillu (1835-1903) discovered the gorilla, recorded his Adventures in Equatorial Africa (1861), wrote on African experiences and subjects, on Sweden, and on the Viking Age.
- Sir Archibald Geikie (1835-1924) was not merely a distinguished geologist, but an accomplished writer on his science, his Lives of J. D. Forbes, Sir Roderick Murchison, and Sir A. C. Ramsay, as well as his book on The Founders of Geology, taking a permanent place in biographical literature.
- Walter William Skeat (1835-1912), Professor of Anglo-Saxon in Cambridge, by some sixty works did more than any scholar for the knowledge of Middle English and English philology generally; his edition of Chaucer and his Etymological English Dictionary are his most famous works.
- Sir Norman Lockyer (1836-1920), Director of the Solar Physics Observatory and of the Hill Observatory, started Nature, and wrote on astronomy, solar physics, and spectrum analysis, some of his best-known books being Star-Gazing Past and Present, The Chemistry of the Sun, Earth Movements, The Meteoritic Hypothesis, The Dawn of Astronomy.
- John Wesley Hales (1836-1914), Professor of English at King's College, London, wrote Shakespeare Essays and edited Percy's Folio MS.
- Edward Arber (1836-1912), Professor of English Literature in Birmingham University, edited a long and valuable series of English Reprints.
- Oscar Browning (1837-1923), Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, produced The Netherlands in the Sixteenth Century, A History of England (4 vols.), The Flight to Varennes; books on the Guelphs and Ghibellines and the Condottieri; Lives of Goethe, Dante, Peter the Great, Charles XII., and George Eliot; books on Napoleon, Italy, and world history.
- Sir James Augustus Henry Murray (1837-1915) wrote on Scottish dialects, and from 1879 was chief editor of the Philological Society's New English Dictionary, by far the most important work that has been done in English lexicography.
- Sir Adolphus William Ward (1837-1924), Master of Peterhouse, wrote inter alia a History of Dramatic Literature; books on Chaucer and Dickens; The Electress Sophia (1903); a history of Germany, 1816-1890 (3 vols. 1916-18); and Collected Papers, Historical, Literary, and Miscellaneous (1921). He was joint-editor of the Cambridge Modern History and the Cambridge English Literature.

- James Albery (1838-89), dramatist, produced his first successful adaptation (Dr Davy) in 1866; his best-known plays are Two Roses, Forgiven, and Oriana.
- James Dykes Campbell (1838-95), merchant at Glasgow and in Mauritius, is memorable as biographer and editor of Coleridge, and for his accurate and scholarly knowledge of Wordsworth's period.
- Henry Sidgwick (1838-1900), Professor of Moral Philosophy at Cambridge, wrote the Methods of Ethics, Principles of Political Economy, Outlines of a History of Ethics, Elements of Politics, The Development of European Polity.
- Archibald Forbes (1838-1900), special correspondent of the Daily News, was particularly eminent as a war correspondent.
- Sir William Francis Butler (1838-1910), general and K.C.B., wrote much on British North America—The Great Lone Land, The Wild North Land—and Lives of Sir Charles Napier, General Gordon, and General Colley, and an Autobiography (1911).
- Andrew Martin Fairbairn (1838-1912), Congregationalist minister and Principal of Mansfield College at Oxford, was author of Studies in Religion and Philosophy (1876), The City of God, Christ in Modern Theology, The Philosophy of the Christian Religion.
- Sir Spencer Walpole (1839-1907), Secretary to the General Post-Office, wrote A History of England from 1815, Lives of Spencer Perceval and Earl Russell, and more than one volume in the 'English Citizen' series.
- William Samuel Lilly (1840-1919), barrister and secretary to the Catholic Union, in The Great Enigma, The Claims of Christianity, and numerous works defended orthodoxy from Darwinism and other modern heresies.
- Richard Whiteing (1840-1928), journalist and novelist, is best known as author of No. 5 John Street (1899).
- Sir Robert Stawell Ball (1840-1913), Professor of Astronomy at Cambridge, proved an eloquent expositor of his science in his Story of the Heavens, Starland, The Story of the Sun, and Great Astronomers.
- Edward Whymper (1840-1911), artist and mountaineer, was author of Scrambles among the Alps, Travels among the Great Andes, Chamonix and Mont Blanc, and Zermatt and the Matterhorn, classics of climbers.
- Sir Francis Thomas Marzials, K.C.B. (1840-1912), served in the War Office, and wrote poems and books on Dickens, Victor Hugo, and Thackeray.
- Sir Richard Claverhouse Jebb (1841-1905), Professor of Greek at Cambridge, and M.P. for that university, besides editions, translations, and commentaries on the classics (notably on Sophocles), published a monograph on Bentley in the 'Men of Letters' series, and a work on modern Greece.
- Sir Henry Morton Stanley (1841-1904), African traveller (baptised John Rowlands, and adopted by Henry Stanley, a New Orleans cotton-broker), 'found Livingstone' for the New York Herald, and recorded his adventures on that expedition; other works being The Congo and its Free State, Coomassie and Magdala, In Darkest Africa, and Through the Dark Continent.
- Thomas Kelly Cheyne (1841-1915), Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Scripture at Oxford and Canon of Rochester, was a very eminent Old Testament critic; wrote much on Isaiah, the Psalms, and other books of the Bible; and was editor-in-chief of the Encyclopædia Biblica (4 vols. 1899-1903).
- Harry Buxton Forman (1842-1917), assistant-secretary of the General Post-Office, edited Keats and Shelley, and wrote about them and other poets, as well as on bibliographical subjects.
- Sir Thomas Wemyss Reid (1842-1905), editor of the Speaker, wrote, besides novels and a book on contemporary politicians, Lives of Charlotte Brontë, of Forster, of Lord Houghton, and of William Black.
- Henry Duff Traill (1842-1900), D.C.L., was author of The New Lucian, The New Fiction, of Recaptured Rhymes and Saturday Songs, as well as of books on Sterne, Coleridge, Strafford, Sir John Franklin, and Lord Salisbury. He edited Social England (6 vols. 1893-97).
- Evelyn Abbott (1843-1901), tutor of Balliol, wrote a History of Greece, and (with another) the Life of Jowett.
- Martin Andrew Sharp Hume (1843-1910) of the Record Office, edited the Calendar of Spanish Papers and the Chronicle of Henry VIII., produced histories of Spain, and wrote The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth, The Year after the Armada, as well as Lives of Raleigh, Lord Burghley, and Philip II. of Spain.
- Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke (1843-1911), M.P., wrote Greater Britain, and books on European politics and the army question.
- James Ward (1843-1925), Professor of Mental Philosophy at Cambridge, was author of Naturalism and Agnosticism (1899), The Realm of Ends, or Pluralism and Theism, of Heredity and Memory, and Psychological Principles.
- Edward Carpenter (1844-1929) wrote Towards Democracy and other verse, books on Whitman, evolution, social reform, philosophy, art, My Days and Dreams (autobiography, 1916), The Story of My Books (1916).
- Sir Frederick Wedmore (1844-1921) was author of Studies in English Art, Four Masters of Etching, Etching in England, and other works on art, a Life of Balzac, a book on Méryon, stories, and Memories.
- John A. Doyle (1844-1907), Fellow of All Souls, Oxford, wrote The American Colonies and The English in America, and other works on American history, and edited Miss Ferrier's Letters.
- Alexander Anderson (1845-1909) worked as a surface-man on the railway in his native Dumfriesshire, and as 'Surfaceman' wrote Songs of the Rail, Ballads and Sonnets (1879), and other good verse in Scots and English.
- William Kingdon Clifford (1845-79), Professor of Mathematics and Mechanics at University College, London, was author of Elements of Dynamics, The Common Sense of the Exact Sciences, Seeing and Thinking, besides miscellaneous papers.
- James Ashcroft Noble (1845-96), journalist and critic, published poems and a book entitled The Sonnet in England and other Essays.
- Sir Frederick Pollock (1845-1937), Judge of Admiralty Court of Cinque Ports (from 1914), Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence at Oxford (1883-1903), wrote, besides various handbooks on law subjects, A History of English Law (with Professor Maitland), Essays in Jurisprudence and Ethics, an introduction to the history of politics, books on Spinoza, on mountaineering, on the League of Nations, The Etchingham Letters (with E. Fuller-Maitland), and reminiscences (For My Grandson, 1933).
- Sir Herbert Maxwell (1845-1937) produced novels, books on local and national history, topography, and place names, on fishing and natural phenomena, as well as Lives of Wellington and the 4th Earl of Clarendon and a history of the House of Douglas.

Ernest Hartley Coleridge (1846-1920), son of S. T. C.'s son Derwent, edited his grandfather's letters and poetical works, selections from his note-books called Anima Poeta, and the final edition of Byron's Poetical Works (7 vols. 1898-1903); he published the Life and Correspondence of Lord Chief-Justice Coleridge; and he contributed the article on S. T. Coleridge to the present work.

Archibald Henry Sayce (1846-1933), Professor of Assyriology at Oxford (1891-1919), was distinguished also as an Egyptologist, Hebraist, Old Testament scholar, and philologist, amongst his works being Comparative Philology, The Science of Language, The Hittites, The Higher Criticism, and a famous Herodotus.

William Edward Norris (1846-1925) published Heaps of Money (1877), My Friend Jim, The Rogue, and some thirty other novels.

Sir Henry Craik (1846-1924), Secretary of the Scottish Education Department (1885-1904), edited English prose selections and selections from Swift, and besides a book on the State and Education, wrote Lives of Swift (1882) and the 1st Earl of Clarendon (1911), and A Century of Scottish History (1901).

Philip Stewart Robinson (1847-1902), journalist, wrote In my Indian Garden (1878), Under the Punkah, Chasing a Fortune, Tigers at Large, The Poets' Birds, and other nature books.

David Christie Murray (1847-1907), novelist and playwright, published A Life's Atonement (1880), Joseph's Coat, Val Strange, and other novels.

Arthur S. Way (1847-1930), translator in verse of the Odyssey, the Iliad, Euripides, Æschylus, Sophocles, Apollonius Rhodius, Vergil, Theocritus, Horace, Niebelungenlied, and Chanson de Roland.

Archibald Philip Primrose, Earl of Rosebery (1847-1929), statesman and orator, Prime Minister 1894-1895, published books on Pitt, Sir Robert Peel, the later life of Napoleon, and Chatham.

John Churton Collins (1848-1908), Professor of English at Birmingham, edited various English poets and wrote on eighteenth-century authors and others.

George John Romanes (1848-94), in his later years less and less an agnostic, wrote on Organic Evolution, Mental Evolution in Animals, Darwin and after Darwin, Thoughts on Religion.

Arthur James Balfour (1848-1930), Prime Minister (1902-6), wrote on Philosophic Doubt, The Foundations of Belief, Theism and Humanism. He was made Earl of Balfour in 1922. His Chapters of Autobiography appeared in 1930.

Sir George Walter Prothero (1848-1922), editor of the Quarterly Review, and previously Professor of History at Edinburgh, wrote The Life and Times of Simon de Montfort, a memoir of Henry Bradshaw, a British History Reader, and other works.

Joseph William Comyns Carr (1849-1916), art critic and dramatist, wrote many books, essays, and papers on art, and was author of Some Eminent Victorians and the plays The United Pair, The Naturalist, The Friar, Forgiveness, King Arthur, Oliver Twist, and Tristram and Iseult.

William Francis Barry (1849-1930), Roman Catholic Canon of Birmingham, produced The New Antigone (1887) and other romantic novels, books on Newman and Renan, The Papal Monarchy, Heralds of Revolt, and The World's Debate (1917).

Lafcadio Hearn (1850-1904), son of an Irish army doctor and a Greek, wrote vivid impressions of Japan (where he was Professor of English Literature and was naturalised), besides Karma and other stories.

Frederick York Powell (1850-1904), Professor of Modern History at Oxford, wrote Early England up to the Norman Conquest and a History of England to 1509; and with Vigfusson he edited the Corpus Poeticum Boreale.

Frederic William Maitland (1850-1906), Professor of English Law at Cambridge, wrote, with Sir Frederick Pollock, A History of English Law, besides books on canon law in England, on Domesday Book, and on political theories in the Middle Ages, and a Life of Sir Leslie Stephen.

John Watson (1850-1907), minister of a Presbyterian church in Liverpool, was better known as 'Ian Maclaren,' author of Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (1894) and other Scottish 'Kailyard' novels. He also wrote theological works.

Robert Barr (1850-1912), editor of the Idler and novelist, wrote The Face and the Mask, The Strong Arm, The Unchanging East.

Peter Hume Brown (1850-1918), Professor of Ancient History at Edinburgh, and Scottish Historiographer Royal, wrote Lives of Knox, Buchanan, and Goethe, a History of Scotland (3 vols. 1898-1909) and Surveys of Scottish History (1919); he edited the Register of the Privy Council of Scotland; in 1903 he lectured on Scotland in the Time of Queen Mary; and to this work he contributed articles on James I., Knox, Buchanan, Froide, and S. R. Gardiner.

Silas Killo Hocking (1850-1935), minister of the Methodist Free Church, novelist, and Liberal politician, wrote some fifty novels, Alec Greene (1878) the first.

Augustine Birrell (1850-1933), Professor of Law in University College, London (1896-99), and from 1907 to 1916 Irish Secretary, wrote a Life of Charlotte Brontë and books on Hazlitt, Marvell, and F. Locker Lampson, besides Obiter Dicta, Res Judicatae, essays, and law-books.

Walter Herries Pollock (1850-1926), barrister and some time editor of the Saturday Review, published The Modern French Theatre (1878), Lectures on the French Poets, A Nine Men's Morrice, King Zub, a book on Jane Austen and her contemporaries, a treatise on Fencing, and (with Sir Walter Besant) several plays.

Henry Drummond (1851-97), Professor of Natural Science in the Free Church College of Glasgow, saw in his lifetime his Natural Law in the Spiritual World reach its thirtieth edition; neither The Ascent of Man nor his work on Tropical Africa had such exceptional success.

Francis Hindes Groome (1851-1902) wrote for the Encyclopædia Britannica, the Dictionary of National Biography, and the Athenæum; was sub-editor of Chambers's Encyclopædia (1887-92); and published In Gypsy Tents (1880), Two Suffolk Friends (on his father and Edward FitzGerald), Kriegspiel (a novel), and Gypsy Folk Tales (1899). He assisted in editing the first volume of this work, and contributed articles on Crabbe, Peacock, FitzGerald, and Henry Kingsley.

Sir William Robertson Nicoll (1851-1923), editor of the British Weekly, Bookman, and other periodicals, edited Charlotte Brontë. He wrote, besides theological works, Literary Anecdotes of the Nineteenth Century, books on Tennyson, Emily Brontë, and Ian Maclaren; and to this work he contributed the articles on Charlotte Brontë, Mrs Gaskell, and Thomas Hardy.

Sir Oliver Joseph Lodge (1851-1940), Principal of Birmingham University (1900-19), published books on mechanics, electricity, lightning-conductors, and wrote much on questions of psychical research and on the relations of science and religion. His memoir of his son, Raymond (1916), caused much discussion.

Robert Adamson (1852-1902), Professor of Philosophy at Manchester, Aberdeen, and Glasgow, published monographs on Kant (1879) and Fichte (1881). The Development of Modern Philosophy and The Development of Greek Philosophy appeared after his death. The former shows him turning from idealism to realism.

Walter Leaf (1852-1927), banker and Fellow of London University, was, with Messrs Lang and Myers, author of the famous translation of the Iliad into English prose; he edited the Iliad with notes, and wrote a Companion to the Iliad and a book on Troy.

Herbert Henry Asquith, 1st Earl of Oxford and Asquith (1852-1928), Liberal statesman, Prime Minister (1908-16), wrote Fifty Years of Politics (1926), and Memories and Reflections (1928).

Robert Bontine Cunningham Graham (1852-1936) showed his power of vivid observation and caustic criticism in Mogreb el Acksa, the record of a journey in Morocco, and in many articles and volumes on South American, Spanish, and Scottish subjects. Thirty Tales and Sketches appeared in 1929.

Lord Ernle (Rowland Edmund Prothero; 1852-1937), editor of the Quarterly from 1894 to 1899, President of the Board of Agriculture (1916-19), edited the Life and Correspondence of Dean Stanley, the Letters of Gibbon, and the Letters and Journals of Lord Byron (6 vols. 1898-1901). He was created a baron in 1919.

Richard Claude Critchett (1853-1928), first actor and then dramatic author, as 'R. C. Carton' wrote Liberty Hall (1892), The Home Secretary, Wheels within Wheels, Lady Huntworth's Experiment, Mr Preedy and the Countess, and The Bear Leaders.

Charles Harold Herford (1853-1931), Professor of English Literature at Manchester, wrote on The Age of Wordsworth and the Social History of the English Drama, did much Shakespearean and other editing, published books on Shakespeare, Browning, Goethe, and made verse translations from Ibsen.

Sir (Thomas Henry) Hall Caine (1853-1931) published Recollections of Rosselli (1882), a Life of Coleridge, and many novels—among the most popular being A Son of Hagar (1886), The Deemster (dramatised as Ben-my-Chree), The Bondman, The Manxman, The Christian, The Eternal City, The Woman Thou Gavest Me, and The Master of Man (1921).

Herbert Woodfield Paul (1853-1935) wrote Men and Letters, a History of Modern England, a Life of Gladstone, and books on Matthew Arnold, Acton, Froude, and Queen Anne.

Henry Spenser Wilkinson (1853-1937), Professor of Military History at Oxford (1909-23), published The Brain of an Army, The Brain of the Navy, The Great Alternative, War and Policy, and other military works, besides several Lives of great soldiers.

John Edward Courtenay Bodley (1853-1925) published in 1898 a very important work on France and its institutions, in 1903 a work on the coronation of Edward VII., in 1912 Cardinal Manning and other Essays.

Charles Gore (1853-1932), Bishop of Oxford (1911-19), was in 1890 editor of, and principal contributor to, Lux Mundi, which sought to harmonise the claims of criticism and High Church orthodoxy; he also wrote The Church and the Ministry, Roman Catholic Claims, The Creed of the Christian, on the New Theology, and on divorce.

Joseph Hocking (1855-1937), like his brother Silas, a minister of religion and a novelist, after Jabez Easterbrook (1891) produced some forty novels.

John Holland Rose (b. 1855) wrote A Century of European History, The Rise of Democracy, a critical Life of Napoleon I., and other works on Napoleon and on Pitt, and The Development of the European Nations, 1870-1914.

Thomas Frederick Tout (1855-1929), Professor of History at Manchester University, wrote on Edward I., Edward II., The Empire and the Papacy, on 'Germany and the Empire' in the Cambridge Modern History, and Chapters in the Administrative History of Mediæval England (1920-33).

Sir Richard Lodge (1855-1936), Professor of History at Edinburgh, wrote on modern Europe, on Richelieu, on the close of the Middle Ages, and a Political History of England, 1680-1702; to this work he contributed the articles on Macaulay, Freeman, J. R. Green, and Bishop Stubbs.

William Paton Ker (1855-1923), Professor of English Literature in University College, London, and of Poetry at Oxford, author of Epic and Romance, The Dark Ages, and other scholarly books, contributed the articles on Wordsworth and Scott to the present work.

Frank Frankfort Moore (1855-1931) published books of verse, a number of plays, and I forbid the Banns, The Jessamy Bride, A Damsel or Two, and about seventy novels and miscellaneous works.

Arthur Bingham Walkley (1855-1926), dramatic critic, published Playhouse Impressions, Frames of Mind, and Drama and Life.

Stanley John Weyman (1855-1928) is known as author of A Gentleman of France (1893), Under the Red Robe, and a long list of stirring romances.

Wilfrid Philip Ward (1856-1916), a conspicuous Roman Catholic author, wrote two works on his father, Wm. George Ward, also books on the Oxford Movement and the Catholic revival, and Lives of Cardinals Wiseman and Newman.

Andrew Seth Pringle-Pattison (1856-1931; born Seth), Professor of Philosophy at Edinburgh, maintained an idealist position in Scottish Philosophy, Hegelianism and Personality, Man's Place in the Cosmos, The Philosophic Radicals, The Idea of God, The Idea of Immortality, works ripe in thought and distinguished in style.

John Mackinnon Robertson (1856-1933), editor of the National Reformer and member of Parliament, wrote Essays towards a Critical Method, Buckle and his Critics, A History of Free Thought, Christianity and Mythology, An Introduction to English Politics, books on Shakespeare and other literary studies.

Henry Thomas Mackenzie Bell (1856-1930) published several volumes of poems, and books on Charles Whitehead, Christina Rossetti, and 19th century novelists.

George Brown Sargis (b. 1856), journalist and novelist, has written His Lordship and Others (1894) and about a hundred other stories.

- Rudolph Chambers Lehmann (1856-1929), a member of the staff of Punch, published a score of works in prose and verse, including Harry Fludyer at Cambridge (1890), Mr Punch's Prize Novels, Anni Fugaces, Adventures of Mr Picklock Holes, Memories of Half a Century (1908), and contributed the articles on Dickens and Kipling to the present work.
- Thomas Anstey Guthrie (1856-1934), as 'F. Anstey' wrote Vice Versa, The Giant's Robe, The Black Poodle, The Tinted Venus, The Brass Bottle, and over a score of other works, mostly humorous and mainly published first in the columns of Punch.
- William Archer (1856-1924), dramatic critic, edited and translated Ibsen, and wrote The Green Goddess (a play: 1921), Masks or Faces, and other books.
- John Alexander Fuller-Maitland (1856-1936), musical critic of the Times (1889-1911), edited the new edition (1904-10) of Grove's Dictionary; wrote much on music and musicians; helped to translate Spitta's Bach; and produced books of his own on The Masters of German Music, Schumann, Brahms, and The Musician's Pilgrimage.
- William Martin, 1st Baron Conway (1856-1937), Slade Professor of Fine Art at Cambridge (1901-4), wrote Wood Cutters of the Netherlands (1884), Early Flemish Artists, on Dürer, on Reynolds and Gainsborough, before in 1890 he began to enrich the literature of mountaineering; his best-known contributions being on the Karakoram Himalayas, the Alps, Spitsbergen, the Bolivian Andes, and Aconcagua. He was ennobled in 1931.
- Alfred Denis Godley (1856-1925), Public Orator, Oxford (from 1910), besides more serious classical work in editing and translating, showed a brilliant gift of sprightly verse in Verses to Order, Lyra Frivola, and the like.
- Frank Thomas Bullen (1857-1915), till 1883 a sailor, after 1898 made notable additions to the literature of the sea—The Cruise of the Cachalot (1898), The Log of a Sea Waif, Deep Sea Plunderings, A Whaleman's Wife, Told in the Dog Watches (1910).
- Arthur Henry Bullen (1857-1920) prepared a series of scholarly reprints (15th Century Carols, 1884; Elizabethan Lyrics, 1886-91); edited Marlowe, Middleton, and other Elizabethan dramatists, and Thomas Campion; founded the Shakespeare Head Press; and contributed the essay on Restoration Literature to the first volume of this work.
- Sir Charles Harding Firth (1857-1936), Professor of Modern History at Oxford, edited and wrote many works dealing with the Civil War.
- Karl Pearson (1857-1936), Galton Professor of Eugenics, London University, formerly Professor of Applied Mathematics and Mechanics in University College, wrote a masterly Life of Francis Galton (1915), besides mathematical works, The Ethic of Free Thought, The Grammar of Science, The Chances of Death, and edited Biometrika.
- Morley Roberts (b. 1857) is author of over seventy works, mainly novels, including The Western Avenger (1887), A Son of Empire, Immortal Youth, The Wingless Psyche, Rachel Marr, Time and Thomas Waring (1914).
- Clement King Shorter (1857-1926) edited the Sketch, the Sphere, and the Tailor, married Dora Sigerson the poetess, and published books on the Brontës, Victorian Literature, and Borrow.
- Benjamin Kidd (1858-1916) wrote Social Evolution (1894), which by 1900 was translated into eight languages; The Control of the Tropics; and The Principles of Western Civilisation.
- Egerton Castle (1858-1920), author of Saviolo (with Mr W. H. Pollock), Desperate Remedies, and other plays; as also of romances, in collaboration with his wife, Agnes Sweetman (died 1922); and The Jerningham Letters.
- Sir Harry Hamilton Johnston (1858-1927), naturalist, traveller, and Colonial administrator, wrote much on Africa—especially Central Africa—Bantu languages, and the negro question, and (from 1919) also stories—The Gay Dombey, Mrs Warren's Daughter, and The Veneerings (a sequel to Our Mutual Friend).
- Hastings Rashdall (1858-1924), Dean of Carlisle (from 1917), wrote, besides theological works, the History of the Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages (1895) and (with another) the history of New College, Oxford.
- Claude Joseph Goldsmid-Montefiore (1858-1938) delivered 'Hibbert Lectures' (1892) on the ancient religion of the Hebrews, edited The Bible for Home Reading (2 vols. 1896-97), and wrote on Judaism.
- James Rennell Rodd (b. 1858), diplomat and envoy, published, besides a book on the folklore of Modern Greece, Poems in Many Lands, The Unknown Madonna, The Violet Crown, Ballads of the Fleet. He was created Baron Rennell of Rodd in 1933.
- Henry Charles Beeching (1859-1919), Dean of Norwich from 1911, was one of the authors of Love in Idleness and Love in a Looking-Glass; wrote In a Garden and other Poems; published, besides sermons, Lectures on Poetry, Religio Laici, essays, and a Life of Atterbury; and edited Milton and other poets.
- George Nathaniel, 1st Marquess Curzon (1859-1925), Viceroy of India (1898-1905) and Foreign Secretary (1919-24), summed up his experiences of Eastern travel in Russia in Central Asia, Persia and the Persian Question, and Problems of the Far East.
- Charles Whibley (1859-1930), critic and reviewer, published The Book of Scoundrels, Studies in Frankness, The Pageantry of Life, Literary Portraits, and monographs on Thackeray, Pitt, and Swift; he contributed the article on Beaconsfield to this work.
- Alfred William Pollard (b. 1859), Keeper of Printed Books in the British Museum, among other works on bibliography published Books about Books, Early Illustrated Books, and Italian Book Illustrations; wrote an excellent Chaucer Primer and Shakespeare's Folios and Quartos; edited the 'Globe' Chaucer and English Miracle-Plays; to this work he contributed the section on Middle English Literature.
- Samuel Alexander, O.M. (1859-1938), wrote Space, Time and Deity (1920), also works on aesthetics.
- Jerome Klapka Jerome (1859-1924), editor (1892-97) of the Idler and of To-day, published in 1889 Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow and Three Men in a Boat. Other humorous volumes followed. His morality play, The Passing of the Third Floor Back (1907), was most successful.
- Kenneth Grahame (1859-1922) wrote studies of childhood for adults in The Golden Age (1895) and Dream Days (1904), and in The Wind in the Willows (1908) a book about beasts for children.
- John William Mackail, O.M. (b. 1859), one of the authors of Love in Idleness, published Select Epigrams from the Greek Anthology, a history of Latin literature, books on William Morris, Shakespeare, Pope; translated the Odyssey and the Æneid (in verse); and contributed the articles on Ruskin and R. L. Stevenson to this work.

Sir John Fortescue (1859-1931) wrote a monumental History of the British Army, 1809-1902.

Samuel Rutherford Crockett (1860-1914), by The Stickit Minister (1893) and The Raiders (1894), achieved instant success. These were followed by The Men of the Moss Hags (1895), Cleg Kelly (1896), and other stories of the 'Kailyard' school, besides historical romances.

Charles Haddon Chambers (1860-1921), novelist and playwright, author of Captain Swift (1888) and The Idler, wrote The Tyranny of Tears (1899), The Awakening, and Passers-by (1911) among other plays.

Douglas Hyde (b. 1860), President of the Gaelic League (1893-1915) and Irish Texts Society, has written Love Songs of Connacht (1894), The Story of Early Irish Literature (1897), A Literary History of Ireland (1899), and poems and plays in Irish, besides editing many Irish texts and translating mediæval tales from the Irish. In 1938 he became the first President of Éire.

Justin Huntly McCarthy (1860-1936), son of Mr Justin McCarthy (page 660), is known as a writer in various kinds—histories, novels, dramas, and poems—The Candidate, My Friend the Prince, If I were King, The O'Flynn being amongst his plays.

Sir Charles William Chadwick Oman (b. 1860), Chichele Professor of Modern History at Oxford, has published Warwick the King-maker, histories of Greece, the Byzantine Empire, Europe from the fifth to the tenth century, and England; A History of the Art of War in the Middle Ages; A History of the Peninsular War (5 vols. 1902-14); and A History of England before the Norman Conquest (1910). He was created K.B.E. in 1920.

Lawrence Pearsall Jacks (b. 1860), son-in-law and biographer of Stopford Brooke, editor of the Hibbert Journal, Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, writes philosophical and psychological studies, stories, and sketches.

William Ralph Inge (b. 1860), Dean of St Paul's (1911-1934), has expounded Plotinus and written Outspoken Essays (1919) and other works on ethical subjects.

Ernest Thompson Seton (born in England in 1860), naturalist, artist, and book illustrator, as 'Seton-Thompson' struck a new literary vein in Wild Animals I have Known, animal biographies, scouting and woodcraft manuals in Canada and the United States.

Alfred North Whitehead (b. 1861) has essayed a comprehensive synthesis of contemporary experience. His Process and Reality (1929) is for metaphysicians, but even laymen may catch glimpses of profound wisdom in his Adventures of Ideas (1933).

Sir Walter Raleigh (1861-1922), Professor of English Literature at Oxford, wrote on R. L. Stevenson, Milton, Wordsworth, Shakespeare, and Johnson, a history of the English Novel, and a book on Style; and to this work contributed the articles on the two Rossettis.

Sir Owen Seaman (1861-1936), editor of Punch (1906-32), by his Horace at Cambridge (1894), Tillers of the Sand, The Battle of the Bays, In Cap and Bells, Borrowed Plumes (1902), and other collections approved himself our cleverest parodist since Calverley. He was created a baronet in 1933.

John Bagnell Bury (1861-1927), Professor of History in Cambridge University, wrote on the history of the later Roman Empire, and of Greece to Alexander's death; and edited Pindar, Gibbon's Decline and Fall (1896-1900), with valuable notes, and Freeman's Historical Geography (1903).

Maurice (Henry) Hewlett (1861-1923) published The Forest Lovers (1898) and other prose romances, mostly historical, and scholarly poems, including dramatic works (e.g. The Agonists) and romances (e.g. Peridore and Paravaul).

Hugh Stowell Scott (1862-1903), writing as 'Henry Seton Merriman,' became popular through With Edged Tools (1894), The Sowers, In Kedar's Tents, The Velvet Glove, The Vultures, Barlasch of the Guard (1903), and other powerful historical romances.

William Henry Hudson (1862-1918), lecturer on English literature, published an introduction to the philosophy of Herbert Spencer, poems, studies of various poets, books on Scott, Rousseau, and Napoleon, an Outline History of English Literature, and A Short History of French Literature.

Edward Grey, Viscount Grey of Fallodon (1862-1933), was Foreign Secretary 1905-16. His Twenty-Five Years (1930) is an important document on the origin of the Great War. His rare gifts as a naturalist shine in Fly-Fishing (1899) and The Charm of Birds (1927).

Eden Phillpotts (born, 1862, in India) made his name by Children of the Mist (1898) and other realistic novels, the favourite scene of his books being Dartmoor. Stories of boyhood (The Human Boy and its sequels), humorous and lightly satirical tales (Widcombe Fair; Evander), a thrilling detective story, comedies (e.g. The Farmer's Wife, 1917), and poems show Mr Phillpotts's gifts in other ways.

Norman Gale (b. 1862) published in 1892-93 two volumes of dainty rural lyrics called A Country Muse. These were followed by other volumes of verse (Collected Poems, 1914) and by stories.

Sir Henry (John) Newbolt (1862-1938), poet, secured popularity by the patriotic ring and fervour of his verse in Admirals All (1897), The Island Race, and The Sailing of the Long Ships (1902). He also wrote historic romances and A New Study of English Poetry (1917).

Arthur Christopher Benson (1862-1925), Master of Magdalene College, Cambridge (from 1915), published The Professor (1900) and other volumes of verse, many collections of graceful essays, stories, and books on Tennyson and Rossetti, Fitzgerald, Pater, his father the Archbishop of Canterbury, and his brother Hugh (Monsignor Benson).

David Lloyd George (b. 1863), Liberal statesman and War-time Premier of Britain (1916-22), issued his War Memoirs in 1933-36.

Robert Marshall (1863-1910), army captain and dramatist, was author of His Excellency the Governor, The Noble Lord, There's Many a Slip, and other plays.

Henry Brereton Marriott Watson (1863-1921), author of Galloping Dick (1896), The House Divided, The Skirts of Happy Chance, and other stories, assisted Sir J. M. Barrie in the play Richard Savage.

Sir Max Pemberton (b. 1863) wrote The Iron Pirate (1893), The Sea Wolves, Pro Patria, My Sword for Lafayette, and many other tales of adventure, besides plays. He was knighted in 1928.

Arthur Morrison (b. 1863), novelist, became known in 1894 by his Tales of Mean Streets, followed by the 'Martin Hewitt' series of stories, by The Child of the Jago, and The Hole in the Wall. He also wrote plays and The Painters of Japan.

- William Wymark Jacobs (b. 1863) published Many Cargoes in 1896, followed by The Skipper's Wooing, The Lady of the Barge, Odd Craft, and other sets of short stories, mainly about longshoremen, bargees, et id genus omne—all humorous or gruesome.
- Sir Arthur Thomas Quiller-Couch (b. 1863), Professor of English Literature at Cambridge (from 1912), is known to many readers as 'Q.' After the publication of Dead Man's Rock (1887), Troy Town, and The Splendid Spur, he produced many novels, short stories, essays, and volumes of verse.
- William John Locke (1863-1930), novelist and architect, in The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne (1905), The Beloved Vagabond, and later stories and plays, combined whimsical humour and a captivating style with pleasing romance and a penchant for France and the French.
- Alfred Sutro (1863-1933) wrote The Walls of Jericho (1904), John Glayde's Honour (1907), and other successful plays, and translated Maeterlinck.
- Frederick Scott Oliver (1864-1934) wrote of Walpole's times in The Endless Adventure (1930-35).
- Basil Hood (1864-1917), army captain and dramatic author, wrote The Emerald Isle, Sweet and Twenty, My Pretty Maid, Merrie England, and musical comedy libretti.
- David Alec Wilson (1864-1933) wrote a definitive Life of Carlyle in 6 vols.
- Robert (Smythe) Hichens (b. 1864), journalist and novelist, first attracted notice by a satirical story, Green Carnation, in 1894; among later successes The Garden of Allah (1905) was dramatised in 1920.
- Sir Israel Gollancz (1864-1930), Professor of English at King's College, London, edited Old English texts, the 'Temple Shakespeare,' Lamb's Specimens, and the Tercentenary Book of Homage to Shakespeare.
- William Pett Ridge (1864-1930), author of Mord Em'ly (1898), published many volumes of humorous stories of Cockney life.
- Stephen (Lucius) Gwynn (b. 1864) became known as Nationalist M.P. and writer on Irish politics and topography, as a literary biographer, also as novelist, poet, essayist, and editor.
- Charles Murray (1864-1941), under the South African sun, sang sweetly in Scottish dialect—in Hamewith (1900) and other collections of verse.
- Leonard Merrick is the adopted name of Leonard Millar (b. 1864), author and actor. A collected edition of his novels and short stories—The Actor-Manager, The Quaint Companions, The Man who Understood Women, and Cynthia, for example—was issued in 1918 with prefatory tributes from leading novelists and dramatists of the day.
- Stephen Phillips (1864-1915) attracted notice by his 'Christ in Hades,' afterwards included with 'Marpessa' in Poems (1897). His experience as an actor helped the stage success of his poetical dramas Paolo and Francesca (1899), Herod, The Sin of David, and Nero (1906). His later plays showed impaired powers. Phillips was an unequal poet, but he had passion and eloquence.
- Israel Zangwill (1864-1926), poet and essayist, is best known as author of Children of the Ghetto (1892) and similar stories, showing keen insight into Jewish life; of non-Jewish novels like The Master (1895); and of The Melting-Pot (1908), and other dramas.
- George Gregory Smith (1865-1932), Professor of English Literature at Belfast University, published books on 15th century European literature and on Scottish Literature, a Manual of Middle Scots, and Ben Jonson in the 'Men of Letters' series; edited Henryson; and contributed to this work the articles on Addison, Jeffrey, and De Quincey.
- Alfred Edward Woodley Mason (b. 1865) wrote A Romance of Wastdale (1895), The Courtship of Morrice Buckler, Parson Kelly (with Andrew Lang), The Four Feathers, and other popular tales, besides plays, such as The Witness for the Defence.
- Arthur Symonds (b. 1865), poet and critic, has published Days and Nights (1889), London Nights, Images of Good and Evil, and other volumes of verse; books on Browning, the Symbolist Movement (to which he belonged), Baudelaire (whom he followed), Wm. Blake, the Romantic Movement in English Poetry; and other works which rank him as one of the leaders and exponents of contemporary literature.
- Herbert Albert Laurens Fisher (1865-1940), Vice-Chancellor of Sheffield University (1912-16) and then President of the Board of Education and Warden of New College, Oxford, became through The Mediaeval Empire (1898) a recognised authority on the history of Germany. Later works include monographs on Napoleon and F. W. Maitland, A Political History of England, and a masterly History of Europe (3 vols. 1935).
- Herbert Trench (1865-1923; born in Co. Cork) collected his earliest poems in Deirdre Wedded (1901). New Poems (1907) contained 'Apollo and the Seaman,' a striking allegory, and other fine verse. Later works include Poems and Fables in Prose (1917), and Napoleon (1919), a play.
- Ernest William Hornung (1866-1921), novelist and journalist, wrote A Bride from the Bush (1890), The Rogue's March, Dead Men tell no Tales, Peccavi, The Black Mask, Witching Hill, and other tales. In Raffles he created a popular character, the gentleman crook.
- Sir Herbert John Clifford Grierson (b. 1866), Professor of English at Aberdeen and Edinburgh, has edited Donne's Poems and Scott's Letters, and written authoritatively on 17th century literature.
- Thomas Seccombe (1866-1923), Professor of English at Kingston (Ontario), wrote Twelve Bad Men (1894), The Age of Johnson, The Age of Shakespeare (with another), the Bookman History of English Literature, and a book on Meredith.
- Roger Elliot Fry (1866-1934), artist and art critic, Slade Professor in 1933-34, wrote standard works on Cézanne (1927) and Matisse (1930) and Characteristics of French Art (1932).
- Richard Le Gallienne (b. 1866) has published Volumes in Folio (1888), books on Meredith and Kipling, besides other essays, some verse, and fiction.
- William Flavell Monypenny (1866-1912) planned and wrote half of a Life of Disraeli, which was completed by G. E. Buckle.
- Lionel Pigot Johnson (1867-1902) wrote verse from boyhood, did much reviewing and criticism, turned R.C. in 1891, was a Celtic enthusiast, and published Ireland and other Poems (1897) and other scholarly verse, and The Art of Thomas Hardy (1894). Post Liminium (1911) contains essays.
- Barry Pain (1867-1928), journalist and author, produced Playthings and Parodies (1892) and many collections of humorous stories.
- Edward Frederick Benson (1867-1939), brother of A. C. Benson, published Dodo in 1893, The Babe, B.A., and forty or fifty other novels, stories, and plays.

- Ernest Dowson (1867-1900) is best remembered for the wistful lyric beauty of such poems as 'Cynara.'
- Laurence Housman (b. 1867), brother of A. E. Housman, himself an artist, wrote on Blake in 1893, and published Green Arras and other mystic verse; plays, among which Victoria Regina, on the life of Queen Victoria, roused considerable interest; essays; and stories—his most read work the fictitious An Englishwoman's Love-Letters (1900).
- Charles Edward Montague (1867-1928), journalist, novelist, and essayist, recorded his war experience in Disenchantment (1922). His journalistic experience informs A Hind Let Loose, his passion for mountaineering The Morning's War. The Right Place (essays) shows his fine austerity and scholarly style.
- James Douglas, born in Belfast in 1867, critic and journalist, published verse, a novel, and an appreciation of Watts-Dunton (1904). To this work he contributed the articles on William Blake, P. J. Bailey, Watts-Dunton, Swinburne, and others.
- Sir (Charles) Raymond Beazley (b. 1868), a Birmingham professor, published books on James of Aragon, Henry the Navigator, and the Cabots. The Dawn of Modern Geography (3 vols. 1897-1906), a history of Russia, and Europe, 1812-1918.
- Edward Verrall Lucas (1868-1938), editor and biographer of Charles Lamb, published The Open Road in 1899, charming essays and travel sketches, and wrote regularly for Punch.
- Norman Douglas (b. 1868) secured a hearing by eccentric novels—South Wind (1917), They Went (1920)—and unconventional travel books, such as Old Calabria and Alone (1921).
- Ronald Campbell Macfie (1868-1931) knew science as few poets do and wrought it into his fine odes.
- George Douglas Brown (1869-1902), novelist, became famous (as 'George Douglas') in 1901 for his harshly realistic House with the Green Shutters.
- Henry V. Esmond (stage-name of H. V. Jack; 1869-1922), actor, wrote Rest, One Summer's Day, The Wilderness, Eliza Comes to Stay, and other comedies.
- Bernard Capes (died 1918), novelist, produced in 1893 The Lake of Wine, followed by Our Lady of Darkness, Joan Brotherhood, Love like a Gipsy, The Pot of Basil, and other stories.
- Albert Frederick Pollard (b. 1869), contributor to the Dictionary of National Biography, wrote The Jesuits in Poland, England under Protector Somerset, books on Cranmer, Henry VII, and Henry VIII, and A Short History of the Great War (1920).
- Aigernon Blackwood (b. 1869), after many ups and downs in this world, turned, in 1906, to the other world, and made his name by tales of the occult.
- Terrot Reaveley Glover (b. 1869), Public Orator and Classics Lecturer in Cambridge University, has written on Virgil and Horace, on religion, and on history—Democracy in the Ancient World (1927).
- Charles Marriott (b. 1869) was an asylum dispenser and photographer until the success of his first novel, The Column (1901). The study and criticism of art claimed his later attentions.
- George Edward Moore (b. 1870) was the father of Cambridge Realism with Principia Ethica (1903) and Philosophical Studies (1923).
- Hilaire Belloc, born (1870) near Paris, and naturalised in 1903, is well known as journalist, poet (serious and humorous), essayist, topographer, novelist, satirist, politician, military historian, and controversialist on the Roman Catholic side.
- William Henry Davies (1870-1940) described his career as 'hobo' and pedlar in The Autobiography of a Super-Tramp (1908), and wrote verse of the wayside and the doss-house (Collected Poems, 1916, 1934).
- Rt. Hon. Jan Christiaan Smuts (b. 1870), South African soldier and statesman, is known to letters for his philosophical treatise Holism and Evolution (1931).
- William Romaine Paterson (b. 1871) has, under the pseudonym of 'Benjamin Swift,' written since 1896 a series of novels, including The Tormentor, The Destroyer, Nude Souls, and an essay, The Eternal Conflict.
- Ralph Hodgson (b. 1871) has written little, but such poems as The Bull and The Song of Honour will live so long as men love living things and take joy in them.
- Max Beerbohm (b. 1872), cartoonist, knighted in 1939, has exercised his satire also in a novel—Zuleika Dobson (1911), in short stories, essays, and parodies.
- Bertrand (Arthur William) Russell, 3rd Earl (b. 1872), is a brilliant popular exponent of modern physics, and has written trenchantly on religion, education, and marriage.
- Ford Madox Ford or Hueffer (b. 1873), founder of the English Review, has written poems, stories, a Life of Madox Brown, monographs on Rossetti and Henry James, The Critical Attitude (essays, 1911), a novel series beginning with Some do not (1924), and, with Joseph Conrad, The Inheritors, Romance, The Nature of a Crime (1924).
- John Davys Beresford (b. 1873) was architect and journalist before making his mark with The Early History of Jacob Stahl (1911), part of a trilogy, and other novels of realism and revolt.
- Oliver Onions (b. 1873) was an art-designer before writing his realistic novel-trilogy In Accordance with the Evidence (1912), The Story of Louie, and The Debit Account (1913).
- John Buchan, 1st Lord Tweedsmuir (1875-1940), from 1935 Governor-General of Canada, novelist, essayist, war correspondent, poet, wrote John Burnet of Barns (1898), Prester John, and Greenmantle (1916) among other tales, literary essays, Lives of Montrose, Scott, Cromwell, and Augustus, and Nelson's History of the War.
- Hubert Henry Davies (1876-1917), playwright, wrote Cousin Kate (1903), The Mollusc (1907), and other satirical comedies (Collected Plays, 1921).
- John Hay Belth ('Ian Hay'; born 1876) wrote Happy Go Lucky (dramatised as Tilly of Bloomsbury) and such-like amusing novels and comedies, and The First Hundred Thousand (1915) and other notable war sketches.
- Sir James (Hopwood) Jeans (b. 1877) popularised modern astronomy in The Mysterious Universe (1930).
- Harley Granville-Barker (b. 1877), dramatist and actor-manager, besides books on a National Theatre and the Exemplary Theatre, wrote Prunella (with Laurence Housman: pub. 1907), The Marrying of Ann Leete, The Voysey Inheritance, Waste (pub. 1909) and The Madras House (pub. 1911), powerful plays in the Ibsen manner.
- Sir Philip (Hamilton) Gibbs (b. 1877), editor of The Review of Reviews, took up journalism in 1902, and distinguished himself as a war correspondent and a novelist, his The Street of Adventure (1909) being a story of Fleet Street.
- Edward Thomas (1878-1917), poet, critic, biographer, topographer, essayist, and nature lover, was killed in the Great War.

John Jeffery Farnol (b. 1878) studied engineering and painting, but found his true métier in novel-writing, The Broad Highway (1910) establishing his fame.

Lord Dunsany (Edward Plunkett, 18th Baron Dunsany; b. 1878) Irish playwright, story-writer, and poet, creates a world of his own in Five Plays (1914; including The Gods of the Mountain) and Plays of Gods and Men (1917; including A Night at an Inn) and in Tales of Wonder (1916).

Edward Morgan Forster (b. 1879) has written the novels Howard's End (1910) and A Passage to India (1924), and delicate criticism, Aspects of the Novel (1927).

Arthur Stuart Menteth Hutchinson (born in India, 1879) gave up medicine for fiction, and published Once Aboard the Lugger (1908), The Happy Warrior, If Winter Comes (1921), and other successful books.

Alfred Noyes (b. 1880), a poet of wide appeal, published The Loom of Years in 1902, The Flower of Old Japan (a dainty verse allegory, 1903), Drake (blank-verse epic in 12 books; 1908), The Torch Bearers (1922-1930), and other verse, largely heroic (Collected Poems, 4 vols. 1910-27), besides plays, short stories, essays, and William Morris in the 'Men of Letters' series.

Pelham Grenville Wodehouse (b. 1881) has added to the gaiety of nations by his inventions of Psmith, the inimitable Jeeves, Bertie Wooster, and Lord Emsworth. He is not only a humorist but a wit with an admirable gift of phrase.

(William) Stanley Houghton (1881-1913), dramatist of the Manchester School, is best known by The Younger Generation (1910) and especially Hindle Wakes (1912).

John Drinkwater (1882-1937) published reflective poems from 1903, studies of William Morris and Swinburne, and plays in verse and prose, Abraham Lincoln (1918), a sort of chronicle play, proving a great success on the stage. Mary Stuart was given in America in 1921.

Walter Lionel George, born (1882) and trained in France, wrote, besides criticism (A Novelist on Novels; Anatole France), novels and essays on sex problems, feminism, and journalistic topics.

Sir Arthur Eddington (b. 1882) has popularised modern physics in New Pathways in Science (1935).

James Stephens (b. 1882) plied a lawyer's typewriter and his own pen in Dublin, and made his name by The Crock of Gold (1912), a prose fantasy, and verse—Insurrections (1909), The Hill of Vision, Songs from the Clay, and other collections.

Alan Alexander Milne (b. 1882), assistant editor of Punch (1906-14), entered journalism in 1903, and showed a delightful vein of humour in essays, stories, plays—such as Mr Pim Passes By (1919)—and in verse for children.

James Joyce (1882-1941), born in Dublin, was a revolutionary in psychology and style. Ulysses (1922) explored without mitigation twenty-hours in the waking lives of two Dubliners. Finnegan's Wake deals similarly with one night's sleep of another Dubliner.

St John (Greer) Irvine (b. 1883), Irish playwright, novelist, and critic, is known by Mixed Marriage (1910), Jane Clegg, John Ferguson, and other realistic plays.

Ralph Hale Mottram (b. 1883) made his name by his War trilogy The Spanish Farm (1924) and has since written novels such as Our Mr Dormer, located in his native Norwich.

(Edward Montagu) Compton Mackenzie (b. 1883), son of Edward Compton, the actor, made his name by psychological novels—Simister Street (1913-14) and Sylvia Scarlett (clever, luxuriant studies of adolescence), and sparklingly satirical stories, such as Carnival and Poor Relations.

Thomas Ernest Hulme (1883-1917) has left only his fragmentary Speculations (2nd ed. 1936) to suggest the powerful influence which his fundamentalism had on his contemporaries.

James Elroy Flecker (1884-1914), poet, lauded and followed the French Parnassians in his Golden Journey to Samarcand (1913). His poems, chaste in their workmanship, were collected in 1916; his prose works in 1920.

Sean O'Casey (b. 1884), Irish dramatist, author of such plays as Juno and the Paycock (1924) and The Silver Tassie (1928), and of Essays on the Theatre (1937).

Gilbert Cannan (b. 1884) translated Romain Rolland's Jean Christophe, wrote on Samuel Butler ('Erewhon'), and, under French and Russian influence, boldly realistic novels (Mendel among others) and plays.

Sir John Collings Squire (b. 1884) is noteworthy as poet, parodist, journalist, critic ('Solomon Eagle' of the New Statesman), and editor of The London Mercury.

Frank (Arthur) Swinnerton (b. 1884) wrote novels in his teens, published The Merry Heart in 1909, and wrote on Gissing and Robert Louis Stevenson. His story, Nocturne (1917), was hailed as a masterpiece by veterans like H. G. Wells and Arnold Bennett.

Sir Hugh (Seymour) Walpole (1884-1941), born in New Zealand, son of a Bishop of Edinburgh, wrote Fortitude (1913), The Secret City (1919), the four novels tracing the history of the Herries family, several studies of boyhood such as Jeremy at Crale, and other striking novels in various genres, and a study of Conrad.

Stephen Graham (b. 1884) has since 1910 graphically recounted his travels, especially in Russia or with Russian pilgrims and emigrants.

Francis Brett Young (b. 1884), novelist, has shown vivid descriptive powers in his novels, which include Cola Harbour (1924), Portrait of Clare (1927).

Siegfried Loraine Sassoon (b. 1886), poet, wrote remarkable War Poems (1919), but is now best known by his sensitive Memoirs of a Fox-Hunting Man (1928), Memoirs of an Infantry Officer (1930), and Sherston's Progress (1936).

Rupert (Chawner) Brooke (1887-1915), by his verses, pulsing with youth, and by his untimely death at Scyros while on active service, struck a responsive chord in English hearts. His Poems appeared in 1911; 1914 and other Poems in 1915; his study of John Webster and Letters from America in 1916; and Collected Poems (with Memoir) in 1918.

Julian Sorell Huxley (b. 1887) has written Essays of a Biologist (1923) and joined in the debate between science and faith in What Dare I Think? (1931).

Stephen M'Kenna (b. 1888), in Sonia (1917) and other much-read novels, brightly satirised contemporary society.

James Bridie is the pen-name of Dr. O. H. Mavor of Glasgow (b. 1888), known for such popular comedies as The Anatomist, A Sleeping Clergyman, and Storm in a Teacup.

Richard Middleton (1889-1911) wrote voluptuous verse (collected in two series of Poems and Songs, 1912-13), besides essays and short stories.

John Middleton Murry (b. 1889) has written on Keats and Shakespeare, the problem of style, his first wife, Katherine Mansfield (see p. 852), D. H. Lawrence, and the life of Jesus.

- Bruce Frederick Cummings ('W. N. P. Barbellion'; 1889-1919), scientist, wrote the much-discussed Journal of a Disappointed Man (1919), Enjoying Life (essays), and A Last Diary (1920).
- Walter John Redfern Turner (b. 1889 in Melbourne) is a Georgian poet turned metaphysical, a musical critic, and the author of prose extravaganzas.
- George Douglas Howard Cole (b. 1889), Reader in Economics at Oxford from 1925, has written widely and authoritatively on economic problems and policy, on the development of the labour movement, and on Cobbett and Robert Owen, with frequent excursions into the field of detective fiction.
- Arnold Joseph Toynbee (b. 1889), expert in Near East history and culture, and in international affairs, has issued (since 1934) several volumes of a masterly and comprehensive Study of History.
- Alan Patrick Herbert (b. 1890), as 'A. P. H.' has distinguished himself by his wit in Punch and numerous publications, as well as in Parliament, which he entered in 1935.
- Christopher Murray Grieve (b. 1891) writes, as 'Hugh M'Diarmid,' original modern poetry in 'Synthetic Scots.'
- Richard Aldington (b. 1892), poet and novelist (Death of a Hero, 1929), married Hilda Doolittle ('H. D.'), a fellow-leader of the Imagists.
- Robert Maltse Bowyer Nichols (b. 1893), Professor of English Literature at Tokyo (1921-24), is one of the most outstanding Georgian poets.
- Osbert Sitwell (b. 1892), and Sacheverel Sitwell (b. 1897) are Edith Sitwell's brothers, the former best known for his sauvies, the latter for his work on Southern Baroque Art.
- Charles Hamilton Sorley (1895-1915) wrote Marlborough and other promising poems, and was killed in Flanders.
- Ivor Armstrong Richards (b. 1893) has exercised great influence on criticism by his analysis of the acts of comprehension and judgment in Principles of Criticism (1924) and Practical Criticism (1929).
- Wilfrid Owen (1893-1918) won the M.C. in 1917 and was killed in action in Nov. 1918. He was influenced by Mr Sassoon, but his own War poems, though true and stern, are free from bitterness. His influence on modern poetry is due in part to his spiritual qualities, in part to his experiments in inner rhyme and 'pararhyme,' i.e. assonance.
- Herbert Edward Read (b. 1893), in 1931-33 Professor of Fine Art at Edinburgh University, has written literary and art criticism, poems, and a short but notable autobiography The Innocent Eye (1933).
- Charles Langbridge Morgan (b. 1894), novelist and dramatic critic, served in the Navy and suffered internment (1914-18) in Holland before joining the staff of the Times. The Fountain (1932) placed him among the outstanding literary artists of his time. The Gunroom (1919; withdrawn from circulation) and Sparkenbroke (1936) were other novels.
- John Boynton Priestley (b. 1894) marked a reaction from subjectivity with The Good Companions (1929), and has written studies of Meredith and Peacock, travel-books such as English Journey (1934), and plays.
- Lancelot Hogben (b. 1895), Professor of Natural History at Aberdeen, has popularised Mathematics and Science in his brilliant Mathematics for the Million (1936) and Science for the Citizen (1938).
- William Alexander Gerhardl (b. 1895 at St Petersburg) has written novels (Utility, 1922; The Polyglots, 1925), plays, and a study of Chekov (1923).
- Robert Graves (b. 1895), son of A. P. Graves (q.v.), is poet and critic, but is best known for his autobiographical Good-Bye to All That (1925) and his imaginative reconstruction of the life of the Emperor Claudius in I, Claudius, and Claudius the God (1934).
- Edmund Charles Blunden (b. 1896) has written thoughtful poems (collected in 1930), a notable War book Undertones of War (1928), and much scholarly criticism.
- Robert Cedric Sherriff (b. 1896) followed up his impressive War play of Journey's End (1929) with two quiet domestic novels of great merit, The Fortnight in September (1931) and Green Gates (1936).
- Archibald Joseph Cronin (b. 1896), after practising medicine for some years, turned to literature, rising suddenly to fame with Hatter's Castle (1931), which was followed by other successful books, among them The Citadel (1937).
- Henry Williamson (b. 1897) has written essays and novels but his fame still rests on an animal tale, Tarka the Otter (1927).
- Liam O'Flaherty (b. 1897) has written tense, tragic studies of Irish life, as in Skerrett (1932).
- Eric Linklater (b. 1899) made his mark in 1931 with his witty picaresque Don Juan in America.
- Noel Coward (b. 1899), playwright, actor, composer, etc., attained success at an exceptionally early age with comedies such as Hay Fever (1925) and The Young Idea, operettas (e.g. Bitter Sweet, 1929), and revues. His best-known work is Cavalcade (1931), a pageant of British history in the twentieth century. His autobiography, Present Indicative, appeared in 1937.
- James Leslie Mitchell (1901-35) wrote The Conquest of the Maya and other historical works in his own name, and as 'Lewis Grassie Gibbon' three realistic novels of Scottish rural life.
- John William Van Druten (b. 1901) has followed up the success of Young Woodley (1928) with other competent realistic plays.
- Roy Dunnachie Campbell (b. 1902 in Durban) strung 'a lyre of savage thunder' in The Flaming Terrapin (1924), satirised bookish poets in The Georgiad (1931), and achieved occasional magnificence in Mithraic Emblems.
- William Charles Franklyn Plomer (b. 1903 in the Transvaal) has written novels, poems, and a Life of Rhodes.
- Cecil Day Lewis (b. 1904), born in Ireland, is a 'metaphysical' poet of the modern school. Collected Poems appeared in 1935.
- Herbert Ernest Bates (b. 1905) since 1926 has won distinction as one of the most accomplished short-story artists of to-day.
- Wynstan Hugh Auden (b. 1907) is the most versatile and humorous of the younger poets. He has collaborated with Chr. Isherwood in several plays, among them The Ascent of F6 and The Dog Beneath the Skin.
- Louis Macneice (b. 1907 at Belfast) has become prominent among the younger school with the appearance of Poems (1935) and other verse.
- Stephen Harold Spender (b. 1909), perhaps the most poetically gifted of the moderns, published Poems (1933).

COMPLEMENTARY LIST II.

BRITISH AND DOMINION WRITERS: WOMEN

- Lady John Scott (Alicia Ann Spottiswoode; 1801-1900) was author of 'Annie Laurie,' 'Douglas, tender and true,' 'Ettrick,' 'Durisdeer,' and some others of the most esteemed of modern Scots songs, as well as composer of the music to which they are sung.
- Anna Swanwick (1813-99) wrote An Utopian Dream and other prose works, but is remembered as the translator of Faust in accomplished verse, and for her translations from Schiller and Æschylus.
- Grace Agullar (1816-47), an English Jewess, wrote on her ancestral faith, published poems, and was known chiefly for many unsectarian but strongly religious novels, such as Home Influence and A Mother's Repompse.
- Mrs Mary Anne Everett Green (1818-95) edited The Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies, The Diary of John Rous, The Letters of Queen Henrietta Maria, and calendared important series of State papers.
- Maria Charlotte Tucker (1821-93) wrote, as 'A.L.O.E.' (A Lady of England), many stories—usually didactic—for children.
- Julia Kavanagh (1824-77), a devout Irish Roman Catholic, laid the scenes of her stories—Madeleine, Nathalie, Addie, and many others—in France; she wrote also on French and English women-of-letters.
- Amelia Blandford Edwards (1831-92), Egyptologist and novelist, wrote My Brother's Wife, Barbara's History, Half a Million of Money, Debenham's Vow, and Lord Brackenbury.
- Hesba Stretton is the pen-name of Sarah Smith (1831-1911), author of Jessica's First Prayer (1867) and similar stories.
- Mrs Isabella L. Bishop (born Bird; 1832-1904) travelled extensively, and wrote accounts of her experiences in America, Japan, Indo-China, Persia, and Tibet.
- Matilda Barbara Betham-Edwards (1836-1919), cousin of Amelia B. Edwards, wrote on French topography, history, and life; Reminiscences and Mid Victorian Memories; and many novels.
- Mrs Toulmin Smith (1838-1914), under her maiden name of L. T. Meade, wrote a long series of novels and stories, mostly for girls, such as Scamp and I, A World of Girls, The Girls of St Wode's.
- Mrs Mary Louisa Molesworth (born Stewart; 1839-1921) wrote as 'Ennis Graham' half-a-dozen novels, but became eminent, under her married name, for her delightful stories for children—Carrots, Cuckoo Clock, The Boys and I, and many more.
- Mrs Julia Horatio Ewing (born Gatty; 1842-85) wrote a series of charming stories for children, including Mrs Overthway's Remembrances, Jackanapes, Jan of the Windmill.
- Lady Mary Montgomerie Currie (1843-1905; née Lamb), under the pen-name of 'Violet Fane,' attained some distinction as author of From Dawn to Noon (1872), Denzil Place, and other verse; of novels, as Sophy and Thro' Love and War; essays—Edwin and Angelina Papers and Two Moods of a Man; and memoirs of the Queen of Navarre.
- The Hon. Emily Lawless (1845-1913), daughter of Lord Cloncurry, made a name for herself by her Irish story Hurriah (1886), followed by Grania and Maelcho; wrote a history of Ireland and a book on Essex in Ireland; and also With the Wild Geese (1902), a volume of beautiful poems.
- Mathilde Blind (1847-96), a champion of women's rights, born in Mannheim, translated Strauss's Old Faith and the New and Marie Bashkirtseff's memoirs, wrote Lives of George Eliot and Madame Roland, and published some remarkable poems, The Prophecy of St Oran, The Heather on Fire, The Ascent of Man.
- Mrs Flora Annie Steel (born Webster; 1847-1929) wrote From the Five Rivers, Tales from the Punjab, On the Face of the Waters, Voices in the Night, The Hosts of the Lord, and many other stories.
- Dame Millicent Fawcett (née Garrett; 1847-1929), wife of the Rt. Hon. Henry Fawcett, and a defender of women's rights, was author of Political Economy for Beginners and other works on economics, women's suffrage, and eminent women.
- Mrs Annie Besant (née Wood; 1847-1933) from Secularism and Mr Bradlaugh passed in 1889 to Mme. Blavatsky and the Theosophical Society, becoming its president in 1907. Among her works are Re-incarnation, The Ancient Wisdom, Esoteric Christianity, The Religious Problem in India, an autobiography, and books on Indian Home Rule.
- Mrs John Richard Green (born Alice Stopford; 1849-1929), besides editing and continuing her husband's Short History, wrote Henry II. and Town Life in the Fifteenth Century, and books on Ireland.
- Mrs Desmond Humphreys (née Gollan; 1850-1938), as 'Rita,' published Dame Durden (1883), Peg the Rake, The Lie Circumspect, An Old Rogue's Tragedy, The Sin of Jasper Standish, Jill, all Alone, and other novels.
- Emily Frances Adeline Sergeant (1851-1904) was author of a score of novels, including The Story of a Penitent Soul, Beyond Recall, Sibyl Fletcher, Miss Betty's Mistake, The Common Lot, Blake of Oriel.
- Lady Gregory (born Augusta Persse; 1852-1932), historian of Our Irish Theatre (1913)—for which she ably wrote and wrought—composed diverting comedies and farces, historic dramas, and romantic tragedies, wrote on folklore, and translated Molière (into 'Kiltartan English') and Hyde's Irish plays.
- Mrs Henry Reeves (1853-1920), writing under her maiden name of Helen Mathers, became known by over a score of novels, Comin' thro' the Rye (1875) and Cherry Ripe being the first.
- Marie Corelli (1854-1924), trained in a French convent for a musical career, produced a popular novel, A Romance of Two Worlds, in 1886; more ambitious and more popular were Barabbas, The Sorrows of Satan, and The Mighty Atom. Later came The Master Christian (1900), Temporal Power, God's Good Man, and The Secret Power.

- Mrs Henry Ady (born Julia Cartwright; died 1924) became known for her books on Burne-Jones, G. F. Watts, Bastien-Lepage, The Painters of Florence, and other artistic subjects, and for her Lives of Isabella d'Este, Beatrice d'Este, and Christina of Denmark.
- Mrs Margaret Wolfe Hungerford (née Hamilton; c. 1855-97), an Irish novelist, writing anonymously or as 'The Duchess,' published many short stories and novels, Phyllis in 1877, and Molly Bawn, the most successful, in 1878.
- Mrs Arthur Stannard (born Henrietta Eliza Vaughan Palmer; 1856-1911) wrote, as 'John Strange Winter,' Bootles' Baby (1885), and many other popular stories of regimental life.
- Kathleen Mannington Caffyn ('Iota'; born Hunt; 1856-1925) attracted notice by A Yellow Aster (1894), Children of Circumstance, Anne Mauleverer, The Minx, Patricia, The Fire-Seeker, and other novels.
- Mrs Margaret Louisa Woods (born Bradley; 1856) has shown dramatic power and tragic force in both verse (Collected Poems, 1914) and novels.
- Violet Paget (1856-1935), as 'Vernon Lee,' wrote The Eighteenth Century in Italy; Euphonia; Hortus Vitæ, and other volumes of essays; Baldwin and other philosophical dialogues; Louis Norbert, a romance; a Life of the Countess of Albany; tales and plays.
- Edna Lyall is the pen-name of Ada Ellen Bayly (1857-1903), author of Donovan (1882), We Two, In the Golden Days, The Autobiography of a Slander, and other stories.
- Jane Barlow (1860-1917), beginning with Bogland Studies and Irish Idylls in 1892, became an authoritative exponent of the kindlier side of Irish life in fact and romance.
- Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler (1860-1929; by marriage Mrs A. L. Felkin) published poems and novels—Concerning Isabel Carnaby (1898), A Double Thread, The Farringtons, Place and Power, among the first.
- E. Pauline Johnson (Tekahionwake; 1860-1913), daughter of an Indian chief and his English wife, was the first Canadian-born poetess. Her collected poems, Flint and Feather, appeared in 1912.
- Amy Levy (1861-89), Jewish poetess, wrote, besides Xantippe and poems, a clever novel, Reuben Sachs.
- Mary Elizabeth Coleridge (1861-1907), great-grand-niece of the poet, wrote The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus (1893) and other novels, and (anonymously) lyric poems of somewhat sombre charm—Fancy's Following (1896). Gathered Leaves (1910) contains stories and essays, with a memoir by Edith Sichel.
- Mrs Katharine Tynan Hinkson (born Tynan; 1861-1937) published novels and tales (such as The Handsome Brandons and The Dear Irish Girl); verse; and autobiography (Twenty-Five Years; Middle Years; Years of Shadow; and Wandering Years).
- Barbara Baynton (1862-1929) described the grimmest aspects of Australian bush life in her Bush Studies (1922).
- Sarah Grand (born Frances Elizabeth Clarke, 1862) is known as author of The Heavenly Twins (1893) and other problem novels. Interested in the subject of Women's Rights, for six years, between 1923 and 1929, she was Mayoress of Bath.
- Lady Burghclere (1864-1933) wrote important Lives of Buckingham, Ormond, and Stafford.
- Beatrice Harraden (1864-1936), novelist, wrote Ships that Pass in the Night (1893), In Varying Moods, Katharine Frensham, Spring Shall Plant, etc.
- Elizabeth Robins (Mrs George R. Parks), born (1865) and educated in U.S.A., distinguished on the stage for her interpretations of Ibsen, as 'C. E. Raimond' wrote The Open Question (1898) and other notable novels. In The Magnetic North (1904) and later tales she abandoned her pseudonym.
- Violet Martin (1865-1915), writing as 'Martin Ross,' in conjunction with her cousin, Edith C. Somerville (b. 1861), produced a series of Irish sketches, sporting, tragic, and humorous—An Irish Cousin, The Real Charlotte, The Silver Fox, Some Experiences (and Further Experiences) of an Irish R.M.
- Marion Angus (b. 1866) has written delicate and haunting poetry in English and Scots.
- Caroline F. S. Spurgeon (b. 1869) threw new light on Shakespeare by Shakespeare's Imagery (1935).
- Charlotte Mew (1870-1928), though she wrote only The Farmer's Bride (1916) and The Rambling Sailor (1929), was regarded by Hardy as the best woman poet of her time.
- Lucy M. Montgomery (Mrs Macdonald; b. 1874), writer of many simple novels describing life on Prince Edward Island, notably the two series beginning Anne of Green Gables (1908) and Emily of New Moon.
- Ethel Sidgwick (b. 1877), by Promise (1910) and Succession (1913), its sequel, won a place among leading women-novelists of her day.
- Mrs Burnett Smith, under her maiden name of Annie S. Swan, wrote Aldersyde (1883), Carlowrie, and many other stories, especially popular with girls, and My Life (1934).
- Mrs Mona Caird (born Alison; died 1932) was author of The Wing of Azrael (1889), The Daughters of Danaus, and other novels.
- Maxwell Gray, the pen-name of Miss M. G. Tuttiatt (1847-1923), became known through The Silence of Dean Mailland (1886), An Innocent Impostor, A Costly Freak, Four-leaved Clover, and other novels and poems.
- Emily Morse Symonds ('George Paston'; died 1936) wrote novels, plays, books on Romney, Pope, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Little Memoirs of the Eighteenth (and of the Nineteenth) Century, and other works.
- Mrs W. K. Clifford (born Lane; died 1929), married Professor Wm. Kingdon Clifford the scientist, and wrote Anyhow Stories (1882) for children; many novels not for children—Mrs Keith's Crime, Aunt Anne, Love Letters of a Worldly Woman, Miss Fingal; and A Long Duel, A Woman Alone, and other cultured plays.
- Mary Cholmondeley (died 1925), author of Diana Tempest, Moth and Rust, Prisoners, etc., became famous as a novelist in 1899 through her Red Pottage. In Under One Roof (1918) she deals with the family record.
- Mrs Clement Shorter (Dora Sigerson, a Dublin physician's daughter—died 1918) wrote poems and stories, including The Woman who Went to Hell, As the Sparks Fly Upward, The Fairy Changeling, and The Sad Years.
- Dorothy M. Richardson, novelist, in Pointed Roofs (1915), The Tunnel (1919), and other volumes, included under the general title Pilgrimage, attempts, as it were, to photograph the stream of consciousness of Miriam Henderson. Grammar, plot, and normal novelistic usage she ignores; yet she fascinates with her continuous film of inner life.

May Sinclair, born at Rock Ferry, Cheshire, published stories from 1895, and took her place in the front rank of contemporary women-novelists with The Divine Fire (1904), The Creators, The Three Sisters, Tasker Jevons, Mary Olivier (1919), and other powerful (if sometimes prolix) novels. Preoccupied with sex relations, she has some affinity with the Brontë sisters, on whom she wrote (The Three Brontës, 1912).

Elizabeth Mary, Countess Russell, by her first marriage gained that knowledge of Germany which gave charm to Elizabeth and Her German Garden (1898) and piquancy to The Caravaners (1909).

Evelyn Underhill (b. 1875) has expounded mysticism in many books, from The Mystic Way (1913) to The School of Charity (1934).

Rachel Annand Taylor was born in 1876 in Aberdeen. Celtic temperament and Pre-Raphaelite influence gave rich colour to Rose and Vine (1908) and The Hours of Fiammetta (1909). She has written in eloquent prose on the Renaissance.

Emily Hilda Young (b. 1880) married a Bristol solicitor, and it is in or near Bristol that she has laid the scenes of such wise, brave, and humorous novels as The Misses Mallott (1922), William (1925), The Curate's Wife (1934).

Mary Gladys Meredith Webb (1883-1927) wrote several novels, including Precious Bane (1924), and some poems, but fame came only posthumously.

Henrietta Richardson, born in Melbourne, writes as Henry Handel ('H. H.') Richardson, and is claimed as the most distinguished novelist Australia has yet produced. The Fortunes of Richard Mahony (trilogy; 1917-30) is her chief work.

Rose Macaulay has written some subtle poems and many novels, from Abbots Verney (1906) to Going Abroad (1934). The play of comedy in her post-War novels masks a tragic view of life.

Anna Buchan, sister of John Buchan (Lord Tweedsmuir), as 'O. Douglas' writes Scottish novels of middle-class life, such as The Setons and Priorsford.

Mazo de la Roche (b. 1885 in Toronto) has written Low Life (1925) and other plays, but is best known for the novel series which commenced with Jalna (1927).

• Edith Sitwell (b. 1887) has influenced modern verse considerably: see p. 723. Her poems, collected in 1930, include Bucolic Comedies, The Sleeping Beauty, Troy Park, Gold Coast Customs. She has written a study of Pope.

Katherine Mansfield was the pen-name of Katherine Beauchamp (1888-1923), the most gifted writer that New Zealand has yet produced. Her fame rests on her 'vignettes' of her New Zealand childhood—Bliss (1920), The Garden Party (1922), The Dove's Nest (1927)—short stories of a wonderful clarity, their tension relieved by an ecstatic sense of natural beauty.

Helen Waddell (b. 1889) won fame by The Wandering Scholars (1927), a learned and graceful history of Latin poetry in the Dark and Middle Ages, and by her novel Peter Abelard (1932).

Dorothy Violet Wellesley (Lady Gerald Wellesley) (b. 1889) has shown by her work, from the Poems of 1920 to the Deserted House of 1930, that poetry can be at once modern and 'simple, sensuous, passionate' in Milton's sense.

E. M. DeLafield is the pen-name of Edmée Elizabeth Monica de la Pasture (b. 1890), a versatile and witty writer of novels, plays, short stories, and observations of travel.

Gladys Bronwyn Stern (b. 1890), novelist and dramatist, has portrayed Jewish life faithfully in The Rakonitz Chronicles (1932).

Hon. Victoria Mary Sackville-West (b. 1892) is best known to-day for such novels as The Edwardians (1930), but will be remembered rather for her fine poem The Land (1926), a true English Georgics.

Ruth Pitter won the Hawthornden prize in 1937: A Trophy of Arms shows her pure style, A Mad Lady's Garland her witty fancy.

Rebecca West is the pen-name of Cicily Isabel Fairfield (b. 1892), critic, novelist, and satirist. She has written on Henry James, D. H. Lawrence, Arnold Bennett, and St Augustine. The Judge (1922) is her best-known novel.

Stella Benson (1892-1933) married in China. China and Corea furnished material for Worlds Within Worlds (1928). Manchuria is the scene of Tobit Transplanted (1931). She died young, but wit, fun, and a rare visual gift set her high among English novelists.

Sylvia Townsend Warner, novelist and poet, is also a learned musician, which shows in the construction of such imaginative and distinguished novels as Lolly Willows (1926) and Summer Will Show (1936).

Clemence Dane is the pen-name of Winifred Ashton. She has turned her stage experience to account in novels like Enter Sir John (1928) and plays like A Bill of Divorcement (1921).

Susan Ertz, though born in England, is American by descent, and has used her knowledge of the two civilisations in Now East, Now West (1927), The Proselyte (1933), and other fine, quiet novels.

Dorothy Leigh Sayers (b. 1893) began with verse, but turned in Whose Body? (1923) to detective fiction, in which she has gone on from strength to strength: see p. 721.

Margaret Kennedy (b. 1896) made her name by The Constant Nymph (1924) and its sequel The Fool of the Family (1930), as well as by the play Escape Me Never (1934).

Naomi Mitchison (b. 1897) has revived Ancient History in Cloud Cuckoo Land (1925), Black Sparta (1928).

Margaret Storm Jameson (b. 1897) has written a novel trilogy (The Lovely Ship, 1927; The Voyage Home, 1930; A Richer Dust, 1931), besides a notable autobiography No Time like the Present (1933).

Winifred Holtby (1898-1935) was a director of Time and Tide, and knowledge of public affairs informs her last novel, the broadly conceived and firmly handled South Riding.

Rosamond (Nina) Lehmann wrote in Dusky Answer (1927) a delicate study of adolescent girlhood.

Dodie Smith made a hit in 1934 with Call It a Day, a charming light comedy, and, as C. L. Anthony, with Autumn Crocus (1931).

Elizabeth Mackintosh, as 'Gordon Daviot,' wrote the very successful play Richard of Bordeaux (pub. 1933).

Lillian Bowes-Lyon, in The White Hare and Bright Feather Fading (1936), shows that traditional forms may still suffice for fine poetry.

Stella Gibbons in 1932 wrote Cold Comfort Farm, a rich burlesque on the bucolic novel, then the more serious Bassett, Enbury Heath, Miss Linsey and Pa.

COMPLEMENTARY LIST III.

AMERICAN WRITERS.

- Washington Allston (1779-1843), called 'the American Titian' for his eminence as painter and colourist, wrote the poem The Sylphs of the Seasons and an art-novel, Monaldi, as well as lectures on painting.
- John Pierpont (1785-1866), Unitarian pastor and poet, was author of Airs of Palestine and other Poems, and is remembered for 'Warren's Address at Bunker's Hill' and his 'Yankee Boy.'
- John Howard Payne (1791-1852), actor, dramatist, and American Consul at Tunis, produced many plays and adaptations, but is chiefly remembered for the song 'Home, Sweet Home,' from Clari, set to music by Sir H. Bishop.
- Henry Charles Carey (1793-1879), bookseller at Philadelphia and political economist, developed his views in Principles of Political Economy (3 vols. 1837-40) and Principles of Social Science (1858-59).
- James Gates Percival (1795-1856), chemist and geologist, made a name for himself as a poet by Prometheus, Clio, and The Dream of a Day.
- John Pendleton Kennedy (1795-1870), an ante-bellum Southern novelist (who during the war defended the Union), wrote Swallow Barn, Horse-Shoe Robinson, and Rob of the Bowl, besides political satire and biography.
- John Gorham Palfrey (1796-1881), Unitarian pastor and professor at Harvard, wrote on Lord Mahon's History of England, and published a History of New England.
- Robert Montgomery Bird (1803-54), bred a physician, wrote three tragedies, The Gladiator, Oraloosa, and The Broker of Bogota; the historical novels Calavar and The Infidel; The Hawks of Hawk Hollow, Sheppard Lee, Peter Pilgrim, and Robin Day; but is best remembered for Nick of the Woods, the story of a Kentucky backwoodsman in the Revolutionary War.
- Richard Hildreth (1807-65) wrote on morals, on politics, on despotism in America, and on banking; a history of the United States (6 vols.); and an anti-slavery novel, The White Slave.
- Henry Theodore Tuckerman (1813-71) wrote records of Italian and Sicilian sojourns, books on art and artists in America, Rambles and Reveries, Thoughts on the Poets, The Diary of a Dreamer, and several volumes of poetry, including A Sheaf of Verse.
- Jones Very (1813-80) was in his day highly esteemed as poet and essayist; a complete edition of his prose and verse was published in 1886.
- Christopher Pearse Cranch (1813-92), Unitarian minister, painter, and poet, wrote for the Transcendental Dial, and published books for the young (The Last of the Huggermuggers and Kobboltz), a blank-verse translation of the Æneid, The Bird and the Bell, and Ariel and Caliban.
- Henry Norman Hudson (1814-86), Shakespearean scholar, published his Lectures on Shakespeare and an edition of the works in 1856-58, and in 1884 a volume of Wordsworth Studies.
- Rufus Willmot Griswold (1815-57) edited Poe's works, with a much-criticised memoir, and published a long series of works on the poets and poetry of America and of England, and a Life of Napoleon.
- John Godfrey Saxe (1816-87) made his name known by his Humorous and Satirical Poems (1850), and other volumes of familiar verse.
- Frederick Douglass (1817-95), a mulatto anti-slavery orator, himself a one-time slave, wrote his Life and Times (1881).
- Henry Wheeler Shaw (1818-85), humorist, attained great popularity as 'Josh Billings,' writer of comic essays, burlesques, and aphorisms.
- Edwin Percy Whipple (1819-86) wrote Essays and Reviews, Literature and Life, Wit and Humour, and The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.
- Richard Grant White (1821-85) brought out the 'Riverside' (1883) and other scholarly editions of Shakespeare's works, and wrote Studies in Shakespeare and Everyday English, among other books.
- Thomas Buchanan Read (1822-72), portrait-painter and poet, published a prose romance, The Pilgrims of the Great St Bernard, and volumes of poetry, including A Summer Story, which contains the famous 'Sheridan's Ride.'
- Edward Everett Hale (1822-1909) did much to maintain loyalty to the Union by his tale The Man without a Country in 1863; wrote over fifty books, mostly stories and critical essays; and in 1902 published Memoirs of a Hundred Years.
- George Henry Boker (1823-90), diplomatist, dramatist, and poet, wrote Francesca da Rimini and other tragedies. Of his later books of poems, Street Lyrics, Königsmark, and The Book of the Dead were the most notable.
- Henry Harrisse (1823-1910), historian, wrote on Columbus, the Cabots, and the Discovery of North America (1892).
- Henry Charles Lea (1825-1909), historian and publisher, wrote, after much research, a History of the Inquisition in Spain and The Moriscos in Spain.
- Lucy Larcom (1826-93) published Ships in the Mist and other Stories in 1859, and two or three volumes of poems (one of them Childhood Songs).
- Henry Timrod (1829-67), a Southern poet of German extraction, secured a wide audience by a volume of poems in 1860, and wrote for the South many very popular war-songs.
- Charles Dudley Warner (1829-1900) wrote graceful essays and travel sketches—Saunterings (1872) and the like—a life of Washington Irving and literary studies, and edited the 'American Men of Letters' series.
- John Esten Cooke (1830-86), novelist, wrote stories à la Fenimore Cooper, The Virginia Comedians (1854) and other tales of his native state, and Virginia: A History of the People (1883).
- Paul Hamilton Hayne (1831-86), a Southern poet, served and suffered in the Civil War; his Legends

- and Lyrics and The Mountain of the Lovers are included in his Poetical Works (1882).
- Moncure Daniel Conway (1832-1907), freethinker, journalist, and author, wrote Idols and Ideals, Demonology and Devil Lore, The Wandering Jew, books on Republican Superstitions, Solomon and Solomonian Literature, and Lives of Washington, Paine, Carlyle, and Hawthorne.
- Hubert Howe Bancroft (1832-1918), historian, compiled with others a History of the Pacific States (39 vols. 1874-90), wrote Retrospections (1912), and presented to California University his vast library.
- James M'Neill Whistler (1834-1903), a great and original painter and etcher, scored some brilliant literary successes against Ruskin and his other critics, collected in The Gentle Art of Making Enemies (1890; enlarged 1892).
- Moses Colt Tyler (1835-1900), professor successively in Michigan University and at Cornell, published, besides The Brawnsville Papers, a Life of Patrick Henry, and a manual of English literature, a standard History of American Literature down to 1765 (2 vols. 1878), and the Literary History of the American Revolution (2 vols. 1897).
- Louise Chandler Moulton (born Chandler; 1835-1908) wrote poems, besides Juno Clifford, Bed-Time Stories, and More Bed-Time Stories.
- Harriet Prescott Spofford (1835-1921) published The Amber Gods in 1863, and followed it with other volumes of realistic short stories, besides novels, poems, and books on domestic matters.
- Celia Thaxter (born Lighton; 1836-94), a lighthouse-keeper's daughter, published Driftweed (1879), and other verse, some for children.
- Francis Hopkinson Smith (1838-1915), author and artist, wrote clever short stories—as in Colonel Carter of Cartersville (1891) and At Close Range (1905)—besides full-length novels and books of travel.
- Edna Dean Proctor (1838-1923) wrote A Russian Journey (1872), and popular patriotic songs.
- Thomas Raynesford Lounsbury (1838-1915) wrote scholarly studies of Chaucer and Shakespeare, and a History of the English Language (1879).
- Henry George (1839-97), economist, advocated the 'Single Tax' (on land values) in Progress and Poverty (1879), and other works.
- James A. Herne (1839-1901), actor and dramatist, wrote realistic plays of rustic life—Margaret Fleming (1890), Shore Acres, Griffith Davenport, and Sag Harbor (1899).
- James Ryder Randall (1839-1909), fresh from college in Maryland, wrote My Maryland, the 'Marseillaise' of the Confederate forces in the Civil War.
- John White Chadwick (1840-1904), pastor of a Unitarian church in Brooklyn, published, besides theological works, Lives of Theodore Parker and W. E. Channing, and volumes of poetry. To this Cyclopædia he contributed many articles.
- John Habberton (1842-1921), journalist, scored in 1876 a great success by his witty and kindly Helen's Babies, followed by other amusing stories, and a play, Deacon Crankett.
- Bronson Howard (1842-1908), dramatist and journalist, wrote Saratoga (1870), The Young Mrs Winthrop, The Henrietta, Shenandoah (1889), and other plays.
- Elizabeth Stuart Phelps (1844-1911) started to write at an early age, becoming famous by The Gates Ajar (1868). Both alone and in collaboration with her husband she published many other books.
- Sarah Chauncey Woolsey (1845-1905), as 'Susan Coolidge' wrote What Katy Did (1872), and other stories for girls, besides verse and a history of Philadelphia City.
- John Banister Tabb (1845-1909), a Roman Catholic priest, wrote songs, lyrics, and other poems, many of which became extremely popular.
- Constance Cary Harrison (1846-1920; née Cary) wrote The Anglomaniacs (1887), A Daughter of the South, Good Americans, A Princess of the Hills (1901), besides other novels, short stories, and a play.
- James Ford Rhodes (1848-1927) issued a great History of the United States from the Compromise of 1850 (8 vols. 1893-1919).
- Sarah Orne Jewett (1849-1909), born in New England, wrote tales and sketches of New England life and Puritan character on its kindlier side: Deephaven, The Country Doctor, etc.
- Emma Lazarus (1849-87) wrote in prose and verse on Jewish themes, and impressed Emerson and others by her culture and conversation.
- William Milligan Sloane (1850-1928), Professor of History in Columbia College, is known for his history of The French War and the Revolution, his Napoleon Bonaparte, and his Party Government in the U.S.A.
- Henry Cabot Lodge (1850-1924), Senator, wrote monographs on Daniel Webster, Alexander Hamilton, George Washington; and various historical works, ballads, lyrics, and reminiscences.
- William Crary Brownell (1851-1928) wrote on French Traits, on French Art, on Victorian Prose Masters, and on American Prose Masters.
- Henry Van Dyke (1852-1933), Congregational minister, Professor of English Literature at Princeton, and Minister at the Hague (1913-17), published, besides theological works, volumes of verse and a well-known treatise on The Poetry of Tennyson (1889).
- (James) Brander Matthews (1852-1929), Professor of Dramatic Literature in Columbia University till 1924, wrote plays, poems, short stories, novels, essays, and reminiscences (These Many Years, 1917), besides An Introduction to American Literature, and books on Molière, Modern French Dramatists, Shakespeare, the Drama, the Theatre, and the Historical Novel.
- Thomas Nelson Page (1853-1922), U.S. ambassador to Italy, in In Ole Virginia (1887) and other volumes of stories made effective use of negro dialect.
- Irwin Russell (1853-79), Southern poet, depicted negro character and employed plantation English in Christmas Night in the Quarters (1878) and other delightful verse.
- Jacob Gould Schurman (b. 1854), President of Cornell University (1892-1920), then Envoy to China and Ambassador to Germany, wrote on Kantian and evolution ethics, on Darwinism, on belief in God, on agnosticism, and to the present work contributed the article on Emerson.
- Roland Alexander Wood-Seys (1854-1919) was born in England, settled in California as olive-grower, and as 'Paul Cushing' made a name by the novels A Woman with a Secret, The Blacksmith of Voe, Bull & the Thorn, God's Lad.
- Poultney Bigelow (b. 1855), traveller, author, war correspondent, and university lecturer on modern history, published books on the Kaiser and Germany, Prussian Memories, 1864-1914, Genesic (1918), and Memoirs (1928, 1937).

- George Edward Woodberry (1855-1930), Professor of Comparative Literature in Columbia University (1891-1904), wrote on Poe, Hawthorne, Emerson, Swinburne; Studies in Letters and Life, Makers of Literature, and many critical works; The Flight, and other collections of romantic verse. He also edited Shelley and Poe; and he contributed to this Cyclopaedia of English Literature.
- Henry Cuyler Bunner (1855-96), editor of Puck, wrote charming lyrics and vers de société (as in Airs from Arcady and Rowen); The Midge and other novels; and remarkable short stories (showing Maupassant's influence), specially noteworthy collections being Short Sizes and Made in France (1893).
- Ella Wheeler Wilcox (née Wheeler; 1855-1919) wrote many volumes of facile verse, which attained extraordinary popularity.
- Thomas Woodrow Wilson (1856-1924), U.S.A. President (1913-21), was Professor of Jurisprudence at Princeton University and its President (1902-10), and wrote on American politics and government, George Washington, A History of the American People, and other works.
- Robert Edwin Peary (1856-1920), discoverer of the North Pole (1909), was a Rear-Admiral in the U.S. navy, and wrote Northward over the Great Ice (1898), Nearest the Pole (1907), The North Pole (1910), and other works on the Arctic regions.
- Augustus Thomas (1857-1934) tried his hand successfully at various types of play, humorous and serious, Alabama (1891), Oliver Goldsmith (1900), The Other Girl (1903), The Harvest Moon (1909), The Copperhead (1918) among others.
- William Gillette (b. 1857) won distinction as an actor and a playwright, in particular his dramatisation and interpretation of Sherlock Holmes (1899) gaining plaudits on both sides of the Atlantic.
- Theodore Roosevelt (1858-1919), U.S.A. President (1901-9), wrote on American ideals, the 'Strenuous Life,' zoology, hunting, ranching and travel experiences, and an Autobiography (1913).
- Alfred Henry Lewis ('Dan Quin'; c. 1858-1914), humorist, began a series of tales with Wolfville, Episodes of Cowboy Life, and Sandburrs (1900).
- Irving Bacheller (b. 1859), a New York journalist, attracted notice by his stories The Master of Silence and The Still House of O'Darrow (1890-94); with Eben Holden he made a great success in 1900; Darrel of the Blessed Isles and over a score of other novels followed.
- Booker Tallaferro Washington (1859-1915), negro educator, principal of Tuskegee Institute, wrote lives of himself (Up from Slavery, etc.) and Frederick Douglass, and notable works on racial problems.
- David Belasco (1859-1931), theatre manager and owner, staged and collaborated in such plays as Madame Butterfly (1900), The Darling of the Gods, and Adrea, besides writing The Girl of the Golden West (1905) and other dramas of spectacular or emotional appeal.
- Hamlin Garland (1860-1940), dramatist, novelist, and farmer, produced Main-Traveled Roads, Mississippi Valley stories, in 1890, followed by other unvarnished realistic short tales and novels of prairie life; a volume of critical essays (Crumbling Idols); also Prairie Songs, a Life of President Grant, and Memoirs.
- Henry Harland (1861-1905) edited the Yellow Book, wrote volumes of short sketches and stories, novels, and highly popular, delicately sentimental romances—The Cardinal's Snuff-box (1900) and The Lady Paramount (1902).
- Paul Elmer More (1864-1937) wrote studies of Greek, Hellenistic, and Christian philosophy.
- Irving Babbitt (1865-1933), Professor of French Literature at Harvard University from 1912, fought violently against romanticism and, in The New Laokoon (1910), Rousseau and Romanticism (1919), and other works, established the 'humanistic' movement in America.
- George Ade (b. 1866) is author of several volumes of Fables in slang, parodies, and satirical plays.
- David Graham Phillips (1867-1911) trounced society in a series of novels, the last, Susan Lenox (1917), the story of an American courtesan.
- Charles Klein (1867-1915) from El Capitan and other libretti turned to stagy plays on social problems—e.g. The Lion and the Mouse (1905) and The Third Degree.
- John Livingston Lowes (b. 1867) opened a new vein of psychological criticism with The Road to Xanadu (1927), analysing the sources of The Ancient Mariner.
- Finley Peter Dunne (1867-1936), journalist in Chicago, developed a new vein of humour, American rather than Irish in its shrewdness, in Mr Dooley in Peace and War (1898), and other entertaining volumes recording Mr Dooley's sayings and philosophy.
- Edgar Lee Masters (b. 1869), a Chicago lawyer, made a 'hit' in 1915 with his Spoon River Anthology, a collection of clever satirical verse epitaphs on (and professedly by) the dear departed of a small Middle Western town. He has written Walt Whitman's Life.
- Frank Norris (1870-1902), novelist, published (1901-2) The Octopus and The Pit (part of an incomplete trilogy or 'Epic of the Wheat') and other powerful, crudely realistic stories.
- Michael Ivanovitch Rostovtzeff (b. 1870 at Kieff), professor at Yale since 1925, is a leading authority on Ancient History. His Social and Economic History of the Roman Empire is a classic.
- Paul Laurence Dunbar (1872-1906), negro poet, wrote, besides stories and novels, Lyrics of Lowly Life (1896), and other volumes of plantation verse.
- Anne Douglas Sedgwick (1873-1935) is best known for her ironic presentation of female egotism in Valerie Upton (1908) and Tante (1911).
- Amy Lowell (1874-1925), poetess, exponent of the Imagist School, besides versatile verse and 'polyphonic prose,' wrote Six French Poets, a Life of Keats, and Tendencies in Modern American Poetry.
- Ellen Glasgow (b. 1874) owes her solid reputation to her studies of life in her native Virginia, semi-historical in The Battleground (1902), modern and realistic in The Vein of Iron (1936).
- Gertrude Stein (b. 1874) explores the unconscious in 'patterns of assorted words' analogous to Cubist painting. Best known to the reading public for her Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas (1933), she has exerted strong influence upon the younger American school.
- Percy MacKaye (b. 1875) advocated the Civic theatre, and wrote masques, pageants, opera libretti, poetic dramas, plays (Jeanne d'Arc, 1906; The Scarecrow; To-morrow, 1913), and a memoir of his father Steele MacKaye (1842-94), playwright and actor.
- Sherwood Anderson (b. 1876) made his name by Windy M'Pherson's Son (1916). His short stories enter sincerely and profoundly into the inner lives of common folk in his native Middle West.
- Jack London (1876-1916), born in San Francisco, won popularity with vivid, sensational, headlong tales of Alaska, the South Seas, and where not—The Call of the Wild (1903), White Fang, Burning Daylight, The Cruise of the Snark, amongst his best books.

Charles William Beebe (b. 1877), naturalist, ornithologist, oceanographer, has written widely in both scientific and 'popular' vein (Jungle Peace, 1915; Beneath Tropic Seas, 1928), and has made exploratory submarine descents in a 'bathysphere.'

Carl (August) Sandburg (b. 1878), poet, of Swedish extraction, sings of industrial America—in Chicago Poems (1916), Smoke and Steel (1920), and the like—with Whitmanesque freedom and zest.

Upton Sinclair (b. 1878) made a sensation with The Jungle (1906), a story of the Chicago stockyards. Later novels—e.g. Sylvia (1913)—and Plays of Protest (1912) are likewise marked (and often marred) by strong propagandist purpose. Candid Reminiscences appeared in 1932.

(Nicholas) Vachel Lindsay (1879–1931), poet, tramped America trading his rhymes and preaching 'The Gospel of Beauty.' Inoculating his muse with the rag-time virus, in The Congo (1914) and other collections, he compelled attention by his missionary zeal and his irrepressible spirits.

Joseph Hergesheimer (b. 1880) is attracted to the decorative in art and to the picturesque in life and history, as in The Three Black Pennys (1917), his masterpiece Java Head (1919), Linda Condon (1919), Tampico (1924)—exotic novels in a mannered, cadenced style.

Henry Louis Mencken (b. 1880) is the most dreaded of American satirists. His deadliest weapon is simply quotation, as in Americana (1925 et seq.).

Susan Glaspell (b. 1882), besides such plays as The Verge (1922), has written Fidelity (1915) and other understanding and well-made novels.

Hendrik Willem Van Loon (b. 1882) has written historical works about his native Holland and his adoptive mother-country America, besides a popular Story of Mankind (1921), The Arts of Mankind (1938), and a biography of Rembrandt (1938).

Ezra (Loomis) Pound (b. 1885), poet, studied Romance literature, and settled in England. There he issued Personæ and Exultations in 1909, translated Guido Cavalcanti's Sonnets, and Japanese plays, joined and left the Imagists, and in verse and prose generally showed himself a restless and learned pioneer in the New Poetry movement.

Louis Untermeyer (b. 1885) has edited a fine critical anthology of Modern American Poetry and is himself a good poet, in whom natural opulence has been chastened by self-criticism.

Hilda Doolittle (b. 1886), poetess, married in 1913 Richard Aldington, the English Imagist poet, and settled in England. 'H. D.'s' polished classical art, applied to vers libre, made her the most outstanding of the Imagist group.

John Gould Fletcher (b. 1886), poet and art critic, born in Arkansas, settled in London in 1916. His earlier works—e.g. Irradiations (1915)—overflowing with fantasy, placed him among the Imagists. Later collections, such as Breakers and Granite (1921), are more human in interest.

Ellnor Hoyt Wylie (1887–1928) was a 'metaphysical' poet, the cold brilliance of whose early verse became charged with spiritual experience in Angels and Earthly Creatures (1927).

Edna Ferber (b. 1887) is the novelist par excellence of the American business woman. Roast Beef Medium (1913) tells of a woman commercial traveller, So Big (1924) of a woman farmer. Show Boat (1926) is the story of a theatrical company touring the Mississippi.

Alan Seeger (1888–1916), poet, joined the Foreign Legion, and was killed in action in France. His Poems (1916) and Letters (1917) are full of promise.

Conrad Aiken (b. 1889) is a sensitive critic and the most musical of modern American poets. His pursuit of symphonic effects and absorption in the subconscious have cost him something in concreteness and clearness.

Hervey Allen (b. 1889) had written some poetry and a book on Edgar Allan Poe before attaining his great success with Anthony Adverse (1933). A later book is Action in Aquila (1938).

Marc (Marcus Cook) Connelly (b. 1890) revived the miracle play in The Green Pastures (1930), which tells the Bible story as negroes might conceive it.

Christopher Darlington Morley (b. 1890) is the most popular of modern American essayists, and has written poems, plays, and novels—e.g. Thunder on the Left (1925)—full of breezy humour and fancy.

Edna St Vincent Millay (b. 1892) ere nineteen revealed a remarkable lyric gift in 'Renascence,' which gave its title to her first volume of verse (1917). Figs from Thistles (1920) and Second April (1921) bore out the promise. In 1922 she was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for the best volume of verse. Aria da Capo is a poetic play. She also writes short stories.

Pearl Sydenstricker Buck (b. 1892), born and brought up in China, became the wife of a missionary there, and wrote brilliantly of Chinese rural life in The Good Earth (1930). She won the Nobel prize for literature in 1938.

Francis Scott Key Fitzgerald (b. 1896) writes finished novels and short stories of American society.

John Roderigo Dos Passos (b. 1896) raised a storm by his grim exposé of the lives of American privates in Three Soldiers (1921). His experiments in The Forty-Second Parallel (1930) and Nineteen-Nineteen (1931) are discussed on p. 720. He has also written poems, plays, and travel-books.

Ernest Hemingway (b. 1896) embodied his war-experience in Italy in A Farewell to Arms (1929), and enhanced his reputation as a realist by Death in the Afternoon (1932), describing bull-fighting in Spain. For Whom the Bells Toll appeared in 1940.

William Faulkner (b. 1897) is the most subtle and subjective of the younger realists. In Pylon (1935) he used his R.A.F. experience to illuminate the mentality of aeronauts. Absalom, Absalom! (1936) explores labyrinths of passion in the 'deep South' of the Civil War. The Green Bough (1933) is a volume of poems.

Thornton Wilder (b. 1897) sprang into fame with the original and sophisticated Bridge of San Luis Rey (1927). Heaven's My Destination (1928), with its small-town Don Quixote of a hero, is equally original. The Long Christmas Dinner is an hour's play covering ninety years.

Stephen Vincent Benét (b. 1898) is best known for John Brown's Body (1928), a long narrative poem, in form a medley but epic in its breadth and many-sided presentation of the Civil War.

Margaret Mitchell had immense success in 1936 with Gone with the Wind, a long novel of the Civil War.

INDEX

TO

VOLUMES I., II. AND III.

INDEX

A BECKETT, GILBERT ABBOTT, III. 400.
 A Man's a Man for a' that, by Burns, II. 825.
 Aaron's Rod, by Gillespie, I. 821.
 Abbey Theatre, Dublin, III. 709, 722, 850.
 ABBOTT, EVELYN, III. 841.
 Abdelazer, by Aphra Behn, II. 68.
 ABERCROMBIE, JOHN, III. 242.
 ABERCROMBIE, LASCELLES, III. 715, 722.
 ABERCROMBY, PATRICK, II. 301.
 Abide with me, by H. F. Lyte, III. 271.
 Abraham Lincoln, by Lowell, III. 804; by Drinkwater, III. 848.
 Absalom and Achitophel, by Dryden, I. 793, 795, 796, 798.
 Absentee, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735; by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Abstract of Melancholy, The Author's, by Burton, I. 440.
 Acharnians, trans. by Frere, II. 676, 677.
 Acrasia's Bower of Bliss, by Spenser, I. 299.
 Across the Plains, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697, 702.
 Active Powers, Essays on, by Reid, II. 388.
 ACTON, LORD, III. 684.
 Actor, by Robert Lloyd, II. 612.
 Ad Amicos, by Richard West, II. 422.
 ADAIR, SIR ROBERT, II. 670.
 ADAM, G. M., III. 726.
 ADAM, JEAN, II. 523.
 Adam Bede, by George Eliot, III. 529, 530.
 Adam Blair, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 ADAMNAN, I. 171.
 ADAMS, ARTHUR H., III. 729.
 ADAMS, F. W. L., III. 730.
 ADAMSON, ROBERT, III. 843.
 ADDISON, JOSEPH, II. 3, 212.
 Addison, Elegy on, by T. Tickell, II. 251.
 Addison, Life of, by Lucy Aikin, III. 178.
 ADE, GEORGE, III. 855.
 ADELER, MAX. See CLARK, III. 825.
 Admirable Crichton, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Admiral Guinea, by Henley and Stevenson, III. 695, 699.
 Admirals, Lives of the, by Dr J. Campbell, II. 387.
 Admonition to the True Lords, by George Buchanan, I. 224.
 Adonais, by Shelley, III. 111, 115.
 Advancement of Learning, by Bacon, I. 381.
 Adventurer, The, II. 410.
 Adventures of Mr Verdant Green, by Rev. E. Bradley, III. 624.
 Adversaria, by Porson, II. 637.
 Advice to a Lady, by Lyttelton, II. 349.
 Advice to an Author, by Shaftesbury, II. 167, 168-170.
 Advice to Julia, by Henry Luttrell, II. 765.
 Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, I. 826.
 ADY, MRS HENRY, III. 851.
 'A. E.' (George W. Russell), III. 710.
 Ae Fond Kiss, by Burns, II. 827.
 ALFRED, I. 19, 22.
 ALFRED, I. 26.
 Ælia, by Thomas Chatterton, II. 515.
 Æneid, trans. by Caxton, I. 98; by Pitt, I. 259; by Harrington, I. 620; by Conington, III. 634; by Morris, III. 665; by Gavin Douglas into Scots, I. 202.
 Æolian Harp, by Thoreau, III. 708.
 Æschylus, trans. by Edward FitzGerald, III. 425; by J. S. Blackie, III. 490; ed. by T. Stanley, I. 746.
 Æsop's Fables, trans. by L'Estrange, I. 742.
 Afar in the Desert, by T. Pringle, II. 790.
 Afghanistan, The War in, by Sir J. W. Kaye, III. 482.
 Africa, Travels in the Interior of, by Mungo Park, II. 651.
 African Farm, by Mrs Schreiner, III. 733.
 African Sketches, by T. Pringle, II. 789; III. 733.
 After Dark, by Wilkie Collins, III. 620.
 After Days, by Austin Dobson, III. 689.
 After London, or Wild England, by R. Jefferies, III. 640.

Age of Dryden, by R. Garnett, III. 668.
 Age of Queen Anne, II. 119.
 Age of Reason, by Thomas Paine, II. 559.
 Agincourt, by Drayton, I. 341, 343.
 Agnostic's Apology, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 602.
 Agreeable Surprise, by O'Keefe, II. 656.
 AGUILAR, GRACE, III. 850.
 AIDÉ, HAMILTON, III. 839.
 Aids to Reflection, by Coleridge, III. 62, 63.
 AIKEN, CONRAD, III. 856.
 AIKIN, LUCY, III. 178.
 AINGER, ALFRED, III. 881.
 AINSWORTH, WILLIAM HARRISON, III. 377.
 AIRD, THOMAS, III. 312.
 Ajax and Ulysses, by Shirley I. 487.
 AKENSIDE, MARK, II. 372.
 Alastor, by Shelley, III. 107.
 Albania, edited by John Leyden, II. 440.
 Albert Nyanza, by Sir S. W. Baker, III. 610.
 ALBERRY, JAMES, III. 841.
 Albigenes, by Maturin, II. 753.
 Albion's England, by W. Warner, I. 336.
 Alcæus, An Ode in Imitation of, by Sir W. Jones, II. 616.
 Alchemist, by Ben Jonson, I. 404, 407.
 Alciiphron, by Berkeley, II. 266.
 ALCOTT, AMOS BRONSON, III. 756.
 ALCOTT, LOUISA MAY, III. 757.
 ALCUIN, I. 19; by C. Brockden Brown, III. 743.
 ALDINGTON, RICHARD, III. 849.
 ALDINGTON, MRS RICHARD (Hilda Doo-little), III. 856.
 ALDRICH, HENRY, II. 61.
 ALDRICH, THOMAS BAILEY, III. 824.
 ALEXANDER, CECIL FRANCES, III. 583.
 ALEXANDER, SAMUEL, III. 718, 844.
 ALEXANDER, W. (Earl of Stirling), I. 509.
 ALEXANDER, WILLIAM, III. 839.
 ALEXANDER, DR WILLIAM, III. 584.
 Alexander the Great, by N. Lee, II. 88.
 Alexander's Feast, by Dryden, I. 795.
 Alexandre, Alisaunder, I. 51, 178.
 ALFORD, HENRY, III. 306.
 ALFRED. See ALFRED.
 Alfred, by H. J. Pye, II. 686; by Thomson and Mallet, II. 321, 328, 329.
 Algotquin Legends, by Leland, III. 784.
 Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, by Lewis Carroll, III. 648.
 ALISON, ARCHIBALD, II. 639.
 ALISON, SIR ARCHIBALD, III. 288.
 All Fools, by Chapman, I. 377, 378.
 All for Love, by Dryden, I. 796, 807, 808.
 All Sorts and Conditions of Men, by Sir W. Besant, III. 650.
 All the Year Round, by Dickens, III. 465.
 Allan Quatermain, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 ALLEN, CHARLES GRANT, III. 726, 727.
 ALLEN, HERVEY, III. 856.
 ALLEN, JAMES LAKE, III. 831.
 ALLINGHAM, WILLIAM, III. 605.
 Alliterative Poems, I. 53, 174; Early English, I. 178, 174; Scottish, I. 172, 173.
 Alliterative Romances, I. 51, 172-173.
 All's Well that Ends Well, by Shakespeare, I. 365.
 ALLSTON, WASHINGTON, III. 853.
 Alma, by Matthew Prior, II. 114, 118.
 Almay's Folly, by Conrad, III. 711.
 A.L.O.E. (M. C. Tucker), III. 850.
 Alone in London, by R. Buchanan, III. 656.
 Alonzo the Brave and the Fair Imogene, by M. G. Lewis, II. 751.
 Alphonsus, by Robert Greene, I. 324, 325.
 Alps, Through the, by Forbes, III. 400.
 Althea, To, by Richard Lovelace, I. 638.
 Altiora Peto, by L. Oliphant, III. 636.
 Alton Locke, by Charles Kingsley, III. 513.
 Amadis de Gaul, trans. by Rose, II. 760.
 Amazing Marriage, by Meredith, III. 658.
 Ambassadors, by Henry James, III. 830.
 Ambrosio, or the Monk, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748, 749.

Amelia, by Fielding, II. 341; by Coventry Patmore, III. 602.
 America, History of, by Robertson, II. 382, 384; by W. Russell, II. 388; by J. Fiske, III. 828.
 America, Men and Manners in, by Thomas Hamilton, III. 254.
 America, Society in, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
 America, Travels in North, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
 America, Wanderings in South, by C. Waterton, III. 173.
 American Civil War, by J. W. Draper, III. 825; by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 American Commonwealth, by Lord Bryce, III. 686.
 American Conflict, by Horace Greeley, III. 811.
 American Humour, by Haliburton, III. 726.
 American Literature, III. 734.
 American Literature, by Julian Hawthorne, III. 831.
 American Note-Books, Hawthorne's, III. 780.
 American Notes, by Dickens, III. 465, 769.
 American Ornithology, by Alexander Wilson, II. 812.
 American Revolution, by Sir G. O. Trevelyan, III. 687.
 American Scholar, by Emerson, III. 761.
 American Taxation, by Burke, III. 544.
 American Tragedy, by Theodore Dreiser, III. 835.
 American Wives and English Husbands, by Mrs Atherton, III. 834.
 Americans, Domestic Manners of the, by Frances Trollope, III. 276.
 Among my Books, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802.
 Among the Millet, by A. Lamppan, III. 728.
 Amorette, by Spenser, I. 206, 302.
 Amorous War, by J. Mayne, I. 633.
 AMORY, THOMAS, Memoirs, II. 280.
 Amos Barton, by George Eliot, III. 529, 532.
 Amwell, by John Scott, II. 456.
 Amy Wentworth, by Whittier, III. 775.
 Amynta, by Sir Gilbert Elliot, II. 423.
 Anacreon, trans. by F. Fawkes, II. 421.
 Anacreontiques, by Cowley, I. 643, 645.
 Anahuac, or Mexico and the Mexicans, by Sir E. B. Tylor, III. 663.
 Analecta, by Robert Wodrow, I. 830.
 Analogy of Religion, by J. Butler, II. 269.
 Anastasius, by Thomas Hope, II. 745, 746.
 Anatomie of Humors, by Grahame, I. 818.
 Anatomy of Melancholy, by Burton, I. 435.
 Ancient Inhabitants of Scotland, Critical Essay on the, by Thomas Innes, II. 302.
 Ancient Mariner, by Coleridge, III. 58, 63.
 Ancient Mysteries, by W. Hone, II. 759.
 Ancient Sea Margins, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 Ancient Spanish Ballads, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 Ancrén Riwe, I. 39.
 ANCRUM, EARL OF, I. 509.
 ANDERSON, ALEXANDER, III. 841.
 ANDERSON, SHERWOOD, III. 855.
 Andreas, poem in the Vercelli Book, I. 14.
 ANDREWS, LANCELOT, I. 388.
 Aneurin, I. 3.
 Angel Court, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Angel in the House, by Coventry Patmore, III. 602.
 Angel of the Doves, by Stephens, III. 732.
 Anglican Difficulties, by J. H. Newman, III. 338.
 Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, I. 24, 26, 29.
 Anglo-Saxon Literature, I. 4-29.
 Anglo-Saxons, History of the, by Sharon Turner, II. 639.
 ANGUS, MARION, III. 851.
 Anima Poeta, by Coleridge, III. 62, 71.
 Annabel Lee, by E. A. Poe, III. 787, 789.
 Annales, by Archbishop Usher, I. 441.
 Annals of Peterborough, I. 29.

Index

Annals of the Parish, by John Galt, III. 296, 298.
Annals of Winchester, I. 29.
Annals of Worcester, I. 29.
Ann Veronica, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
Annie Weir, by David Wingate, III. 608.
Annual Register, II. 13, 301, 543.
Annuity, by George Outram, III. 414.
Annus Mirabilis, by Dryden, I. 792, 796.
Anonymous Early Scottish Pieces, I. 208.
Anster Fair, by William Tennant, III. 307.
ANSTREY, CHRISTOPHER, II. 434.
ANSTREY, F. (T. Anstey Guthrie), III. 844.
Anthea, To, by Robert Herrick, I. 562.
Anthologies, Elizabethan, I. 257.
ANTHONY, C. L. (Dodie Smith), III. 852.
Anthropology, by Sir E. Tylor, III. 663.
Anti-Jacobin, II. 668, 669, 670, 672, 673.
Antient Metaphysics, by Lord Monboddo, II. 435.
Antiquary, by Scott, III. 34, 39, 41.
Antonio and Melida, by J. Marston, I. 463.
Antony and Cleopatra, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
Ants, Bees, and Wasps, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
Aphorisms, Moral and Religious, by Benjamin Whichcote, I. 603.
Apologia pro Vita Sua, by J. H. Newman, III. 338, 339.
Apologie for Poetrie, by Sir Philip Sidney, I. 289, 291.
Apology, Barclay's, II. 53.
Apology for his Life, by Colley Cibber, II. 273.
Apostolic Age, by Bishop Lightfoot, III. 625.
Appearance and Reality, by F. H. Bradley, III. 703.
Appius and Virginia, by Webster, I. 426.
Apple Cart, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
Apple Dumplings and a King, by Wolcott, II. 664.
Approaching Age, by Crabbe, II. 608.
Arabia, A Year's Journey through, by W. G. Palgrave, III. 609.
Arabia Deserta, Travels in, by C. M. Doughty, III. 693.
Arabian Nights, trans. by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
Arabic Lexicon, by Edward William Lane, III. 327.
Aratra Pentelici, by Ruskin, III. 571.
ARBER, EDWARD, III. 840.
ARBUTHNOT, JOHN, II. 145.
Arcades, by Milton, I. 687.
Arcadia, by Sir Philip Sidney, I. 288, 290, 292; New, by Madame Duclaux, III. 704.
ARCHER, WILLIAM, III. 844.
Arden of Feversham, I. 334; by George Lillo, II. 276.
Areopagitica, by Milton, I. 688, 707, 709.
Arethusa, by Shelley, III. 112.
Argenis, by John Barclay, I. 159; trans. by Clara Reeve, II. 420.
ARGYLL, THE DUKE OF, III. 613.
Ariadne Florentina, by Ruskin, III. 571.
Arians of the Fourth Century, by J. H. Newman, III. 337.
Ariosto, trans. by Sir John Harington, I. 391; by W. S. Rose, II. 760.
Aristocracy and Evolution, by W. H. Mallock, III. 703.
Aristophanes, trans. by Hookham Frere, II. 676.
Aristotle's Poetics, trans. by H. J. Pye, II. 685.
Arms and the Man, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
ARMSTRONG, JOHN, II. 350.
ARNOLD, MATTHEW, III. 10, 591; Book on, by Prof. Saintsbury, III. 693.
ARNOLD, SIR EDWIN, III. 663.
ARNOLD, THOMAS, III. 202; Life of, by Stanley, III. 394.
Arrah-na-Pogue, by D. Bouicault, III. 585.
Arraignment of Paris, by Peele, I. 240, 321.
Arrows of the Chace, by Ruskin, III. 572.
Arrowsmith, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
Art Journal founded, III. 281.
Art of Dining, by A. Hayward, III. 327.
Art of Politics, by J. Bramston, II. 209, 210.
Art of Preserving Health, by Armstrong, II. 350.
Arte of English Poesie, by G. Puttenham, I. 266.
Arte of Rhetorique, by Sir Thomas Wilson, I. 143.
Artemus Ward, III. 826.
Arthur Bonnicastle, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
Arthur Coningsby, by J. Sterling, III. 270.
Arthur (Le Mort D'Arthur), by Sir Thomas Malory, I. 62.

Arthurian Legend, I. 35; Beginning of, I. 3.
Artists of Spain, by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
Arundel, by Richard Cumberland, II. 562.
As I Laye A-Thynkynge, by R. H. Barham, III. 187.
As Slow our Ship, by Moore, III. 348.
As You Like It, by Shakespeare, I. 367.
ASCHAM, ROGER, I. 120, 144, 237.
ASGILL, JOHN, II. 100.
ASHMOLE, ELIAS, I. 590.
Ashtaroth, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
Asiatic Studies, by Lyall, III. 681.
Ask me no more, by Tennyson, III. 546.
Asolando, by R. Browning, III. 557, 566.
ASQUITH, HENRY HERBERT, EARL OF OXFORD AND ASQUITH, III. 843.
Assembly, by Archibald Pitcairne, II. 103.
Astrea Redux, by Dryden, I. 792, 795.
Astrolabe, by Chaucer, I. 81.
Astrological Prognostication, by Thomas Nash, I. 329.
Astrophel, by Spenser, I. 297, 308; by A. C. Swinburne, III. 874.
Astrophel and Stella, by Sir Philip Sidney, I. 287, 292.
At Last, by Charles Kingsley, III. 514.
At the Mid Hour of Night, by Moore, III. 348.
Atalanta in Calydon, by Swinburne, III. 670-672, 676-677.
Atalantis, by Mrs Manley, II. 96.
Atheist's Tragedy, by Tournour, I. 430.
ATHELARD OF BATH, I. 34.
Athelstane, by John Brown, II. 392.
Athenæ Oxonienses, by A. Wood, I. 749.
Athenæum established by J. S. Bucking-ham, III. 224; edited by C. W. Dilke, III. 259.
Athenaid, by Richard Glover, II. 351.
Athenian Captive, by Sir T. N. Talfourd, III. 272.
ATHERSTONE, EDWIN, III. 146.
ATHERTON, GERTRUDE FRANKLIN, III. 834.
Atlantic Monthly, III. 772, 791, 797, 800, 801, 802, 829.
Atossa, Character of, by Pope, II. 183.
Attaché, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
ATTERBURY, FRANCIS, II. 158.
Atticus, Character of, by Pope, II. 179, 183.
AUBREY, JOHN, I. 747.
Aucassin and Nicolette, trans. by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
AUDEN, WYNSTAN HUGH, III. 724, 840.
Audrey, by Mary Johnston, III. 834.
Augusta, Stanzas to, by Byron, III. 131.
Augustan Age of English Literature, II. 119.
Auld Lang Syne, by Ramsay, II. 315.
Auld Licht Idylls, by Sir J. Barrie, III. 705.
Auld Reekie, by Robert Ferguson, II. 806.
Auld Robin Forbes (in Cumbrian), by Susanna Blamire, II. 802.
Auld Robin Gray, by Lady Anne Barnard, II. 803, 804.
Aurengzebe, by Dryden, I. 797, 807.
Aurora Floyd, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
Aurora Leigh, by Mrs Browning, III. 554, 557, 558, 561.
AUSTEN, JANE, II. 774.
AUSTIN, ALFRED, III. 681.
AUSTIN, DR ADAM, II. 810.
AUSTIN, JOHN, III. 373.
AUSTIN, MRS JOHN, III. 373.
AUSTIN, LUCIE (Lady Duff Gordon), III. 373, 733.
Australasian Literature, III. 729.
Author's Farce, by Fielding, II. 339.
Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791, 792, 794.
Autumn, Ode to, by Keats, III. 101, 105.
Avebury, Lord, III. 663.
Avillion, by Mrs Craik, III. 536.
Ayenbyte of Inwytt, I. 49.
Aylmers, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
Aylwin, by T. Watts-Dunton, III. 669.
Ayrshire Legates, by Galt, III. 297, 298.
AYTON, SIR ROBERT, I. 508.
AYTON, WILLIAM EDMONSTOUNE, III. 475.
Azores, by Raleigh, I. 305, 311.

Dab Ballads, by W. S. Gilbert, III. 694.
Babbitt, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
Babe Christabel, The Ballad of, by Gerald Massey, III. 608.
Babylon, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
Baby's Début, by James Smith, III. 161.
BACHELLER, IRVING, III. 855.
Back to Methuselah, by Shaw, III. 706.
BACON, FRANCIS, I. 380; Letters and Life, by Spedding, III. 397; Personal History, by Hepworth Dixon, III. 578.
BACON, ROGER, I. 34.

Baddington Peerage, by G. A. H. Sala, III. 625.
BÆDA—"The Venerable Bede," I. 18.
BAGE, ROBERT, II. 572.
BAGEHOT, WALTER, III. 630.
BAILEY, PHILIP JAMES, III. 607.
BAILLE, JOANNA, II. 729.
BAILLIE, LADY GRIZEL, III. 311.
BAILLIE, ROBERT, I. 516.
BAIN, ALEXANDER, III. 497.
BAKER, SIR R.—his Chronicle, I. 589.
BAKER, SIR SAMUEL WHITE, III. 610.
Balade of Charitie, by Chatterton, II. 512.
Balder, by Sydney Dobell, III. 603.
Balder Dead, by Matthew Arnold, III. 592.
BALE, JOHN, I. 154.
BALFOUR, EARL OF, III. 842.
BALL, SIR ROBERT STAWELL, III. 841.
Ball, by Shirley and Chapman, I. 496.
Ballad, by C. S. Calverley, III. 639.
Ballad of Agincourt, by Drayton, I. 341, 343.
Ballad of East and West, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
Ballad of Good Counsel, by James I., I. 183.
Ballad of the Revenge, by Tennyson, III. 542.
Ballad Poetry of Ireland, by Sir C. G. Duffy, III. 579, 583.
Ballad upon a Wedding, by Sir J. Suckling, I. 631.
Ballade of the Scottyshe Kyng, by John Skelton, I. 115.
Ballades in Blue China, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
Ballades of Books, by A. Lang, III. 692.
Ballads, I. 520.
Ballads, Ancient Spanish, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
Ballads, by John Davidson, III. 706.
Ballads, "Dagonet," by G. R. Sims, III. 694.
Ballads, Hans Breitmann, III. 784.
Ballads, Poetry of Wonder in Romantic, III. 4.
Ballads and Lyrics of Old France, by A. Lang, III. 692.
Ballads and Metrical Sketches, by Lord de Tabley, III. 650.
Ballads of Ireland, III. 579.
BALLANTINE, JAMES, III. 377.
BALLANTYNE, ROBERT MICHAEL, III. 623, 725.
BANCROFT, GEORGE, III. 755.
BANCROFT, HUBERT HOWE, III. 854.
Bangorian Controversy, II. 42, 245.
BANIM, JOHN, III. 353.
BANIM, MICHAEL, III. 353.
Banishment of Poverty, by Sempill, I. 819.
Banker's Wife, by C. G. F. Gore, III. 279.
Banks of Helicon, by Alexander Montgomerie, I. 233.
Banks o' Doon, by Burns, II. 825.
BANNATYNE, RICHARD, I. 231.
Barbarossa, by John Brown, II. 392.
BARBAROLD, ANNA LETITIA, II. 581.
BARRELLION, W. N. P. (B. F. Cummings), III. 849.
BARBOUR, JOHN, I. 166, 175.
Barchester Towers, by A. Trollope, III. 487.
BARCLAY, ALEXANDER, I. 116.
BARCLAY, JOHN, I. 519.
BARCLAY, ROBERT, II. 53.
Bard, by Thomas Gray, II. 359, 364.
Bardomachia, by Alex. Geddes, II. 799.
Bard's Epitaph, by Burns, II. 821.
Barefoot Boy, by Whittier, III. 775.
BARMAN, RICHARD HARRIS, III. 166.
BARING-GOULD, SABINE, III. 664.
BARKER, GRANVILLE, III. 847.
BARLOW, JANE, III. 851.
BARLOW, JOEL, III. 736, 743.
Barnabé Itinerarium, or Barnabee's Journal, by Brathwaite, I. 488.
Barnaby Rudge, by Dickens, III. 464.
BARNARD, LADY ANNE, II. 803; III. 733.
BARNES, BARNABE, I. 278.
BARNES, WILLIAM, III. 412.
Barneveld, Life of, by Motley, III. 816.
Barney Mahoney, by C. Croker, III. 412.
BARNFIELD, RICHARD, I. 390.
Baron Munchausen, by Rudolf Erich Raspe, II. 714.
BARR, ROBERT, III. 842.
Barrack-Room Ballads, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, III. 705, 722.
Barriers Burned Away, by Ros, III. 825.
BARROW, ISAAC, I. 757.
BARROW, SIR JOHN, II. 754.
BARRY, WILLIAM FRANCIS, III. 842.
Barry Lyndon, by Thackeray, III. 456.

- Bartholomew Fair, by Ben Jonson, I. 404.
BARTON, BERNARD, III. 230.
 Bas Bleu, by Hannah More, II. 577, 579.
 Basiloon Doron, by James I., I. 506.
 Bastard, by Richard Savage, II. 288.
 Battle Day, by Ernest Jones, III. 505.
 Battle Hymn of the Republic, by Julia Ward Howe, III. 827.
 Battle of Beal' an Duine, by Scott, III. 37.
 Battle of Blenheim, by Southey, III. 52.
 Battle of Otterburn, ballad, I. 537.
 Battle of the Baltic, by Campbell, II. 766, 769.
 Battle of the Books, by Swift, II. 123, 126, 139.
 Battlediel, by Bryant, III. 753, 755.
 Baviad, by William Gifford, II. 667.
 BAXTER, ARTHUR BEVERLEY, III. 726.
 BAXTER, RICHARD, I. 664.
 Bay Leaves, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Bay of Biscay, by Andrew Cherry, II. 758.
 Bay Psalm Book, III. 734.
 BAYLY, ADA ELLEN (Edna Lyall), III. 851.
 BAYLY, THOMAS HAYNES, III. 241.
 BAYMONT, BARBARA, III. 851.
 Beachy Head, by Charlotte Smith, II. 593.
 BEACONSFIELD, LORD, III. 435.
 Beating of my Own Heart, by Lord Houghton, III. 382.
 BEATTIE, JAMES, II. 525.
 Beau Austin, by Henley and Stevenson, III. 695, 699.
 Beauchamp's Career, by Meredith, III. 658.
 BEAUMONT, FRANCIS, I. 468.
 BEAUMONT, SIR JOHN, I. 448.
 Beau's Stratagem, by Farquhar, II. 90.
 BEAZLEY, SIR CHARLES RAYMOND, III. 847.
 Bechuana Boy, by Thomas Pringle, II. 790.
 BECKE, LOUIS, III. 730.
 Becket, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 BECKFORD, WILLIAM, II. 620.
 BEDDOES, THOMAS LOVELL, III. 237.
 BEDE, CUTHBERT (Rev. Edward Bradley), III. 624.
 'BEDE, THE VENERABLE,' I. 18.
 Bedouin Love-Song, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Bee, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 490.
 BEECHER, HENRY WARD, III. 813.
 BEECHING, HENRY CHARLES, III. 844.
 BEERBOHM, MAX, III. 847.
 BEESLY, EDWARD SPENCER, III. 840.
 Beggar Man, by Thomas Moss, II. 617.
 Beggar's Opera, by Gay, II. 173, 176.
 BEHN, APHRA, II. 68.
 Being and Attributes of God, by Samuel Clarke, II. 160.
 BEITH, JOHN HAY, III. 847.
 BELASCO, DAVID, III. 855.
 Beleaguered City, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Belford Regis, by Mary Russell Mitford, III. 177.
 Belgium and Western Germany, by Frances Trollope, III. 276.
 BELL, HENRY GLASSFORD, III. 415.
 BELL, HENRY THOMAS MACKENZIE III. 843.
 BELLAMY, EDWARD, III. 831.
 BELLENDEN, JOHN, I. 215.
 BELLOC, HILAIRE, III. 847.
 Bells, by E. A. Poe, III. 786, 787.
 Bells and Pomegranates, by R. Browning, III. 553, 562.
 Belshazzar, by H. H. Milman, III. 208, 211.
 Belvedere, or the Garden of the Muses, I. 258.
 Ben Hur, by Lew Wallace, III. 823.
 Bending of the Bough, by G. Moore, III. 707.
 BENET, STEPHEN VINCENT, III. 856.
 BENNETT, ARNOLD, III. 712, 719.
 BENNETT, WILLIAM COX, III. 548.
 BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER, III. 845.
 BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC, III. 846.
 BENSON, STELLA, III. 852.
 BENTHAM, JEREMY, II. 700.
 Benthamsians, by John Hill Burton, III. 398.
 Bentinck, Life of Lord George, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 438, 440.
 BEWLEY, RICHARD, III. 105.
 Beowulf, I. 4, 5; trans. by William Morris, III. 665.
 Beppo, by Lord Byron, III. 129, 132.
 BERKEFORD, JAMES, II. 740.
 BERKEFORD, JOHN DAVES, III. 847.
 BERKELEY, GEORGE, II. 265.
 Bermudas, Emigrants in the, by Marvell, I. 712.
 BERNERS, DAME JULIANA, I. 99.
 BERNERS, LORD, I. 103.
 BESANT, MRS ANNIE, III. 850.
 BESANT, SIR WALTER, III. 650.
 Besom Ben Stories, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
 Bessy Bell and Mary Gray, by Ramsay, II. 815.
 Beth Gélert, by W. R. Spencer, II. 740.
 BETHAM-EDWARDS, MATILDA BARBARA, III. 850.
 Betsy Lee, by Thos. E. Brown, III. 634.
 Bevis of Hampton, I. 51.
 Bewick (Thomas), by Dobson, III. 688.
 Beyond the Veil, by H. Vaughan, I. 682, 684.
 Bible, Brown's Self-Interpreting, II. 646.
 Bible, Catholic Thoughts on the, by Myers, III. 691.
 Bible, Matthew's, I. 132; Cranmer's, I. 132; Geneva, I. 133, 134; 'Bishops', I. 133, 134, 242; Douay, I. 133; Tyndale's, I. 129, 134; Coverdale's, I. 131, 134; Great, I. 132, 139; of 1611, I. 252.
 Bible, Pictorial, by John Kitto, III. 374.
 Bible, The English, I. 128.
 Bible in Spain, by Borrow, III. 430, 432.
 BICKERSTAFFE, ISAAC, II. 400.
 BIERCE, AMBROSE, III. 832.
 BIGELOW, POULTNEY, III. 854.
 Biglow Papers, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802, 803.
 BILLINGS, JOSH (H. W. Shaw), III. 835.
 Billow and the Rock, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
 BINYON, LAURENCE, III. 713, 722.
 Biographia Britannica Literaria, by Thomas Wright, III. 411.
 Biographia Literaria, by Coleridge, III. 61, 63, 70.
 Biographia Presbyteriana, by P. Walker, II. 101.
 Biographical and Critical Essays, by Abraham Hayward, III. 327.
 Biographical History of England, by James Granger, II. 388.
 Biography, Contemporary, by Bryce, III. 687.
 Biography, Dictionary of National, III. 682, 707.
 BIRD, ROBERT MONTGOMERY, III. 853.
 Birks of Invermay, by D. Mallet, II. 330.
 BIRRELL, AUGUSTINE, III. 842.
 Birth of Balder, by Buchanan, III. 656.
 Birth of Merlin, by Rowley, I. 478.
 Birth-night Ball, Elegy on the, by Catherine Maria Fanshawe, II. 739.
 BISHOP, MRS ISABELLA L., III. 850.
 BISHOP, SAMUEL, II. 533.
 Bishops of Scotland, Catalogue of the, by Robert Keith, II. 305.
 Bit o' Writin', by John Banim, III. 354.
 Bitter-Sweet, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 BLACK, WILLIAM, III. 691.
 Black Arrow, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Black Rock, by Ralph Connor, III. 728.
 Black-eyed Susan, by John Gay, II. 174, 176; by Douglas Jerrold, III. 328.
 BLACKIE, JOHN STUART, III. 490.
 BLACKLOCK, THOMAS, II. 438.
 BLACKMORE, RICHARD DODDRIDGE, III. 622.
 BLACKMORE, SIR RICHARD, I. 732; II. 107.
 BLACKSTONE, SIR WILLIAM, II. 438.
 BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON, III. 847.
 BLAIR, HUGH, II. 534.
 BLAIR, ROBERT, II. 305.
 Blake, Robert, by Hepworth Dixon, III. 578.
 BLAKE, WILLIAM, II. 717; III. 6.
 Blake (William), a Critical Essay, by Swinburne, III. 671.
 BLAMIRE, SUSANNA, II. 801.
 BLANCHARD, EDWARD LAMAN, III. 331.
 BLANCHARD, LAMAN, III. 331.
 Blank Verse introduced by Surrey, I. 162.
 Bleak House, by Dickens, III. 465.
 Blessed Damozel, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 641, 643.
 BLESSINGTON, THE COUNTESS OF, III. 278.
 BLIND, MATHILDE, III. 850.
 Blind Beggar of Alexandria, by Chapman, I. 377.
 Blind Beggar of Bednal Green, by John Day, I. 420.
 Blind Boy, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 BLIND HARRY, I. 166, 186.
 Blithedale Romance, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 BLOOMFIELD, ROBERT, II. 687.
 Blot in the 'Scutcheon, by R. Browning, III. 553, 559.
 Blue Fairy Book, by A. Lang, III. 682.
 Blue-beard, by Reginald Heber, III. 213.
 BLUNDEN, EDMUND CHARLES, III. 849.
 BLUNT, WILFRID SCAWEN, III. 691.
 Blythsme Bridal, by Sempill, I. 819.
 Bob Burke's Duel, by William Maginn, III. 260, 261.
 BODLEY, J. E. C., III. 843.
 BOEZE, HECTOR, I. 212.
 Boer War, by Sir Conan Doyle, III. 707.
 Boethius's De Consolatione Philosophiæ, trans. by Ælfred, I. 21; trans. by Chaucer, I. 63, 82.
 BOKER, GEORGE HENRY, III. 853.
 BOLDREWOOD, ROLF (T. A. Brown), III. 730, 732.
 BOLINGROKE, LORD, HENRY ST JOHN, II. 202.
 Bombastes Furioso, by Rhodes, II. 710.
 Bon Gaultier Ballads, III. 476, 477.
 Bonduca, by Fletcher, I. 468, 471.
 Book of Days, by R. Chambers, III. 316.
 Book of Martyrs, Foxe's, I. 251.
 Book of Nonsense, by E. Lear, III. 657.
 Book of Pluscarden, I. 208.
 Book of St Albans, by Dame Juliana Berners, I. 99.
 Book of the Beginnings, by G. Massey, III. 698.
 Book of the Native, by Sir C. G. D. Roberts, III. 728.
 Book-Hunter, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
 Books and Bookmen, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Books and Libraries, by Lowell, III. 805.
 BOORDE, ANDREW, I. 148.
 BOOTH, BARTON, II. 290.
 BOOTHBY, GUY, III. 730.
 Border Minstrelsy, by Scott, III. 7, 31, 33.
 Borough, by G. Crabbe, II. 694, 697.
 BORROW, GEORGE HENRY, III. 429.
 BOSTON, THOMAS, II. 302.
 BOSWELL, JAMES, II. 10, 468.
 BOSWELL, SIR ALEXANDER, II. 830.
 Botanic Garden, by Erasmus Darwin, II. 572, 573.
 Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich, by A. H. Clough, III. 511.
 Bothwell, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 671.
 BOTTOMLEY, GORDON, III. 714, 722.
 BOUCAULT, DION, III. 585.
 Bouquet of Dainty Conceits, I. 257.
 BOURINOT, SIR JOHN GEORGE, III. 726, 727.
 BOWDLER, THOMAS, II. 753.
 BOWER, ARCHIBALD, II. 387.
 BOWER, WALTER, I. 182.
 BOWES-LYON, LILIAN, III. 852.
 BOWLES, CAROLINE ANNE (Mrs Southey), III. 55.
 BOWLES, WILLIAM LISLE, II. 721.
 Bow-Meeting Songs, by Reginald Heber, III. 213.
 BOWRING, SIR JOHN, III. 271.
 BOYD, ANDREW KENNEDY HUTCHISON III. 624.
 BOYD, ZACHARY, I. 514.
 Boy David, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 BOYES, ABEL, II. 387.
 BOYLE, ROBERT, I. 726.
 BOYLE, ROGER, I. 787.
 Boyne Water, by Michael and John Banim, III. 353.
 Bracebridge Hall, by Irving, III. 745, 746.
 BRACKEN, THOMAS, III. 729.
 BRACTON, HENRY DE, I. 34.
 BRADDON, MARY ELIZABETH, III. 690.
 BRADLEY, ANDREW CECIL, III. 707.
 BRADLEY, EDWARD, III. 624.
 BRADLEY, FRANCIS HERBERT, III. 708.
 BRADLEY, KATHARINE H. ('Michael Field'), III. 704.
 BRADY, NICHOLAS, II. 60.
 Braes o' Balquhither, by Tannahill, II. 829.
 Braes o' Gleniffer, by Tannahill, II. 829.
 Braes of Yarrow, by W. Hamilton, II. 310; by John Logan, II. 532.
 Braid Claith, by Robert Fergusson, II. 806.
 Bramble Flower, To the, by Ebenezer Elliot, III. 232.
 BRAMSTON, JAMES, II. 209.
 BRATHWAITE, RICHARD, I. 488.
 Brave New World, by Aldous Huxley, III. 716.
 Bravo of Venice, by Lewis, II. 748, 749.
 BRAY, MRS, III. 279.
 Bread-Winners, III. 825.
 Break, break, break, by Tennyson, III. 541, 545.
 Bredfield Hall, by E. FitzGerald, III. 428.
 BREITMANN, HANS. See LELAND.
 BRETON, NICHOLAS, I. 275.
 BREWSTER, SIR DAVID, III. 242.
 Bric-a-brac, by W. E. Henley, III. 695.
 Bridal, by Tennyson, III. 540, 543.
 Bride of Lammermoor, by Scott, III. 30, 81.
 Bride's Tragedy, by T. L. Beddoes, III. 287.
 Bridge of Sighs, by Hood, III. 138.
 BRIDGES, ROBERT, III. 698, 722.
 BRIDIE, JAMES (Dt O. H. Mavor), III. 848.
 Brief Discourse concerning the Different Wits of Men, by Walter Charleton, I. 744.

- Brief History of the Times, by L'Estrange, I. 741, 743.
- Brigadier Gerard, by Sir Conan Doyle, III. 707.
- BRIGHT, JOHN, III. 839.
- Bristowe Tragedie, by Chatterton, II. 513.
- Britannia, by Camden, I. 268.
- Britannia's Pastorals, by William Browne, I. 489, 490.
- British Georgics, by Grahame, II. 689, 690.
- British India, History of, by James Mill, II. 757.
- British Painters, Lives of, by Allan Cunningham, III. 303.
- British Palæozoic Fossils, by Sedgwick, III. 202.
- British Poets, Specimens of the, by Campbell, II. 766.
- British Prison-ship, by P. Freneau, III. 736.
- British Quarterly founded, III. 271.
- Broad Grins, by Colman, II. 656, 659-661.
- BROKE, ARTHUR, I. 237, 263.
- Broken Heart, by John Ford, I. 481, 482.
- BROME, RICHARD, I. 487.
- BRONTË, ANNE, III. 528.
- BRONTË, CHARLOTTE, III. 520.
- BRONTË, EMILY JANE, III. 525.
- Brontë, Emily, by Mme. Duclaux, III. 704.
- Brontë, Life of Charlotte, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
- Brook Farm, III. 777, 778, 781.
- BROOKE, CHARLOTTE, II. 396.
- BROOKE, HENRY, II. 396.
- BROOKE, LORD, I. 354.
- BROOKE, RUPERT, III. 848.
- BROOKE, STOPFORD AUGUSTUS, III. 662.
- BROOKS, C. W. SHIRLEY, III. 492.
- BROOKS, PHILLIPS, III. 825.
- BROOKS, VAN WYCK, III. 836.
- BROOME, WILLIAM, II. 199.
- Brothers, by Wordsworth, III. 16.
- BROUGHAM, LORD, III. 189.
- BROUGHTON, RHODA, III. 690.
- BROWN, CHARLES BROCKDEN, III. 743.
- BROWN, DR JOHN, III. 449.
- BROWN, GEORGE DOUGLAS, III. 847.
- BROWN, JOHN, II. 391.
- BROWN, JOHN, of Haddington, II. 646.
- BROWN, PETER HUME, III. 842.
- BROWN, THOMAS, II. 761.
- BROWN, THOMAS EDWARD, III. 634.
- BROWN, TOM, II. 78.
- Brown Jug, by Francis Fawkes, II. 421.
- BROWNE, CHARLES FARRAR, III. 826.
- BROWNE, ISAAC HAWKINS, II. 287.
- BROWNE, SIR THOMAS, I. 590.
- BROWNE, THOMAS ALEXANDER, III. 732.
- BROWNE, WILLIAM, I. 489.
- BROWNELL, WILLIAM CRARY, III. 854.
- Brownie of Blednoch, by William Nicholson, III. 306.
- BROWNING, ELIZABETH BARRETT, III. 549, 557.
- BROWNING, OSCAR, III. 840.
- BROWNING, ROBERT, III. 9, 549, 558.
- BRUCE, JAMES, II. 649.
- BRUCE, MICHAEL, II. 528.
- Bruce, by Barbour, I. 176.
- Bruce, by John Davidson, III. 706.
- Brunanburh, Battle of, I. 23, 26.
- BRUNTON, MARY, II. 772.
- Brut, by Layamon, I. 3, 35.
- Brut d'Angleterre, by Wace, I. 35.
- Brutus Ultor, by Michael Field, III. 704.
- BRYANT, JACOB, II. 391.
- BRYANT, WILLIAM CULLEN, III. 753.
- BRUCE, GEORGE, III. 726.
- BRUCE, LORD, III. 686.
- BRYDGES, SIR SAMUEL EGERTON, II. 714.
- Brythonic Invasion of England, I. 2, 831.
- Bubbles from the Brunns of Nassau, by Sir Francis Bond Head, III. 266.
- Bubbles of the Day, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 328, 329.
- Buccaneer, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
- BUCHAN, ANNA, III. 852.
- BUCHAN, JOHN, III. 847.
- BUCHANAN, GEORGE, I. 166, 222.
- BUCHANAN, ROBERT, III. 655.
- BUCKINGHAM, DUKE OF (George Villiers), I. 788.
- BUCKINGHAM, DUKE OF (John Sheffield), II. 106.
- BUCKINGHAM, JAMES SILK, III. 224.
- BUCKLAND, FRANCIS TREVELYAN, III. 590.
- BUCKLE, HENRY THOMAS, III. 611.
- BUDGELL, EUSTACE, II. 242.
- Budget of Paradoxes, by A. de Morgan, III. 398.
- Bulk of Alexander, by Barbour (?), I. 178.
- Buke of the Howlat, by Holland, I. 174.
- Bull, John, by Arbutnot, II. 146; by Colman, II. 656.
- BULLEN, ARTHUR HENRY, III. 844.
- BULLEN, FRANK THOMAS, III. 844.
- Bulletin School, III. 729.
- BULWER, EDWARD. See LYTTON, LORD.
- BULWER, HENRY LYTTON, III. 336.
- Buncle, John, by Thomas Amory, II. 280.
- Bundle of Letters, by Henry James, III. 830.
- BUNNER, HENRY CUYLER, III. 855.
- BUNYAN, JOHN, I. 719, 734.
- BURCKHARDT, JOHN LEWIS, III. 266.
- Burden of Nineveh, by Rossetti, III. 643.
- Burger's Lenore, trans. by Taylor, II. 712.
- BURGHCLERE, LADY, III. 851.
- BURGIN, GEORGE B., III. 843.
- BURGOVNE, GENERAL, II. 670.
- Burial March of Dundee, by W. E. Aytoun, III. 476.
- Burial of Sir John Moore, by Charles Wolfe, II. 788, 789.
- BURKE, EDMUND, II. 543; Life of, by Morley, III. 686.
- BURNAND, SIR FRANCIS COWLEY, III. 694.
- BURNET, DR THOMAS, II. 28.
- BURNET, GILBERT, II. 30.
- BURNETT, FRANCES HODGSON, III. 833.
- BURNEY, FANNY (Madame D'Arblay), II. 586; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
- Burning Babe, by Southwell, I. 337, 338.
- BURNS, ROBERT, II. 814; III. 6; Life and Works of, by Robert Chambers, III. 316; Life of, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250; ed. by Henley and Henderson, III. 695; To the Memory of, by Campbell, II. 771; by Sir A. Boswell, II. 832; Wordsworth on, III. 28.
- Burnt Njal, Saga of, trans. by Sir G. W. Dasent, III. 499.
- BURROUGHS, JOHN, III. 824.
- BURTON, JOHN HILL, III. 398.
- BURTON, ROBERT, I. 435.
- BURTON, SIR RICHARD FRANCIS, III. 609; Life of, by Lady Burton, III. 610.
- BURY, JOHN B., III. 845.
- BURY, LADY CHARLOTTE, II. 772.
- BURY, RICHARD DE, I. 34.
- Bush aboon Traquair, by R. Crawford, II. 317.
- Bush Ballads, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
- BUTLER, JOSEPH, II. 269.
- BUTLER, SAMUEL, I. 731, 735.
- BUTLER, SAMUEL, III. 624, 730.
- BUTLER, SIR WILLIAM FRANCIS, III. 841.
- Bylow Hill, by G. W. Cable, III. 830.
- By Proxy, by James Payn, III. 634.
- BYRD, WILLIAM, III. 735.
- BYRON, JOHN, II. 278.
- BYRON, HENRY JAMES, III. 637.
- BYRON, LORD, III. 8, 118; Life of, by Moore, III. 347; by Henry Lytton Bulwer, III. 336; Conversations with, by the Countess of Blessington, III. 278.
- BYSSSET, ABRAHAM, I. 231.
- Byzantine Empire, by G. Finlay, III. 217.
- Ca' the Yowes to the Knowes, by Isobel Pagan, II. 810.
- Cabbages and Kings, by O. Henry (W. S. Porter), III. 833.
- CABELL, JAMES BRANCH, III. 836.
- CABLE, GEORGE WASHINGTON, III. 829.
- Cadenus and Vanessa, by Swift, II. 128.
- CÆDMON, I. 9, 12.
- Cæsar, a Sketch, by J. A. Froude, III. 502.
- CAFFYN, KATHLEEN MANNINGTON, III. 851.
- CAINE, SIR HALL, III. 843.
- CAIRD, EDWARD, III. 625.
- CAIRD, JOHN, III. 625.
- CAIRD, MRS MONA, III. 851.
- Calamus, by Walt Whitman, III. 807.
- CALAMY, EDMUND, I. 586.
- CALDERWOOD, DAVID, I. 513.
- Caleb Stukely, by Samuel Phillips, III. 482.
- Caleb Williams, by W. Godwin, II. 702, 704.
- Caledonia, by George Chalmers, II. 636.
- Call to the Unconverted, by Baxter, I. 665.
- Caller Herrin', by Lady Nairne, II. 828.
- Callirrhoe, by Michael Field, III. 704.
- Callista, by John Henry Newman, III. 337.
- CALVERLEY, CHARLES STUART, III. 638.
- CAMBRIDGE, ADA, III. 730, 732.
- Cambridge Modern History, planned by Lord Acton, III. 684, 718.
- CAMDEN, WILLIAM, I. 268.
- CAMERON, GEORGE FREDERICK, III. 726.
- Cameronian's Dream, by J. Hyslop, III. 310.
- Camoens, trans. by W. J. Mickle, II. 522, 524; by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
- Campaign, by Addison, I. 213, 216.
- Campaspe, by Lyly, I. 315.
- CAMPBELL, DR JOHN, II. 387.
- CAMPBELL, GEORGE, II. 427.
- CAMPBELL, JAMES DYKES, III. 841.
- CAMPBELL, JOHN FRANCIS, III. 686.
- CAMPBELL, LEWIS, III. 661.
- CAMPBELL, LORD, III. 101.
- CAMPBELL, ROY DUNNACHIE, III. 733, 849.
- CAMPBELL, THOMAS, II. 765.
- CAMPBELL, WILLIAM WILFRED, III. 726, 728.
- CAMPION, THOMAS, I. 274, 400.
- Canada, English Literature in, III. 725.
- Canada, History of, by W. Kingsford, III. 727.
- Canada, Old Régime in, by Parkman, III. 818.
- Canada, Political Destiny of, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
- Canada's Intellectual Strength and Weakness, by Bourinot, III. 727.
- Canadian Boat Song, III. 298, 725.
- CANFIELD, DOROTHY (Dorothea Frances Canfield Fisher), III. 834.
- CANNAN, GILBERT, III. 848.
- CANNING, GEORGE, II. 672.
- Canoe and Saddle, by Winthrop, III. 823.
- Canterbury, Historical Memorials of, by A. P. Stanley, III. 394.
- Canterbury Tales, by Chaucer, I. 62, 64, 68, 70, 71-74, 81; fac-simile, I. 73.
- Canterbury Tales, by Sophie and Harriet Lee, II. 653, 654.
- Canute the Great, by Michael Field, III. 704.
- Cape Cod, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 796.
- CAPIES, BERNARD, III. 847.
- CAPGRAVE, JOHN, I. 89.
- Captain Digby Grand, by G. J. Whyte-Melville, III. 685.
- Captain Macklin, by R. H. Davis, III. 832.
- Captain Masters's Children, by T. Hood, III. 668.
- Captain's Toll-gate, by F. R. Stockton, III. 824.
- Caractacus, by William Mason, II. 426, 427.
- Cardiphonia, by John Newton, II. 614.
- Careless Content, by John Byrom, II. 279.
- Carew, Lady Elizabeth. See CAREY, LADY ELIZABETH.
- CAREW, RICHARD, I. 353.
- CAREW, THOMAS, I. 568.
- CAREY, HENRY, II. 330.
- CAREY, HENRY CHARLES, III. 853.
- CAREY, LADY ELIZABETH, I. 490.
- CAREY, SIR ROBERT, I. 396.
- Carissima, by Mrs Harrison, III. 704.
- CARLETON, WILLIAM, III. 352.
- CARLYLE, ALEXANDER, II. 414; his autobiography, II. 414.
- CARLYLE, DR JOHN, III. 402.
- CARLYLE, THOMAS, III. 401.
- Carlyle, Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh, III. 404, 405.
- Carlyle, Letters to Mrs, by G. E. Jewsbury, III. 520.
- Carlyle Personally and in his Writings, by Masson, III. 633.
- Carlyle's Reminiscences, by J. A. Froude, III. 502.
- CARMAN, WILLIAM BLISS, III. 726, 728.
- Carmina Votiva, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
- Carols from the Coalfields, by Skipsey, III. 608.
- CARPENTER, EDWARD, III. 841.
- CARR, JOSEPH WILLIAMS COMYNS, III. 842.
- CARRINGTON, NOEL THOMAS, II. 760.
- CARROLL, LEWIS (C. L. Dodgson), III. 648.
- CARRUTHERS, ROBERT, III. 315.
- CARTER, THOMAS, II. 244.
- CARTER, MRS ELIZABETH, II. 417.
- CARTON, R. C. (Richard Claude Critchett), III. 717.
- CARTWRIGHT, JULIA (Mrs Ady), III. 851.
- CARTWRIGHT, WILLIAM, I. 634.
- CARY, ALICE, III. 827.
- CARY, HENRY FRANCIS, II. 755.
- CARY, PHOEBE, III. 827.
- CARY (CAREY), SIR ROBERT, I. 396.
- Casaubon, by Mark Pattison, III. 480.
- Cash, Corn, and Catholics, Odes on, by Moore, III. 347, 349.
- Cashel Byron's Profession, by G. B. Shaw, III. 705.
- Castara, by William Habington, I. 571.
- Castaway, by Cowper, II. 602, 608.
- Caste, by T. W. Robertson, III. 637.
- Castell of Perseverance, Morality Play, I. 111.
- Cast's Animal Parlanti, trans. by William Stewart Rose, II. 760.
- CASTLE, ROBERT, III. 844.
- Castle of Indolence, by Thomson, II. 321, 326-328.

- Castle of Otranto, by Walpole, II. 411, 414.
 Castle Rackrent, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735.
 Castle Spectre, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748.
 Catarina to Camoens, by E. B. Browning, III. 557, 560.
 Catechism, Archbishop Hamilton's, I. 218.
 Cathedral, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802.
 CATHER, WILLA SIBERT, III. 834.
 Catherine, by Thackeray, III. 455.
 Catholicism in England; Catholics, Present Position of, by John Henry Newman, III. 339.
 Catiline, by Ben Jonson, I. 402, 405.
 Cato, by Addison, II. 213, 217.
 Catrona, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Caudle's Curtain Lectures, Mrs, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 329.
 CAVE, EDWARD, II. 244.
 CAVENDISH, GEORGE, I. 140.
 CAXTON, WILLIAM, I. 95.
 Caxton's Successors, I. 101.
 Caxtons, by Lord Lytton, III. 332, 335.
 Cecil, by C. G. F. Gore, III. 279.
 Cecilia, by Fanny Burney, II. 587.
 Celestial Passion, by R. W. Gilder, III. 831.
 Celt, Roman, and Saxon, by Thomas Wright, III. 411.
 Celtic Influences on English Literature, I. 1, 831; III. 709.
 Celtic Languages, Divisions of, I. 2.
 Celtic Literature, On the Study of, by M. Arnold, III. 593, 598.
 Celtic Scotland, by W. F. Skene, III. 399.
 Celtic Twilight, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 Cenci, by P. B. Shelley, III. 109.
 CENTLIFF, SUSANNAH, II. 96.
 Central Africa, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Centuries of Meditations, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Century After, by Stoddard, III. 823.
 Century Magazine, III. 778.
 Century of Roundels, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 Century of Science, by Fiske, III. 829.
 Cevennes, Travels with a Donkey in the, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697.
 Ceylon, Eight Years' Wanderings in, by Sir S. W. Baker, III. 610.
 CHADWICK, JOHN WHITE, III. 854.
 CHAILLU, PAUL BELLONI DU, III. 840.
 Chaldee MS., III. 292.
 CHALKHILL, JOHN, I. 443.
 CHALMERS, GEORGE, II. 636.
 CHALMERS, THOMAS, III. 187.
 CHALONER, SIR THOMAS, I. 265.
 Chambered Nautilus, by O. W. Holmes, III. 792.
 CHAMBERLAYNE, WILLIAM, I. 744.
 CHAMBERS, CHARLES HADDON, III. 730, 845.
 CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM, III. 832.
 CHAMBERS, WILLIAM AND ROBERT, III. 315.
 Chambers's Cyclopædia of English Literature, I. preface; III. 315.
 Chambers's Encyclopædia, III. 315.
 Chambers's Journal, III. 285, 288, 315, 658, 678.
 Chameleon, by James Merrick, II. 420.
 CHAMIER, FREDERICK, III. 259.
 Chance, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Chance Acquaintances, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 Chancellors, Lives of the, by Lord Campbell, III. 191.
 Changeling, by T. Middleton, I. 459, 471.
 CHANNING, WILLIAM ELLERY, III. 743.
 Channings, by Mrs H. Wood, III. 520.
 Chansons de Geste, I. 37.
 CHAPMAN, GEORGE, I. 377.
 Chapman (George), a Critical Essay, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 CHAPONE, HENRY, II. 418.
 Chapter of Accidents, by Sophia Lee, II. 658.
 Character of a Trimmer, by the Marquis of Halifax, I. 766.
 Character of the Happy Warrior, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 25.
 Characteristics, by Shaftesbury, II. 167, 168.
 Characters, Hall's, I. 417; Overbury's, I. 442; Earle's, I. 577.
 Charles I., Memoirs of the Court of, by Lucy Aldin, III. 178.
 Charles O'Malley, by Lever, III. 359, 362.
 Charles V., History of the Reign of, by William Robertson, II. 382, 383, 387; III. 766.
 Charles V., The Cloister Life of, by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
 CHARLETON, WALTER, I. 743.
 Chartism, by Carlyle, III. 404.
 Chase, by William Somersville, II. 300.
 Chastelard, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 670, 674.
 CHATHAM, THE EARL OF (WILLIAM PITT), II. 389.
 Chatham, Essay on the Earl of, by Macaulay, III. 371.
 CHATTERTON, THOMAS, II. 512; III. 6.
 CHAUCE, GEOFFREY, I. 59.
 Chaucer, Life of, by William Godwin, II. 702.
 Chaucer's Influence on Scottish Literature, I. 166, 504.
 Chaucer's Prose, I. 81.
 Chaucer's Successors, I. 70.
 Cheer, Boys! Cheer! by C. Mackay, III. 481.
 Cheerful Yesterdays, by T. W. Higginson, III. 811.
 CHEKE, SIR JOHN, I. 142.
 Chemical History of a Candle, by Faraday, III. 243.
 Cherrie and the Slae, by Alexander Montgomerie, I. 233.
 CHERRY, ANDREW, II. 758.
 Cherry Ripe, by Campion, I. 401; by Herrick, I. 561, 563.
 CHESNEY, SIR GEORGE TOMKINS, III. 840.
 Chess, Game of, by Caxton, I. 95.
 CHESTERFIELD, EARL OF, II. 291; Johnson's Letters to, II. 458.
 CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH, III. 711, 718, 724.
 CHETLE, HENRY, I. 334.
 CHRYNE, THOMAS KELLY, III. 841.
 CHILD, LYDIA MARIA, III. 757.
 Child Harold's Pilgrimage, by Byron, III. 120, 121, 122, 126, 135.
 Child-hood, by Henry Vaughan, I. 684.
 Child of Nature, by R. Buchanan, III. 656.
 Child of Quality, To a, by Matthew Prior, II. 115.
 Children of Adam, by Whitman, III. 806, 808.
 Child's Garden of Verse, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 CHILLINGWORTH, WILLIAM, I. 586.
 Chimney Corner, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
 Chimney-Sweeper, by Blake, II. 719.
 Chims from a German Workshop, by Max-Müller, III. 661.
 Chivalry and Romance, Letters on, by Richard Hurd, II. 428.
 Choice, by John Pimfort, II. 112.
 CHOLMONDELEY, MARY, III. 851.
 CHORLEY, HENRY FOTHERGILL, III. 273.
 Chris of all Sorts, by Baring-Gould, III. 604.
 Christabel, by Coleridge, III. 7, 58, 61, 65.
 Christiadi, by Henry Kirke White, II. 729.
 Christian Doctrine, by Milton, I. 691.
 Christian Evidences, by Porteus, II. 646.
 Christian Hero, by Steele, II. 228.
 Christian Evidences, by Paley, II. 643; by Baden Powell, III. 323.
 Christianity, Importance of, by Price, II. 428.
 Christianity, Practical View of, by William Wilberforce, II. 646.
 Christianity not Mysterious, by Toland, II. 161.
 Christian Poetry, Beginning of, I. 9.
 Christian Year, by John Keble, III. 215.
 CHRISTIE, ROBERT, III. 726.
 Christie Johnstone, by Reade, III. 483.
 Christmas, by G. Wither, I. 409, 501.
 Christopher North, Recreations of, by John Wilson, III. 247.
 Christ's Kirk on the Green. See CHRYSTIS KIRK OF THE GRENE.
 Christ's Victorie and Triumph, by Giles Fletcher, I. 446, 447.
 Chronicle of England, by Capgrave, I. 89.
 Chronicles and Romances, I. 42.
 Chronicles of Holinshed, I. 255.
 Chronologia Sacra, by Ussher, I. 441.
 Chrononhotontologos the Great, by Henry Carey, II. 330, 331.
 Chrysal, by Johnstone, II. 410.
 Chrysaor, by Longfellow, III. 770, 771.
 Chrystis Kirk of the Grene, I. 210, 211; not by James I., I. 183; continuation of, by Allan Ramsay, II. 313, 316.
 CHUBB, THOMAS, II. 165.
 CHURCH, RICHARD WILLIAM, III. 577.
 Church Government, by Milton, I. 688, 704.
 CHURCHILL, CHARLES, II. 495.
 CHURCHILL, WINSTON, III. 832.
 CHURCHILL, Rt. Hon. WINSTON SPENCER, III. 714.
 CHURCHYARD, THOMAS, I. 265.
 CIBBER, COLLEY, II. 272.
 Cicero, Life of, by Middleton, II. 246.
 Cicero's Letters, trans. by Melmoth, II. 391.
 Cid and the Leper, by Lockhart, III. 251.
 Circle, by Somerset Maugham, III. 715.
 Cities of the Past, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
 Citizen of the World, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 491-493.
 City: its Sins and Sorrows, by Thomas Guthrie, III. 342.
 City Dead-House, by Whitman, III. 810.
 City Madam, by Massinger, I. 404, 466.
 City Match, by Mayne, I. 633.
 City Mouse and Country Mouse, by Prior and Montagu, II. 113.
 City Night-Piece, by Goldsmith, II. 490.
 City of Dreadful Night, by James Thomson, III. 654, 665.
 City of the Plague, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 City of the Saints, by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
 City Poems, by Alexander Smith, III. 604.
 Civil Liberty and the War with America, by Price, II. 428-430.
 Civil Society, Essay on, by Ferguson, II. 430.
 Civil War, Causes of the, by Motley, III. 815.
 Civil War and the Commonwealth, I. 542.
 Civil Wars between York and Lancaster, History of the, by S. Daniel, I. 339, 340.
 Civilisation, Origin of, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
 Civilisation and Progress, by J. B. Crozier, III. 727.
 Civilisation in England, History of, by Buckle, III. 611.
 Clan Albin, by Christian Isobel Johnstone, II. 772.
 CLANVOWE, SIR THOMAS, I. 80.
 CLARE, JOHN, III. 233.
 CLARENDON, LORD, I. 652.
 Clarissa, by Richardson, II. 295, 297.
 CLARK, CHARLES HEBER, III. 825.
 CLARKE, EDWARD DANIEL, II. 714.
 CLARKE, FRANCES E. (Sarah Grand), III. 851.
 CLARKE, MARCUS, III. 730, 731.
 CLARKE, SAMUEL, II. 150.
 Clayhanger, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 Cleanness, alliterative poem, I. 54, 174.
 Cleansing Fires, by Adelaide Ann Procter, III. 528.
 CLELAND, WILLIAM, I. 828.
 CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE, III. 826.
 Clement Lorimer, by A. B. Reach, III. 505.
 Cleomenes, by Dryden, I. 706, 806, 807.
 CLERK OF TRANENT, I. 174.
 Clerk Saunders, I. 535.
 CLEVELAND, JOHN, I. 636.
 CLIFFORD, MRS W. K., III. 851.
 CLIFFORD, WILLIAM KINGDON, III. 841.
 Clockmaker, by T. C. Halliburton, III. 726.
 Cloister and the Hearth, by Reade, III. 483.
 Cloister Life of the Emperor Charles V., by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
 Cloud, by Shelley, III. 112.
 Cloud Confines, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 645.
 Cloudesley, by William Godwin, II. 703.
 CLOUGH, ARTHUR HUGH, III. 511.
 Clough Fionn, by Michael Banim, III. 353.
 Clovenook Papers, by Alice Cary, III. 827.
 Clyde, by John Wilson, II. 440.
 Clytemnestra, by the Earl of Lytton, III. 638.
 COBBE, FRANCES POWER, III. 536.
 COBBETT, WILLIAM, II. 681.
 Cobden, Life of, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Cock Lane and Common Sense, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 COCKBURN, HENRY, III. 313.
 COCKBURN, MRS, II. 796.
 Cocklebie's Sow, I. 209.
 COCKTON, HENRY, III. 490.
 Cocks in Search of a Wife, by Hannah More, II. 577, 579-581.
 Cælium Britannicum, by T. Carew, I. 569.
 COFFEY, CHARLES, II. 338.
 Cola Monti, by Mrs Craik, III. 536.
 COLENO, BISHOP, III. 452.
 COLERIDGE, ERNEST HARTLEY, III. 842.
 COLERIDGE, HARTLEY, III. 72.
 COLERIDGE, MARY E., III. 851.
 COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR, III. 7, 56.
 COLERIDGE, SARAH, III. 72.
 COLET, JOHN, I. 120.
 Colin and Lucy, by T. Tickell, II. 251, 252.
 Colin and Phebe, by John Byron, II. 279.
 Colin Clout's come Home again, by Spenser, I. 294, 296, 301.
 Colin's Complaint, by N. Rowe, II. 95.
 Collar, by George Herbert, I. 497.
 Colleen Bawn, by Dion Boucicault, III. 367, 686.
 Collegians, by Gerald Griffin, III. 357.
 COLLIER, JEREMY, I. 734; I. 47.
 Collier Lad, by Joseph Skipton, III. 608.
 COLLINS, ANTHONY, II. 163.
 COLLINS, JOHN, II. 708.

- COLLINS, JOHN CHURTON, III. 842.
COLLINS, MORTIMER, III. 632.
COLLINS, WILLIAM, II. 11, 367; III. 5.
COLLINS, WILLIAM WILKIE, III. 620.
COLMAN, GEORGE, 'The Elder', II. 561.
COLMAN, GEORGE, 'The Younger', II. 656.
Colonel Enderby's Wife, by Mrs Harrison, III. 704.
Colonel Jacque, History of, by Defoe, II. 151, 154.
Colour of Life, by Alice Meynell, III. 704.
COLQUHOUN, JOHN, III. 839.
COLTON, CHARLES CALEB, III. 172.
Columbiad, by Joel Barlow, III. 736, 743.
Columbus, Life of, by Washington Irving, III. 745, 746.
COLVIN, SIR SIDNEY, III. 693, 697.
Colyn Cloute, by John Skelton, I. 114, 116.
COMBE, GEORGE, III. 265.
COMBE, WILLIAM, II. 661.
Come under my plaidie, by Hector Macneill, II. 802.
Come whoam to the childer an' me, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
Comedy of Errors, by Shakespeare, I. 358.
Cometh up as a Flower, by Miss Broughton, III. 690.
Coming of Love, by Watts-Dunton, III. 668.
Coming of the Messiah, by Edward Irving, III. 268.
Commemoration Ode, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802, 804.
Commentaries, Blackstone's, II. 439.
Commentary on the Bible, by Matthew Henry, II. 60.
Commercial Discourses, by Thomas Chalmers, III. 188.
Common Lot, by Montgomery, II. 744.
Common Sense, by Paine, II. 559.
Commonwealth, History of the, by Godwin, II. 703; by Sir F. Palgrave, III. 265.
Commonwealth and Protectorate, by S. R. Gardiner, III. 631.
Companion, edited by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
Companions of my Solitude, by Sir A. Helps, III. 478.
Complaint of Deor, I. 4, 5.
Complaint of Nature, by J. Logan, II. 531.
Complaints, by Spenser, I. 295.
Complaint of Scotland, I. 214.
Complaynt to the King, by Sir David Lyndsay, I. 205.
Compleat Angler, by Izaak Walton, I. 613, 616.
Complaynt of Mars, by Chaucer, I. 62.
Complaynt to his Purs, by Chaucer, I. 66.
Compromise, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
Comte and Positivism, by Mill, III. 443.
Comte's Positive Philosophy, trans. by Harriet Martineau, III. 389.
Comus, by Milton, I. 687, 688, 694, 695.
Canary, by Sir Samuel Ferguson, III. 302.
Conciliation with America, by Burke, II. 544, 545.
Concordance of Histories, by Robert Fabyan, I. 105.
Condé, Life of, by Stanhope, III. 374.
Condensed Novels, by Bret Harte, III. 827, 828.
Conduct of the Understanding, by Locke, II. 18.
Confessio Amantis, of John Gower, I. 35, 74.
Confessions of a Fanatic, III. 292.
Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit, by Coleridge, III. 62, 63, 71.
Confessions of an Opium-Eater, by De Quincey, III. 93.
Confessions of a Thug, by Meadows Taylor, III. 415.
Conflict, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
CONGREVE, WILLIAM, II. 82; Life of, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
Coningsby, by Beaconsfield, III. 437, 438.
CONINGTON, JOHN, III. 634.
Connaught, A Tour in, by Cæsar Otway, III. 345.
CONNELLY, MARC, III. 722, 856.
CONNOR, RALPH (Charles William Gordon), III. 728.
Conquest of Granada, by Dryden, I. 797, 806, 807, 814; by Washington Irving, III. 745, 746.
Conquest of Syria, Persia, and Egypt, by Simon Ockley, II. 211.
CONRAD, JOSEPH, III. 711, 719, 721.
Conscious Lovers, by Sir R. Steele, II. 229.
Consolation for Catholics, by Southwell, I. 357.
Consolations in Travel, by Sir Humphry Davy, II. 781, 783.
Conspiracy of Pontiac, by Parkman, III. 818.
CONSTABLE, HENRY, I. 278.
Constant Wife, by Somerset Maugham, III. 715.
Constitution of England, by Jean Louis De Lolme, II. 541.
Constitution of Man, by Combe, III. 265.
Contarini Fleming, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 436.
Contemplation, by Richard Gifford, II. 441.
Contemporary Thought and Thinkers, by R. H. Hutten, III. 632.
Content, Hymn to, by Mrs Barbauld, II. 583.
Contention of Ajax and Ulysses, by Shirley, I. 487.
Convention of Cintra, by Wordsworth, III. 14, 17, 28.
Conversation, by Cowper, II. 603, 605.
Conversations with Lord Byron, by the Countess of Blessington, III. 278.
Conversations with some of the Old Poets, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801.
Convict Once, by J. B. Stephens, III. 732.
Convict Ship, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
CONWAY, MONCURE DANIEL, III. 854.
CONWAY, WILLIAM MARTIN, BARON, III. 844.
COOK, ELIZA, III. 528.
COOKE, JOHN ESTEN, III. 853.
COOKE, THOMAS, II. 290.
COOLIDGE, SUSAN (Sarah Chauncey Woolsey), III. 836.
COOPER, ANTHONY ASHLEY. See SHAFTESBURY, EARL OF.
COOPER, EDITH EMMA ('Michael Field'), III. 704.
COOPER, JAMES FENIMORE, III. 750.
COOPER, THOMAS, III. 376.
Cooper's Hill, by Sir J. Denham, I. 639.
Copperhead, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
Coral Island, by Ballantyne, III. 624.
CORBET, RICHARD, I. 456.
CORELLI, MARIE, III. 850.
Corinna's going a-Maying, by Herrick, I. 563.
Coriolanus, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
Corn, by Sidney Lanier, III. 825.
Corn-law Rhymes, by Ebenezer Elliott, III. 231, 233.
CORNWALL, BARRY (Bryan Waller Procter), III. 227.
Cornwall, Footsteps of Former Men in, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381.
Cornwall, Survey of, by R. Carew, I. 353.
Coronach, from The Lady of the Lake, III. 37.
Coronation, On the, by Dryden, I. 792.
Corruptions of Christianity, by Priestley, II. 540.
Corsica, by Boswell, II. 468, 469.
CORY, WILLIAM JOHNSON, III. 576.
CORYATE, THOMAS, I. 452; Coryat's Crudities, I. 452.
COSTELLO, LOUISA STUART, III. 324.
COTES, MRS EVERARD, III. 726.
Cottagers of Glenburnie, by Elizabeth Hamilton, II. 808, 809.
COTTON, CHARLES, I. 613, 616, 731, 774.
COTTON, NATHANIEL, III. 532.
COTTON, SIR ROBERT BRUCE, I. 271.
Council of Trent, by J. A. Froude, III. 503.
Count Julian, by W. S. Landor, III. 141.
Counterblast against Tobacco, by James I., I. 506, 507.
Country Contentments, by Gervase Markham, I. 398.
Country Justice, by Dr John Langhorne, II. 521.
Country Parson, by Herbert, I. 496, 497.
Country Wife, by W. Wycherley, II. 65.
County Guy, by Scott, III. 33, 37.
Courage, brother! do not stumble, by Norman Macleod, III. 397.
Courant, Daily, II. 2, 12.
Course of Time, by Robert Pollok, II. 792-794.
COURTHOPE, WILLIAM JOHN, III. 684.
Court of Death, by John Gay, II. 174, 175.
Courtship of Miles Standish, by Longfellow, III. 768, 770.
Courtier, trans. by Sir Thomas Hoby, I. 258.
COVERDALE, MILES, I. 131.
LOWARD, NOEL, III. 719, 849.
COWLEY, ABRAHAM, I. 642, 731, 732.
COWPER, WILLIAM, II. 601; III. 6.
Cowper, Letters of, II. 610-612.
Cowper, Life of, by William Hayley, II. 614.
Cowper's Grave, by E. B. Browning, III. 549, 559.
COXE, WILLIAM, II. 680.
CRABBE, GEORGE, II. 693.
CRADDOCK, CHARLES EGBERT (Mary Noailles Murfree), III. 833.
Cradle Song, by William Blake, II. 720.
CRAIG, JOHN, I. 230.
CRAIGIE, MRS (John Oliver Hobbes), III. 834.
CRAIK, GEORGE LILLIE, III. 291.
CRAIK, GEORGINA MARION, III. 291.
CRAIK, MRS (Dinah Maria Mulock), III. 536.
CRAIK, SIR HENRY, III. 842.
CRANCH, CHRISTOPHER PEARSE, III. 853.
CRANE, STEPHEN, III. 832.
Cranford, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
CRANMER, THOMAS, Archbishop of Canterbury, I. 138.
CRASHAW, RICHARD, I. 676; Elegy on, by Cowley, I. 644.
CRAWFORD, FRANCIS MARION, III. 831.
CRAWFORD, ISABELLA VALANCY, III. 726.
CRAWFORD, ROBERT, II. 317.
Crazed Maiden's Song, by Crabbe, II. 699.
CREASY, SIR EDWARD SHEPHERD, III. 839.
Creation by Sir R. Blackmore, II. 108, 109.
Creed, Exposition of, by Pearson, I. 623.
CREIGHTON, MANDELL, III. 687.
Creoles of Louisiana, by G. W. Cable, III. 829.
Crescent and the Cross, by Eliot Warburton, III. 274.
Crimea, Invasion of the, by A. W. Kinglake, III. 421.
Criminal Law, by Sir A. Alison, III. 289.
Criminal Trials in Scotland, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
Criminals, Idiots, Women, and Minors, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
CRIPPS, ARTHUR S., III. 733.
Cripps the Carrier, by R. D. Blackmore, III. 622.
Crisis, by Thomas Paine, II. 559.
Crist, by Cynewulf, I. 13.
CRITCHETT, RICHARD CLAUDE, III. 843.
Critic, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565.
Critic, Papers of a, by C. W. Dilke, III. 529.
Critical Kit-Kats, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 690.
Critical Miscellanies, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
Critical Review, II. 13, 442.
Criticism, History of, by Saintsbury, III. 694.
CROCKETT, SAMUEL RUTHERFORD, III. 845.
CROKER, JOHN WILSON, III. 170.
CROKER, THOMAS CROFTON, III. 412.
CROLE, ROBERT. See CROWLEY.
CROLY, GEORGE, III. 171.
Cromarty, Traditional History of, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
Cromwell, Discourse concerning the Government of, by Cowley I. 648, 651.
Cromwell (Oliver), by Lord Morley, III. 686.
Cromwell's Letters and Speeches, by Carlyle, III. 404, 405, 406.
CRONIN, ARCHIBALD JOSEPH, III. 849.
Crook in the Lot, by Boston, II. 302.
Crookit Meg, by Sir J. Skelton, III. 635.
Cross of Snow, by Longfellow, III. 770, 772.
Crossing the Bar, by Tennyson, III. 547.
Crotchet Castle, by Thomas Love Peacock, III. 150, 153-155.
CROWE, CATHERINE, III. 280.
CROWE, WILLIAM, III. 616.
CROWLEY, ROBERT, I. 150.
CROWNE, JOHN, II. 89.
Crown of Wild Olive, by Ruskin, III. 571, 572, 575.
CROZIER, JOHN BEATTIE, III. 726, 727.
Cruise of the Betsy, by H. Miller, III. 286.
Cruise of the Midge, by M. Scott, III. 254.
Cry of the Children, by E. B. Browning, III. 550, 560.
Cuckoo, To the, by Bruce or Logan, II. 528-531.
Cuckoo and Nightingale, by Clanvowe, I. 81.
CUDWORTH, RALPH, I. 670.
Culprit Fay, by J. R. Drake, III. 752.
Culture and Anarchy, by M. Arnold, III. 594, 599.
CUMBERLAND, BISHOP, II. 59.
CUMBERLAND, RICHARD, II. 561.
CUMMINGS, BRUCE F., III. 849.
CUMMINS, MARIA SUSANNA, III. 827.
Cunmor Hall, by W. J. Mickle, II. 522, 523.
CUNNINGHAM, ALLAN, III. 303.
CUNNINGHAM, FRANCIS, III. 305.
CUNNINGHAM, JOHN, II. 455.
CUNNINGHAM, JOSEPH DAVEY, III. 305.
CUNNINGHAM, PETER, III. 305.
CUNNINGHAM, SIR ALEXANDER, III. 305.
CUNNINGHAM, THOMAS MOUNSEY, III. 305.
CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, R. B., III. 724, 843.
Cup, by Tennyson, III. 542.
Curiosities of Literature, by Isaac D'Israeli, II. 715.

- Curiosities of Natural History, by Buckland, III. 590.
- CURRAN, JOHN PHILPOT, II. 681.
- CURRIE, LADY MARY MONTGOMERIE, III. 850.
- Curse of Kehama, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 51.
- Cursor Mundi, I. 46.
- CURTIS, GEORGE WILLIAM, III. 784.
- CURZON, LORD, III. 844.
- CUSHING, PAUL (R. A. Wood-Seys), III. 854.
- Cushla-ma-chree, by J. F. Waller, III. 364.
- Custom and Myth, by A. Lang, III. 692.
- Cyclopædia, Knight's English, III. 266; Lardner's, III. 266; Penny, III. 266; of English Literature, I. preface, III. 315.
- Cymbeline, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
- CYNWULF, I. 8, 10, 12.
- Cynthia's Revels, by Jonson, I. 404, 409.
- Cypresse Grove, by Drummond, I. 510, 512.
- Cyril Thornton, by T. Hamilton, III. 254.
- Cyril's Success, by H. J. Byron, III. 637.
- D
- DACRE, LADY, II. 771.
- Dæmonology, by James I., I. 506.
- Daft Days, by R. Fergusson, II. 805, 806.
- 'Dagonet' Ballads, by G. R. Sims, III. 694.
- Daily Courant, II. 2, 12.
- Daisy Miller, by Henry James, III. 830.
- DALEY, VICTOR J., III. 729.
- Daltons, by C. J. Lever, III. 359.
- DAMPIER, WILLIAM, II. 103.
- DANA, RICHARD HENRY, III. 752.
- DANA, RICHARD HENRY, Jun., III. 752.
- Dance of the Seven Deidly Synnis, by Dunbar, I. 197.
- DANE, CLEMENCE, III. 852.
- Danesbury House, by Mrs Henry Wood, III. 520.
- DANIEL, SAMUEL, I. 330.
- Daniel, in Exeter Book, I. 11, 12.
- Daniel, Lectures on, by Edward Bouverie Pusey, III. 337.
- Daniel Deronda, by George Eliot, III. 530.
- Danites in the Sierras, by Miller, III. 828.
- Dante, trans. by Henry Francis Cary, II. 756; by C. E. Norton, III. 822; by John Carlyle, III. 402.
- Dante and his Circle, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 641.
- Dante's Divina Commedia, trans. by Longfellow, III. 768, 771.
- Daphnada, by Spenser, I. 296.
- D'ARLAY, MADAME (Fanny Burney), II. 586.
- Darien, by Eliot Warburton, III. 274.
- Darkness and Dawn, by Farrar, III. 661.
- Dark Rosaleen, by J. C. Mangan, III. 358.
- DARLEY, GEORGE, III. 235.
- DARNESTETER, MADAME (Duclaux), III. 704.
- Darney, by G. P. R. James, III. 327.
- Dartmoor, by Noel T. Carrington, II. 760.
- DARWIN, CHARLES ROBERT, III. 410; Life of, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
- DARWIN, ERASMUS, II. 672.
- Darwinism, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614; by J. Fiske, III. 828; by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
- Darwinism and Language, by W. D. Whitney, III. 824.
- DASENT, SIR GEORGE WEBB, III. 499.
- Date of Ethics, by Spencer, III. 588.
- Dauber, by John Masfield, III. 710.
- Daughter of Heth, by Wm. Black, III. 691.
- D'AVENANT, SIR WILLIAM, I. 628, 729.
- David, Song to, by Smart, II. 424-426.
- David and Bethsabe, by Peele, I. 822.
- David Copperfield, by Dickens, III. 465, 467, 473.
- David Elginbrod, by George Macdonald, III. 606.
- David Grieve, by Mrs H. Ward, III. 704.
- David Harum, by E. N. Westcott, III. 831.
- David Simple, by Sarah Fielding, II. 417.
- Davidels, by Cowley, I. 643, 644.
- DAVIDSON, JOHN, III. 706.
- DAVIES, HUBERT HENRY, III. 847.
- DAVIES, JOHN, I. 996.
- DAVIES, SIR JOHN, I. 304.
- DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY, III. 847.
- DAVOT, GORDON (Elizabeth Mackintosh), III. 852.
- DAVIS, JOHN, I. 390.
- DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING, III. 832.
- DAVIS, THOMAS OSBORNE, III. 364; Lament for, by Sir S. Fergusson, III. 363; Life of, by Sir C. G. Duffy, II. 583.
- DAVY, SIR HUMPHRY, II. 761.
- DAWSON, GEORGE M., III. 726.
- DAWSON, SIR JOHN WILLIAM, III. 726.
- DAY, JOHN, I. 420.
- DAY, THOMAS, II. 738.
- Day and Night Songs, by W. Allingham, III. 605.
- Day of Doom, by Michael Wigglesworth, III. 734, 735.
- Days and Hours, by F. Tennyson, III. 539.
- Deacon Brodie, by Henley and Stevenson, III. 695, 699.
- Dead Letter, by Austin Dobson, III. 689.
- Dear Lady Diadain, by McCarthy, III. 660.
- Death Comes for the Archbishop, by Willa Cather, III. 834.
- Death of Lincoln, by Whitman, III. 810.
- Death of the Flowers, by W. C. Bryant, III. 753, 754.
- Deathbed, by Thomas Hood, III. 140.
- Death's Jest-book, by Beddoes, III. 237.
- Declaration of Independence, III. 736, 742.
- De Clifford, by R. P. Ward, II. 754.
- Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, by Gibbon, III. 550, 553-558.
- De Consolatione Philosophiæ of Boethius, trans. by Ælfred, I. 21; by Chaucer, I. 63, 82.
- Deerbrook, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
- Defence of Guenevere, by W. Morris, III. 665, 667.
- Defence of Poesie, by Sir P. Sidney, I. 289.
- DEFOE, DANIEL, II. 5, 149; Life of, by W. Minto, III. 693.
- DEHAN, RICHARD, III. 733.
- Deirdre, by Sir S. Fergusson, III. 362; by W. B. Yeats, III. 709; by G. W. Russell, III. 710.
- Deistical Controversy, II. 121.
- Deist's Bible, by M. Tindal, II. 162.
- Dejection, an Ode, by Coleridge, III. 59, 66.
- DEKKER, THOMAS, I. 422.
- DELAFIELD, E. M., III. 852.
- DE LA MARÉ, WALTER, III. 714.
- DE LA ROCHE, MAZO, III. 852.
- DELAND, MARGARET, III. 833.
- Delicia Poetarum Scotorum, I. 519.
- Della Crusans, II. 473, 667.
- DE LOMÉ, JEAN LOUIS, II. 541.
- DELONEY, THOMAS, I. 333.
- Democracy, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802.
- Democracy and Liberty, by Lecky, III. 682.
- Democracy in Europe, by Sir T. E. May, III. 490.
- Democratic Vistas, by Whitman, III. 808.
- De Montfort, by Joanna Bailie, II. 720, 732, 734.
- DE MORGAN, AUGUSTUS, III. 398.
- DE MORGAN, WILLIAM F., III. 709.
- DENHAM, SIR JOHN, I. 639.
- DENIEHY, DANIEL H., III. 729.
- DENNIS, JOHN, II. 196.
- DENT, J. C., III. 726.
- Departmental Ditties, by Kipling, III. 708.
- DE QUINCEY, THOMAS, III. 92; book on, by David Masson, III. 633.
- De Religione Gentilium, by Lord Herbert, I. 491.
- DERMODY, THOMAS, II. 759.
- Dermot and the Earl, I. 34.
- Descent into Hell, by J. A. Heraud, III. 268.
- Descent into the Maelstrom, by E. A. Poe, III. 788.
- Descent of Man, by Darwin, III. 417, 418.
- Descent of Odin, by Gray, II. 359, 361.
- Descriptive Sketches, by Wordsworth, III. 13.
- Deserted Village, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 484-486, 494.
- Destiny, by Susan Edmondstone Ferrier, III. 300.
- Dethe of Blanche the Duchesse, by Chaucer, I. 61, 67.
- Delthe of Pitee, by Chaucer, I. 61, 62, 68.
- De Tocqueville, Correspondence and Conversations with, by N. W. Senior, III. 343.
- DE VERE, EDWARD, III. 581.
- De Vere, Earl of Oxford, I. 277.
- De Vere, by R. P. Ward, II. 754.
- De Veritate, by Lord Herbert, I. 491.
- Devil to Pay, by Charles Coffey, II. 338.
- Devill's Inquest, by Dunbar, I. 198.
- Devil's Dream on Mount Aksbeck, by Thomas Aird, III. 312.
- Dial, III. 757, 760, 763.
- Dialogues on Sincerity, by R. Hurd, II. 428.
- Diana, a Collection of Sonnets, by Henry Constable, I. 278.
- Diana of the Crossways, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
- Diaries of a Lady of Quality, ed. by Abraham Hayward, III. 827.
- Diary, Evelyn's, I. 733, 765; Pepys's, I. 738, 770; Sewall's, III. 732.
- Diary and Letters of Fanny Burney, II. 587, 590-593.
- Diary by Lady Charlotte Bury, II. 772.
- Diary of a Late Physician, by Samuel Warren, III. 844.
- DIBDIN, CHARLES, II. 708.
- DICKENS, CHARLES, III. 464.
- Dickens, Life of, by Forster, III. 474.
- DICKINSON, EMILY, III. 853.
- Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophes, printed by Caxton, I. 96.
- Dictionary, General, by G. Sale, II. 388.
- Dictionary, Johnson's, III. 457, 482.
- Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, by Sir W. Smith, III. 479.
- Dictionary of National Biography, III. 662, 707.
- Dictionary of Slang, by Henley and Farmer, III. 695.
- Dictionary of the Bible, by John Brown, III. 646.
- Diderot and the Encyclopædists, by Morley, III. 686.
- Dies Ira, Version of, by the Earl of Roscommon, I. 778.
- DIGBY, SIR KENELM, I. 579.
- Digby Grand, by Whyte-Melville, III. 585.
- DILKE, CHARLES WENTWORTH, III. 259.
- DILKE, SIR CHARLES WENTWORTH, III. 841.
- DILLON, WENTWORTH. See ROSCOMMON, THE EARL OF.
- Dipsychus, by A. H. Clough, III. 511, 512.
- Directions to Servants, by Swift, II. 127.
- Dirge, by Dunbar, I. 198; by H. King, I. 568.
- Dirge of Owen Roe O'Neill, by Aubrey de Vere, III. 582.
- Discipline, by Mary Brunton, II. 772.
- Discourse concerning the Government of Oliver Cromwell, by Cowley, I. 648, 651.
- Discourse on the Original and Progress of Satire, by Dryden, I. 816.
- Discourses on Government, by Algernon Sidney, I. 716.
- Discoveries, by Ben Jonson, I. 412.
- Discovery of a New World, by John Wilkins, I. 685.
- Discovery of Beautiful Guiana, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 305.
- Dispensary, by Sir Samuel Garth, II. 109.
- DISRAELI, BENJAMIN, III. 435.
- D'ISRAELI, ISAAC, II. 715.
- Distressed Mother, by Philips, II. 239.
- Divisions of Purley, by H. Tooke, II. 633.
- Divine Dialogues, by Dr H. More, I. 611.
- Divine Emblems, by Quarles, I. 566, 567.
- Divine Legation of Moses, by Warburton, II. 271.
- Divine Tragedy, by Longfellow, III. 770.
- Divine Works, trans. by Sylvester, I. 345.
- DIXON, RICHARD WATSON, III. 840.
- DIXON, WILLIAM HEPPWORTH, III. 578.
- DOBELL, SYDNEY THOMPSON, III. 603.
- DOBSON, HENRY AUSTIN, III. 688.
- Doctor, by Southey, III. 48, 50.
- Dr Nikola, by Guy Boothby, III. 730.
- Doctor's Dilemma, by Shaw, III. 706.
- Doctor Thorne, by A. Trollope, III. 487, 488.
- DODD, DR WILLIAM, II. 456.
- DODDRIDGE, PHILIP, II. 332.
- DODGSON, CHARLES LUTWIDGE, III. 648.
- DODSLEY, ROBERT, II. 301.
- Dodswoth, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
- Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope (Sir A. H. Hawkins), III. 708.
- Dolores, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 672.
- Domain of Arnheim, by E. A. Poe, III. 787.
- Domby and Son, by Dickens, III. 465, 467, 471.
- Domestic Annals of Scotland, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
- Domestic Manners of the Americans, by Frances Trollope, III. 276.
- DOMETT, ALFRED, III. 729, 732.
- Dominic's Legacy, by A. Picken, III. 308.
- Domination of Dreams, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
- Don John of Austria, by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
- Don Juan, by Byron, III. 123, 127, 130, 133-135.
- Don Quixote in England, by Fielding, II. 339, 342.
- Don Sebastian, by Dryden, I. 796, 810; by Miss Porter, II. 772.
- Don Simonides, by B. Rich, I. 238, 333.
- DONNE, JOHN, I. 413.
- Donne, Dr. Life of, by Izaak Walton, I. 613; Life and Letters of, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
- DOOLITTLE, HILDA, III. 856.
- DORAN, JOHN, III. 331.
- Dorian Gray, by Oscar Wilde, III. 707.
- Dorothy Forster, by Besant, III. 650.
- DORSET, EARL OF (Charles Sackville), I. 781.
- DORSET, EARL OF (Thomas Sackville), I. 237, 245.
- Dorset Dialect, Poems in the, by W. Barnes, III. 412.

- DOS PASSOS, JOHN RODRIGO, III. 720, 856.
 Double Dealer, by Congreve, II. 82, 85.
 DOUCE, FRANCIS, II. 713.
 DOUGALL, LILY, III. 726.
 DOUGHTY, ARTHUR, III. 726.
 DOUGHTY, CHARLES M., III. 695, 722.
 DOUGLAS, GAVIN, I. 166, 202.
 DOUGLAS, GEORGE (G. D. Brown), III. 847.
 DOUGLAS, JAMES, III. 847.
 DOUGLAS, NORMAN, III. 847.
 Douglas, by John Home, II. 453-455.
 DOUGLASS, FREDERICK, III. 853.
 Dover Beach, by M. Arnold, III. 596.
 DOWDEN, EDWARD, III. 687.
 DOWSON, ERNEST, III. 847.
 DOYLE, JOHN A., III. 841.
 DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN, III. 707.
 Dragon of Wantley, by O. Wister, III. 832.
 DRAKE, JOSEPH RODMAN, III. 752.
 Drama, Development of the Secular, I. 150.
 Drama in the Eighteenth Century, II. 12.
 Dramatic Lyrics and Romances, by R. Browning, III. 553.
 Dramatist, by F. Reynolds, II. 710.
 DRAPER, JOHN WILLIAM, III. 825.
 Drapier's Letters, by Jonathan Swift, II. 125, 127.
 DRAYTON, MICHAEL, I. 341.
 Dream-Children, by Lamb, III. 76.
 Dream Life, by Donald Grant Mitchell, III. 821.
 Dream of Gerontius, by J. H. Newman, III. 338, 341.
 Dream of John Ball, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Dream of the Rood, I. 15.
 Dream-Pedlary, by T. L. Beddoes, III. 237.
 Dred, by Mrs H. B. Stowe, III. 813.
 DREISER, THEODORE, III. 835.
 Dreme, by Sir David Lindsay, I. 205.
 DRENNAN, WILLIAM, III. 344.
 Drink, by Charles Reade, III. 483.
 DRINKWATER, JOHN, III. 848.
 DRUMMOND, HENRY, III. 842.
 DRUMMOND, WILLIAM, I. 510.
 DRUMMOND, W. H., III. 727.
 Drummond of Hawthornden, Life of, by Masson, III. 633.
 Drum-Taps, by Walt Whitman, III. 807.
 Drunken Barnaby's Four Journeys, by Brathwaite, I. 488.
 Drury Lane, A Tale of, by Horace Smith, III. 162.
 DRYDEN, JOHN, I. 730, 731, 732, 734, 791; III. 3; by Saintsbury, III. 693; The Age of, by Richard Garnett, III. 668.
 Drythelm, Story of, I. 169.
 DU CHAILLU, PAUL BELLONI, III. 840.
 Duchess of Malfi, by J. Webster, I. 426, 428.
 DUCLAUX, MADAME, III. 704.
 Duenna, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565.
 DUFF, SIR MOUNTSTUART GRANT, III. 840.
 DUFFERIN, LORD, III. 839.
 DUFFERIN, THE COUNTESS OF, III. 385.
 DUFFY, SIR CHARLES GAVIN, III. 583, 730.
 DUGDALE, SIR WILLIAM, I. 590.
 DUKE, RICHARD, II. 111.
 DU MAURIER, GEORGE, III. 840.
 DUNBAR, PAUL L., III. 855.
 DUNBAR, WILLIAM, I. 166, 191.
 DUNCAN, SARA JEANNETTE (Mrs Everard Cotes), III. 726.
 Dunciad, by Pope, II. 179, 183, 190.
 DUNLOP, JOHN, II. 808.
 DUNLOP, JOHN COLIN, III. 219.
 DUNNE, FINLEY PETER, III. 855.
 DUNTON, JOHN, II. 112.
 Durandarte and Balerna, by M. G. Lewis, II. 751.
 D'URFEY, THOMAS, I. 732, 782.
 Dutch Courtesan, by John Marston, I. 462.
 Dutchman's Fireside, by J. K. Paulding, III. 743.
 Dutch Republic, by J. L. Motley, III. 814, 815, 816.
 Duty, Ode to, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 24.
 DWIGHT, TIMOTHY, III. 736.
 Dyalogue Concernynge Heresy, by Sir Thomas More, I. 123.
 DYCE, ALEXANDER, III. 324.
 DYER, JOHN, II. 284.
 DYER, SIR EDWARD, I. 274, 275.
 Dying Christian to his Soul, by Pope, II. 191.
 Dying Negro, by Thomas Day, II. 738.
 DYKE, HENRY VAN, III. 854.
 Dynasts, by Thos. Hardy, III. 680, 722.
 Dynasty of Theodosius, by T. Hodgkin, III. 661.
 DYSON, EDWARD, III. 729.
 Eagle's Nest, by John Ruskin, III. 571.
 EALDHHELM, I. 11, 16.
 EARLE, JOHN, I. 577.
 Early English Poets, by George Ellis, I. 30; II. 678.
 Early English Romances, by Ellis, II. 678.
 Early Literary Criticism, I. 266.
 Early Minor Scottish Poets, I. 208.
 Early Primrose, To an, by H. Kirke White, II. 728.
 Early Scottish Fragments, I. 168.
 Earthly Paradise, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 East Lynne, by Mrs Henry Wood, III. 520.
 Eastern Life, by H. Martineau, III. 388.
 EASTLAKE, LADY, III. 387.
 Eastward Hoe, I. 378, 402.
 Ebb-tide, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Ecce Homo, by Sir J. R. Seeley, III. 649.
 Ecclesiastical History, by Bæda, I. 18, 169; trans. by Ælfred, I. 20.
 Ecclesiastical History of Scotland, A.D. 80 to 818, by Thomas Innes, II. 302.
 Ecclesiastical Institutions, by Spencer, III. 589.
 Ecclesiastical Memorials, by John Strype, III. 148.
 Ecclesiastical Polity, by Hooker, I. 279-283.
 EDWARD, LAURENCE, II. 210.
 Echo, by Christina Rossetti, III. 647.
 Echo, by Thomas Moore, III. 348.
 Echo Sonnet, by Barnabe Barnes, I. 278.
 Eclipse of Faith, by Henry Rogers, III. 374.
 Eclogues, by Alexander Barclay, I. 118.
 Eclogues of Virgil, trans. by Warton, II. 507.
 Economy of Vegetation, by E. Darwin, II. 572, 574, 575, 576.
 EDDINGTON, SIR ARTHUR, III. 848.
 Eden Bower, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 643.
 EDGEWORTH, MARIA, II. 735.
 EDGEWORTH, RICHARD LOVELL, II. 734.
 Edinburgh, by Sir A. Boswell, II. 830, 831.
 Edinburgh: Picturesque Notes, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 700.
 Edinburgh, Old and New, by J. Grant, III. 578.
 Edinburgh, Traditions of, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 Edinburgh Review, III. 86, 156, 158.
 Edinburgh Sketches and Memories, by Masson, III. 633.
 Education, by Mandell Creighton, III. 687.
 Education, Thoughts concerning, by Locke, II. 18, 20; Tractate on, by Milton, I. 688, 706.
 Edward, by Dr John Moore, II. 618.
 Edward and Leonora, by Thomson, II. 321.
 Edward I., by George Peele, I. 321.
 Edward II., by Marlowe, I. 349, 351.
 EDWARDS, AMELIA B., III. 850.
 EDWARDS, JONATHAN, III. 734, 738.
 EDWARDS, RICHARD, I. 264.
 Edwin, by James Beattie, II. 526.
 Edwin and Eltruda, by Helen Maria Williams, II. 600.
 Edwin of Deira, by A. Smith, III. 604.
 EGAN, PIERCE, III. 264.
 EGAN, PIERCE, The Younger, III. 265.
 EGERTON, FRANCIS (Earl of Ellesmere), II. 791.
 EGERTON, GEORGE (Mrs Golding Bright), III. 730, 732.
 EGGLESTON, EDWARD, III. 824.
 EGLINTON, SIR HUGH OF, I. 172.
 Egoist, by George Meredith, III. 658, 659.
 Egyptians, Ancient, by Sir John Gardner Wilkinson, III. 321.
 Egyptians, Modern, by Edward William Lane, III. 327.
 Eighteenth Century in English Literature, II. 1.
 Eighteenth Century Vignettes, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Eikon Basilike, by Gauden, I. 587, 588.
 Eikonoklastes, by Milton, I. 689.
 Eileen Aroon, by Gerald Griffin, III. 357.
 Eirenicon, by Dr Pusey, III. 337.
 El Dorado, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Election, by John Sterling, III. 271.
 Election, by Robert Fergusson, II. 806.
 Electricity, Chemical Agencies of, by Sir H. Davy, II. 761.
 Elegant Epistles, by V. Knox, II. 713.
 Elegant Extracts, by V. Knox, II. 713.
 Elegy—on the Princess Margaret, I. 208; on Crashaw, by Cowley, I. 644; on the Death of a Mad Dog, by Goldsmith, II. 486; on an Unfortunate Lady, by Pope, II. 179, 182, 187; in a Country Churchyard, by Gray, II. 11, 359, 365; III. 5; by Campbell, II. 767; by M. Bruce, II. 528; on the Death of Scots Music, by Fergusson, II. 806.
 Elements of Criticism, by Kames, II. 389.
 Eleonora, by Dryden, I. 796.
 Elfrida, by William Mason, II. 426.
 Elia, Essays of, III. 74, 76, 79.
 Eliduc, by W. C. Roscoe, III. 625.
 ELIOT, GEORGE, III. 529.
 ELIOT, THOMAS STEARNS, III. 716, 723.
 ELIZABETH, QUEEN, I. 249.
 Elizabethan and Jacobean Literature, I. 235.
 Elizabethan Seamen, by Froude, III. 503.
 Elizabethan Song-Writers, I. 273.
 Elizabethan Sonnet-Cycles, I. 286.
 ELLESMERE, EARL OF, II. 791.
 ELLIOT, JEAN, II. 796.
 ELLIOT, SIR GILBERT, II. 423.
 ELLIOT, EBENEZER, III. 231.
 ELLIS, GEORGE, II. 670, 678.
 ELLIS, SARAH, III. 388.
 ELLWOOD, THOMAS, II. 55.
 Elmer Gantry, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
 Eloisa and Abelard, by Pope, II. 179, 182, 186.
 El Ombú, by W. H. Hudson, III. 711.
 ELPHINSTONE, MOUNTSTUART, III. 366.
 Elsie Venner, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791.
 ELWIN, WHITWELL, III. 490.
 ELYOT, SIR THOMAS, I. 127.
 Embargo, by W. C. Bryant, III. 753.
 EMERSON, RALPH WALDO, III. 758; Life of, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791.
 Emigrants, by Thomas Fringle, II. 790.
 Emigrants in the Bermudas, by Marvell, I. 712.
 Eminent Statesmen, by Hayward, III. 327.
 Emma, by Jane Austen, II. 774.
 Emotions and the Will, by Bain, III. 497.
 Empedocles on Etna, by M. Arnold, III. 591, 592, 596.
 Emperor Jones, by Eugene O'Neill, III. 836.
 Emperor of the East, by Massinger, I. 464, 467.
 Encyclopædia, Britannica, II. 535; Chambers's, III. 315. And see CYCLOPÆDIA.
 Endeavours after the Christian Life, by James Martineau, III. 392.
 Endimion, by Lyly, I. 315.
 Endymion, by John Keats, III. 99, 100, 102.
 England and its People, First Impressions of, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 England and Wales, Antiquities of, by Francis Grose, II. 629.
 England, Conquest of, by J. R. Green, III. 653; The Making of, III. 653.
 England, Expansion of, by Sir J. R. Seeley, III. 640.
 England, History of, by S. Daniel, I. 271; by T. May, I. 582; by Milton, I. 690, 709; by Echard, II. 210; by Carte, II. 244; by Kennett, II. 244; by Mrs Macaulay, II. 419; by Smollett, II. 442; by Turner, II. 639; by Lingard, II. 647; by Hallam, III. 193; by Craik and Macfarlane, III. 291; by Macaulay, III. 367, 372; by Stanhope, III. 374; by Mrs Penrose, III. 384; by May, III. 490; by Froude, III. 502; by Stubbs, III. 629; by Gardiner, III. 631; by Green, III. 652; by Lecky, III. 682; by G. M. Trevelyan, III. 715.
 England in the Age of Wycliffe, by G. M. Trevelyan, III. 715.
 England in Time of War, by S. T. Dobell, III. 603, 604.
 England my Mother, by Sir W. Watson, III. 706.
 England under Queen Anne, by G. M. Trevelyan, III. 715.
 England under Seven Administrations, by A. W. Fonblanque, III. 267.
 England's Helicon, I. 258, 276, 278.
 English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, by Byron, III. 120.
 English Chronicle, I. 20, 26, 29.
 English Constitution, by Bagehot, III. 630.
 English Garden, by W. Mason, II. 426, 427.
 English Gentleman, and English Gentlewoman, by Brathwaite, I. 488.
 English Girl, by Robert Chambers, III. 816.
 English Humorists, by Thackeray, III. 459.
 English in Ireland, by Froude, III. 502.
 English Literature, by Stopford A. Brooke, III. 662; by G. L. Craik, III. 291; by Gosse, III. 698; by Minto, III. 696; by Saintsbury, III. 693.
 English Literature before the Invasion of Britain, I. 4.
 English Literature from Edward VII. to George VI., III. 717.
 English Literature in the Nineteenth Century, III. 1.
 English Literature in the Reign of Victoria, by H. Morley, III. 633.
 English Literature in the Reigns of the German-born Georges, II. 819.

EADMER OF CANTERBURY, I. 38.
 EAGLE, SOLOMON (Sir J. C. Squire), III., 848.

- English Mail-Coach, by De Quincey, III. 97.
 Englishman, by Eliza Cook, III. 528.
 English Misrule and Irish Misdeeds, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 English Note-Books, by Hawthorne, III. 780, 781.
 English Past and Present, by Trench, III. 393.
 English People, History of the, by J. R. Green, III. 652.
 English Poetry, Beginning of, I. 4.
 English Poetry, History of, by Thomas Warton, II. 508-512.
 English Poets, by W. Hazlitt, III. 80, 82; by W. Minto, III. 695.
 English Poets, Lives of the, by Johnson, II. 460, 463, 464.
 English Prose, Beginning of, I. 19.
 English Prose Writers from 1380-1500, I. 81.
 English Speech-craft, by Barnes, III. 412.
 English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 English Tongue, by Richard Carew, I. 353.
 English Traits, by Emerson, III. 760, 762.
 English Utilitarians, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 English Words, Select Glossary of, by Trench, III. 393.
 English Writers, by Henry Morley, III. 633.
 Engraving, by Sir Sidney Colvin, III. 693.
 Enigmas of Life, by W. R. Greg, III. 400.
 Ennui, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735, 736.
 Enoch Arden, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Entail, by John Galt, III. 297, 298.
 Enterkin, by Dr John Brown, III. 452.
 Enterlude of Hyckescorner, I. 151.
 Envoy a Bukton, by Chaucer, I. 65, 66.
 Eöthen, by A. W. Kinglake, III. 421.
 Ephemeries, by Thomas Pringle, II. 789.
 Epic of Hades, by Sir L. Morris, III. 662.
 Epic of Women, by A. W. E. O'Shaughnessy, III. 656.
 Epicoene, by Ben Jonson, I. 404, 409.
 Epictetus, trans. by Mrs Carter, II. 417.
 Epicurean, by Thomas Moore, III. 347.
 Epigouard, by William Wilkie, II. 441.
 Epipsychidion, by Shelley, III. 111.
 Episodes in a Life of Adventure, by L. Oliphant, III. 636.
 Epistle to the Countess of Cumberland, by S. Daniel, I. 339.
 Epistles, Pope's, II. 183.
 Epistola Macaronica ad Fratrem, by Alexander Geddes, II. 799, 801.
 Epistolæ Ho-Eliañæ, by J. Howell, I. 573.
 Epistolary Correspondence in the Eighteenth Century, II. 10.
 Epithalamion, by Spenser, I. 296, 302.
 Epson Wells, by T. Shadwell, II. 63.
 Equality, by Edward Bellamy, III. 831.
 Erasmus, Life of, by John Jortin, II. 301; by J. A. Froude, III. 503, 504.
 ERICLDOUNE, THOMAS OF, I. 43, 166.
 Erechtheus, by Swinburne, III. 671, 672.
 Erewhon, by Samuel Butler, III. 624, 730.
 ERNLE, LORD, III. 843.
 Eros and Psyche, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 Erris and Tyrally, by C. Otway, III. 345.
 Errors of Ecstasie, by Darley, III. 235, 236.
 ERSKINE, LORD, II. 634.
 ERSKINE, THOMAS, III. 265.
 ERTZ, SUSAN, III. 852.
 ERVINE, ST JOHN, III. 848.
 ESOMOND, HENRY V., III. 847.
 Esmond, by Thackeray, III. 458, 460-462.
 Essay on Man, by Pope, II. 179, 187; on Ancient and Modern Learning, by Sir William Temple, I. 754; Evolution of the, II. 3, 12; on Criticism, by Pope, II. 178, 180, 182, 188; of Dramatic Poesy, by Dryden, I. 792, 796, 797, 813; for the Press, by Agill, II. 100; on Reason, by Sir G. Mackenzie, I. 827; on Truth, by James Beattie, II. 525.
 Essays, Bacon's, I. 381, 388; Theological and Literary, by R. H. Hutton, III. 632; from the Quarterly, by James Hannay, III. 632; on Fiction, by N. W. Senior, III. 343; on His Own Times, by Coleridge, III. 67, 68; on Happiness, by Sir G. Mackenzie, I. 826; in Criticism, by M. Arnold, III. 594, 595, 597, 598; in Verse and Prose, by Cowley, I. 643, 648.
 Essays and Reviews, III. 480.
 Essays and Reviews, by Mandell Creighton, III. 697.
 Esther, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 Ether Waters, by George Moore, III. 707.
 ETHERIDGE, SIR GEORGE, II. 61.
 Ethical Philosophy, Dissertation on, by Sir J. Mackintosh, II. 641.
 Ethical Theory, Types of, by J. Martineau, III. 392.
 Ethics, Science of, by Sir L. Stephen, III. 662.
 Ethwald, by Joanna Baillie, II. 734.
 Etonian, III. 286, 379.
 'Ettick Shepherd,' III. 292.
 Eugene Aram, by Hood, III. 137, 138; by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Euphranor, by E. FitzGerald, III. 424, 427.
 Euphues, by Lyly, I. 238, 239, 313.
 Europe, History of, by Alison, III. 288-290.
 Europe, Literature of, by H. Hallam, III. 193, 195.
 European Morals, History of, by Lecky, III. 682.
 Europe during the Middle Ages, by Henry Hallam, III. 193.
 Evadne, by Richard Lalor Sheil, III. 351.
 Evan Harrington, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Evangeline, by Longfellow, III. 769, 772.
 EVANS, GEORGE E., III. 729.
 Eve of St Agnes, by Keats, III. 99, 101, 104.
 Eve of St Mark, by Keats, III. 99, 102.
 Evelina, by Fanny Burney, II. 586, 588-590.
 EVELYN, JOHN, I. 733, 765.
 Evelyn Hope, by Robert Browning, III. 562.
 Evenen in the Village, by Barnes, III. 412.
 Evenings with a Reviewer, by Spedding, III. 397.
 Evergreen, ed. by Ramsay, II. 313.
 Everlasting Mercy, by Maschfeld, III. 710.
 Every Man in his Humour, by Ben Jonson, I. 402, 404, 406.
 Every Man out of his Humour, by Ben Jonson, I. 402, 404.
 Every-day Book, by William Hone, II. 760.
 Everyman, Moral Interlude, I. 151.
 Evolution of the Idea of God, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 Evolutionist at Large, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 EWING, MRS JULIA HORATIA, III. 850.
 Examiner, edited by Leigh Hunt, III. 847.
 Excursion, by Wordsworth, III. 11, 13; by Ebenezer Elliott, III. 232.
 Excursions in Criticism, by Sir W. Watson, III. 706.
 Exeter Book, I. 8, 11, 13.
 Exile of Erin, by Campbell, II. 760.
 Exile's Song, by Gilfillan, III. 311.
 Existence of God, by A. H. Clough, III. 512.
 Exodus, in Exeter Book, I. 11.
 Expostulation and Reply, by Wordsworth, III. 17.
 Eyeless in Gaza, by Aldous Huxley, III. 716.
F
FABER, FREDERICK WILLIAM, III. 482.
 Fable for Critics, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 803.
 Fable of the Bees, II. 201; Remarks on, by William Law, II. 247.
 Fables, by Henryson, I. 190; by Dryden, I. 794, 796, 803; by John Gay, II. 173, 175; by Nathaniel Cotton, II. 532.
 Fables and Tales, by Allan Ramsay, II. 313, 315.
 Fables for the Female Sex, by Edward Moore, II. 400.
 FABYAN, ROBERT, I. 105.
 Factory Folk during the Cotton Famine, by Edwin Waugh, III. 492.
 Faerie Queene, by Spenser, I. 293, 296, 299.
 FAIRBAIRN, ANDREW MARTIN, III. 841.
 Fairchild Family, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Faire and Happy Milk-maid, by Sir T. Overbury, I. 442.
 FAIRFAX, EDWARD, I. 444.
 Fair God, by Lewis Wallace, III. 823.
 Fair Hills of Ireland, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 363.
 Fair is my Native Isle, by T. D. Sullivan, III. 580.
 Fair Maid of the Exchange, by T. Heywood, I. 433.
 Fair Penitent, by N. Rowe, II. 93, 94.
 Fair Rosamund, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 Fair Saxan, by Justin McCarthy, III. 660.
 Fairy Mythology, by Thomas Keightley, III. 259.
 Faith Doctor, by E. Eggleston, III. 824.
 Faithful Shepherdess, by Fletcher, I. 474.
 Faithfull Shephard, by Sir Richard Fanshawe, I. 672.
 FALCONER, WILLIAM, II. 498.
 Falkner Lyle, by Mark Lemon, III. 399.
 Fall of Nineveh, by E. Atherstone, III. 146.
 False Delicacy, by Hugh Kelly, II. 571.
 Familiar Letters, by J. Howell, I. 572, 573.
 Family Legend, by Joanna Baillie, II. 729.
 Fan, On a, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Fancy, by John Keats, III. 101, 103.
 Fancy and Desire, by E. de Vere, I. 277.
 FANE, VIOLET (Lady Mary Montgomerie Currie), III. 850.
 FANSHAW, CATHERINE MARIA, II. 739.
 FANSHAW, LADY, I. 673.
 FANSHAW, SIR RICHARD, I. 672.
 Fanshawe, by N. Hawthorne, III. 778, 779.
 Far from the Madding Crowd, by Hardy, III. 679.
 FARADAY, MICHAEL, III. 242.
 Fardorougha the Miser, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Fare thee Well, by Lord Byron, III. 131.
 Farewell Address, by George Washington, III. 736, 742.
 Farewell to Arms, by Ernest Hemingway, III. 720, 856.
 Farewell to Ayrshire, by R. Gall, II. 827.
 Farewell to Folly, by Greene, I. 324, 327.
 Farewell to the Fairies, I. 456, 457.
 FARINGTON, JOSEPH, III. 343.
 FARJON, BENJAMIN LEOPOLD, III. 732.
 FARMER, DR RICHARD, II. 629.
 Farmer's Boy, by Bloomfield, II. 687.
 Farmer's Calendar, by A. Young, II. 627.
 Farmer's Ingle, by Robert Fergusson, II. 806, 807.
 Farmer's Year, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 FARNOL, JOHN JEFFERY, III. 848.
 FARQUHAR, GEORGE, II. 90.
 FARRAR, FREDERIC WILLIAM, III. 661.
 FARRELL, JOHN, III. 729.
 Fatal Curiosity, by George Lillo, II. 277.
 Fatal Sisters, by Gray, II. 359, 361.
 Father and Daughter, by Mrs Opie, II. 698.
 Father and Son, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 Father O'Flynn, by A. P. Graves, III. 694.
 Father Tom and the Pope, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362.
 Father's Tragedy, by M. Field, III. 704.
 FAULKNER, WILLIAM, III. 856.
 Faust, trans. by Abraham Hayward, III. 327; by J. Stuart Blackie, III. 490; by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Faustine, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 670.
 Faustus, by Marlowe, I. 347.
 FAWCETT, HENRY, III. 840; Life of, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 FAWCETT, MRS, III. 850.
 FAWKES, FRANCIS, II. 421.
 Feast for Wormes, by Quarles, I. 566, 567.
 Feast of Bacchus, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 Feats on the Fiord, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
 Federal Government, History of, by E. A. Freeman, II. 626.
 Federalist, by Hamilton and Madison, III. 736.
 Felix Holt, by George Eliot, III. 530.
 Fellowship, by Lady Eastlake, III. 387.
 FELLTHAM, OWEN, I. 578.
 Felon's Dream, by G. Crabbe, II. 697.
 Female Quixote, by C. Lennox, II. 417.
 FENN, GEORGE MANVILLE, III. 840.
 FENTON, ELIJAH, II. 190.
 FERBER, EDNA, III. 856.
 Ferdinand and Isabella, by Prescott, III. 764.
 Ferdinand Count Fathom, by Smollett, II. 442, 444.
 FERGUSON, ADAM, II. 430.
 FERGUSON, SIR SAMUEL, III. 862.
 FERGUSON, ROBERT, II. 804.
 Ferishtah's Fancies, by R. Browning, III. 556, 566.
 Ferrex and Portex, by Norton and Sackville, I. 157.
 FERRIER, JAMES FREDERICK, III. 398.
 FERRIER, SUSAN EDMONDSTONE, III. 300.
 Festus, by Philip James Bailey, III. 507-510.
 Feuerbach's 'Christianity,' trans. by George Eliot, III. 529.
 Fiction, Essays on, by N. W. Senior, III. 343.
 Fiction, History of, by Dunlop, II. 808; III. 219.
 Fidelia, by G. Wither, I. 499, 502.
 FIELD, BARRON, III. 729.
 FIELD, EUGENE, III. 831.
 FIELD, MICHAEL, III. 704.
 FIELD, NATHANIEL, I. 487.
 FIELDING, HENRY, II. 7, 339; book on, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 FIELDING, SARAH, II. 417.
 Fine at the Fair, by R. Browning, III. 556, 558, 559, 565.
 Fight about the Isles of the Azores, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 305, 311.
 FILMER, SIR ROBERT, I. 659.
 Finding of the Book, by W. Alexander, III. 584.

- Fingal, by James Macpherson, II. 500.
 FINLAY, GEORGE, III. 217.
 Finsburg, Battle of, I. 4, 5.
 Firdausi in Exile, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Fireside, by N. Cotton, II. 533.
 Firmilian, by W. E. Aytoun, III. 475, 477.
 First Principles, by Herbert Spencer, III. 586, 587, 589.
 First Sketch of English Literature, by H. Morley, III. 633.
 FIRTH, SIR CHARLES HARDING, III. 844.
 FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES CANFIELD (Dorothy Canfield), III. 834.
 FISHER, HERBERT ALBERT LAURENS, III. 846.
 FISHER, JOHN, I. 126.
 Fisher's Boy, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 799.
 FISKE, JOHN, III. 828.
 FITCH, CLYDE, III. 855.
 FITCHETT, WILLIAM HENRY, III. 730.
 FITZBALL, EDWARD, II. 783.
 FITZ-BOODLE, GEORGE (W. M. Thackeray), III. 456.
 FITZGERALD, EDWARD, III. 424.
 FITZGERALD, FRANCIS S. K., III. 856.
 Fitzgerald (Lord Edward), Life of, by Moore, III. 347.
 FITZNEAL, RICHARD, I. 34.
 FITZPATRICK, GENERAL RICHARD, II. 670.
 FITZPATRICK, SIR PERCY, III. 733.
 Five Hundredth Points of Good Husbandry, by Tusser, I. 249.
 Five Nations, by Kipling, III. 708.
 Flaming Heart, by Crashaw, I. 678.
 Flaming Timman, by Borrow, III. 434.
 FLATMAN, THOMAS, I. 783.
 FLAVEL, JOHN, I. 670.
 Faxius, by C. G. Leland, III. 784.
 FLECKER, JAMES ELROY, III. 848.
 FLECKNOE, RICHARD, I. 784.
 Fleece, by John Dyer, II. 284, 286.
 Fleet Street Eclogues, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Fleetwood, by William Godwin, II. 703.
 FLETCHER, ANDREW, I. 827.
 FLETCHER, ELIZA, III. 187.
 FLETCHER, GILES, I. 445.
 FLETCHER, JOHN, I. 468.
 FLETCHER, JOHN GOULD, III. 856.
 FLETCHER, PHINEAS, I. 445.
 FLINT, ROBERT, III. 840.
 Flodden Field, by Alfred Austin, III. 681.
 Flood of Years, by W. C. Bryant, III. 763.
 Floods in Morayshire, by Sir Thomas Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 Florence MacCarthy, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 FLORENCE OF WORCESTER, I. 33.
 FLORIO, JOHN, I. 261.
 Flotsam and Jetsam, by Domett, III. 732.
 Flower and the Leaf, I. 81.
 Flower o' Dumblane, by Tannahill, II. 830.
 Flowers from Parnassus, by Pennecuik, II. 309.
 Flowers of the Forest, by Jean Elliot, II. 796; by Mrs Cockburn, II. 796.
 Fly-Leaves, by C. S. Calverley, III. 638.
 Flying, by Dunbar and Kennedy, I. 199.
 Fo'c's'le Yarns, by T. E. Brown, III. 634.
 Fœdera, by Thomas Rymer, I. 751.
 Foes in Law, by Miss Broughton, III. 690.
 Folle Farine, by Ouida, III. 690.
 FOMBLANQUE, ALBANY W., III. 267.
 Fool of Quality, by H. Brooke, II. 396, 397-400.
 FOOTE, SAMUEL, II. 432.
 Footprints of Former Men in Cornwall, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381.
 Footprints of the Creator, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 Footprints on the Sea-Shore, by Hawthorne, III. 780.
 For the Fallen, by Laurence Binyon, III. 713, 714.
 For the Term of his Natural Life, by M. Clarke, III. 731.
 FORBES, ARCHIBALD, III. 841.
 FORBES, EDWARD, III. 839.
 FORBES, JAMES DAVID, III. 400.
 Forces in Nature, Various, by Faraday, III. 243.
 FORD, JOHN, I. 481.
 FORD, PAUL LRICESTER, III. 832.
 FORD, RICHARD, III. 322.
 FORDUN, JOHN, I. 182.
 Forest, by Ben Jonson, I. 408, 409.
 Foresters, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Forest Minstrel, by James Hogg, III. 292; by William and Mary Howitt, III. 283.
 Forest Scenery, by W. Gilpin, II. 665.
 Forging of the Anchor, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362.
 FORMAN, HARRY BUXTON, III. 841.
 Forreine Travel, Instructions for, by J. Howell, I. 573, 577.
 Fors Clavigera, by Ruskin, III. 571, 572.
 FORSTER, EDWARD MORGAN, III. 848.
 FORSTER, JOHN, III. 474.
 Forsyte Saga, by Galsworthy, III. 712.
 FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN, III. 845.
 FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN, I. 90.
 Forth Feasting, by Drummond, I. 510.
 Fortnightly Review founded, III. 495.
 Fortunatus, by Dekker, I. 422, 424.
 Forty-Five, by Stanhope, III. 374.
 Foscari, by Mary Russell Mitford, III. 176.
 Fossils, Palæozoic, by Sedgwick, III. 202.
 FOSTER, JOHN, II. 738.
 FOSTER, STEPHEN COLLINS, III. 823.
 FOULIS, HUGH (Neil Munro), III. 713.
 Founder of Christendom, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Four Elements, Interlude of the, I. 102, 162.
 Fourfold State, by Thomas Boston, II. 302.
 Four Georges, by Thackeray, III. 459; by McCarthy, III. 660.
 Fourteen Sonnets, by W. L. Bowles, II. 721, 722.
 FOWLER, ELLEN THORNEYCROFT, III. 851.
 FOWLER, THOMAS, III. 840.
 FOX, CHARLES JAMES, II. 636; Life of, by Sir G. O. Trevelyan, III. 687.
 FOX, GEORGE, I. 716.
 Fox, Charles James, Characters of, by Samuel Parr, II. 630.
 FOXE, JOHN, I. 251.
 Foxglove Manor, by R. Buchanan, III. 656.
 Fragments of Science, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Framley Parsonage, by Trollope, III. 487.
 France, Travels in, by Arthur Young, II. 628.
 Francis, Sir Philip (Junius), II. 518.
 Frankenstein, by Mrs Shelley, III. 519.
 FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN, III. 735, 739.
 Franklin, by Sir T. Overbury, I. 443.
 Frank Mildmay, by F. Marryat, III. 255.
 FRASER, ALEXANDER CAMPBELL, III. 839.
 FRASER, JAMES BAILLIE, II. 787.
 Fraser's Magazine begun, III. 260.
 Fraternity, by Galsworthy, III. 712.
 FRAZER, SIR JAMES GEORGE, III. 713.
 FREDERIC, HAROLD, III. 832.
 Frederick the Great, by Carlyle, III. 404, 405, 406, 411.
 Freedom of the Press, Apology for the, by Robert Hall, II. 788.
 Freedom of the Will, by Jonathan Edwards, III. 738, 739.
 Freeholder, II. 214; extract, II. 226.
 FREEMAN, EDWARD AUGUSTUS, III. 825.
 Free-thinking, by Anthony Collins, II. 163.
 Freethinking and Plain Speaking, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 French Influence on English Literature, I. 236; III. 1.
 French Influence on the Revolution Period of English Literature, II. 16.
 French in India, by Maleson, III. 632.
 French Literature, by Dowden, III. 687.
 French Literature of England in 12th to 14th century, I. 34.
 French Revolution, by Carlyle, III. 403, 406, 408.
 French Revolution, Reflections on the, by Burke, II. 544, 547, 548.
 FRENEAU, PHILIP, III. 736.
 FREERE, JOHN HOOKHAM, II. 675.
 Friar of Orders Gray, by Percy, III. 505.
 Friar of Orders Grey, by O'Keefe, II. 656.
 Friend, edited by Coleridge, III. 60, 61, 68.
 Friendless Girls, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
 Friendship's Garland, by M. Arnold, III. 594.
 Friends in Council, by Helps, III. 478.
 Frier Bacon and Frier Bungay, by Greene, I. 325.
 Froissart, by Madame Duclaux, III. 704.
 Froissart, Chronicles of, trans. by Lord Berners, I. 103.
 Frontenac and New France, by Parkman, III. 818.
 FROST, ROBERT, III. 835.
 Frost at Midnight, by Coleridge, III. 66.
 FROUDE, JAMES ANTHONY, III. 500.
 Fruits of Solitude, by W. Penn, II. 52, 53.
 Fudge Family in Paris, by Moore, III. 347.
 Fulgens and Lucrez, by Medwall, I. 157.
 FULLER, SARAH MARGARET, III. 757.
 FULLER, THOMAS, I. 596.
 FULLER-MAITLAND, J. A., III. 844.
 FULLERTON, LADY GEORGIANA, III. 520.
 Funeral, by Sir Richard Steele, II. 229.
 FURNESS, HORACE HOWARD, III. 825.
 FURNIVAL, FREDERICK JAMES, III. 839.
 Gaberlunzie's Wallet, by J. Ballantine, III. 377.
 Gaffer Gray, by Thomas Holcroft, II. 570.
 GAIMAR, GROFFREY, I. 35.
 GAIRDNER, JAMES, III. 632.
 GALE, NORMAN, III. 845.
 GALL, RICHARD, II. 827.
 Gallery of Literary Characters, by William Maginn, III. 260.
 GALLIENNE, RICHARD LE, III. 846.
 GALSORTHY, JOHN, III. 712.
 GALT, JOHN, III. 296, 726.
 GALTON, SIR FRANCIS, III. 830.
 GAMBOLD, JOHN, II. 421.
 Game at Chess, by T. Middleton, I. 458.
 Game of the Chesse, by Caxton, I. 95.
 Gamekeeper at Home, by Jefferies, III. 640.
 Gamester, by Edward Moore, II. 400.
 Gammer Gurton's Needle, by William Stevenson (?), I. 155, 156.
 Gardener's Daughter, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 Garden of Cyrus, by Sir T. Browne, I. 592, 595.
 Garden of Florence, by Reynolds, III. 268.
 Garden Song, by Austin Dobson, III. 689.
 GARDINER, SAMUEL RAWSON, III. 631.
 GARLAND, HAMLIN, III. 855.
 Garmond of Ladeis, by Henryson, I. 189.
 GARNETT, RICHARD, III. 608.
 GARRICK, DAVID, II. 431.
 GARRISON, WILLIAM LLOYD, III. 774, 811.
 GARTH, SIR SAMUEL, II. 109.
 Garth, by Julian Hawthorne, III. 831.
 GASCOIGNE, GEORGE, I. 238, 247.
 GASKELL, MRS, III. 527.
 Gathering Clouds, by F. W. Farrar, III. 661.
 GAU, JOHN, I. 230.
 GAUDEN, JOHN, I. 587.
 GAUNT, MARY (Mrs L. Miller), III. 730.
 GAY, JOHN, II. 5, 172.
 Gebir, by W. S. Lander, III. 141, 143.
 GEDDES, ALEXANDER, II. 798.
 GEIKIE, SIR ARCHIBALD, III. 840.
 Generali Historie of the Turkes, by Richard Knolles, I. 272.
 Genesis A, I. 9, II. 22; Genesis B, I. 22, 25.
 Gentle Craft by Thomas Deloney, I. 333.
 Gentle Grafter, by O. Henry (W. S. Porter), III. 833.
 Gentle Shepherd, by Ramsay, II. 313, 314.
 Gentleman's Magazine, II. 12, 244.
 GROFFREY OF MONMOUTH, I. 3, 33, 35, 37.
 Geoffrey Hamlyn, by Henry Kingsley, III. 517, 518.
 Geographical Distribution of Animals, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 Geology, Principles of, by Sir Charles Lyell, III. 317.
 Geology of Russia in Europe and the Urals, by Sir R. I. Murchison, III. 267.
 GEORGE, DAVID LLOYD, III. 845.
 GEORGE, HENRY, III. 854.
 GEORGE, WALTER LIONEL, III. 848.
 George Barnwell, by George Lillo, II. 276.
 George III., English Literature under, II. 475.
 George III., Memoirs of, by Walpole, II. 411.
 George IV., King William IV., and Queen Victoria, Journal of the Reigns of, by Charles Greville, III. 319-321.
 George-a-Greene, by Greene, I. 324.
 Georgica, trans. by Thomas May, I. 582; by Joseph Watton, II. 507; by William Sotheby, II. 713.
 GERALD DE BARY (Giraldus Cambrensis), I. 33.
 GERARD, ALEXANDER, II. 388.
 German Poetry, by William Taylor, II. 712.
 Gertrude of Wyoming, by Campbell, II. 766, 767.
 Gesta Romanorum, I. 34.
 Ghaour, by Byron, III. 122.
 GIBBON, EDWARD, II. 9, 550.
 GIBBON, LEWIS GRASSIC (J. L. Mitchell), III. 849.
 GIBBON, PERCEVAL, III. 733.
 GIBBONS, STELLA, III. 836.
 GIBBS, SIR PHILIP, III. 847.
 GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON, III. 715, 723.
 GIFFORD, RICHARD, II. 441.
 GIFFORD, WILLIAM, II. 666.
 GILBERT, SIR WILLIAM SCHWENCK, III. 694.
 GILDAS, HISTORIEN, I. 8.
 GILDER, RICHARD WATSON, III. 831.
 GILDON, CHARLES, II. 196.
 GILFILLAN, GEORGE, III. 480.
 GILFILLAN, ROBERT, III. 311.
 GILLESPIE, GEORGE, I. 821.
 GILLETTE, WILLIAM, III. 855.

- GILLIES, JOHN, II. 636.
 GILPIN, WILLIAM, II. 655.
 Gipsies, by Crabbe, II. 698; by Wordsworth, III. 24.
 GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, I. 33.
 Gispissus, by Gerald Griffin, III. 357.
 GISSING, GEORGE, III. 711.
 Gitanjali, by Tagore, III. 710.
 Glaciers of the Alps, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Glaciers, Theory of, by Forbes, III. 400.
 GLADSTONE, WILLIAM EWART, III. 447;
 Life of, by McCarthy, III. 660; by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 GLANVIL, RANULPH DE, I. 34.
 GLAPTHORNE, HENRY, I. 487.
 GLASCOCK, WILLIAM NUGENT, III. 259.
 GLASGOW, ELLEN, III. 856.
 Glasgow, by Alexander Smith, III. 605.
 GLASPELL, SUSAN, III. 856.
 Gleanings, by Gladstone, III. 448.
 GLEIG, GEORGE ROBERT, III. 323.
 GLEN, WILLIAM, III. 309.
 Glenara, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Glenarvon, by Lady Caroline Lamb, II. 780.
 Glenaveril, by the Earl of Lytton, III. 638.
 Gloomy Winter's now Awa', by Tannahill, II. 830.
 Gloria Mundi, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
 Glossarium Archaeologicum, by Spelman, I. 271.
 GLOUCESTER, ROBERT OF, I. 32, 42.
 GLOVER, JEAN, II. 810.
 GLOVER, RICHARD, II. 351.
 GLOVER, TERROT RAEVLEIGH, III. 847.
 Go, Lovely Rose, by Edmund Waller, I. 627.
 Goblin Market, by C. Rossetti, III. 646, 647.
 God and the Bible, by M. Arnold, III. 595.
 God and the Man, by K. Buchanan, III. 656.
 Goddwyn, by Thomas Chatterton, II. 516.
 Godfrey of Bulloigne, by Carew, I. 353; by Fairfax, I. 444.
 GODLEY, ALFRED DENIS, III. 844.
 GODWIN, MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT, II. 706.
 GODWIN, WILLIAM, II. 702; Life of, by Kegan Paul, II. 703.
 Goethe, Life of, by Lewes, III. 496.
 Goeldic Invasion, I. 2, 831.
 Golden Book of Marcus Aurelius, by Lord Berners, I. 104.
 Golden Bough, by Sir J. G. Frazer, III. 713.
 Golden Butterfly, by Besant and Rice, III. 650.
 Golden Legend, by Longfellow, III. 770.
 Golden Legend, trans. by Chaucer, I. 128.
 Golden Targe, by Dunbar, I. 194.
 Golden Treasury, ed. by F. T. Palgrave, III. 609.
 GOLDING, ARTHUR, I. 266.
 GOLDSMITH, OLIVER, II. 8, 11, 478; Life of, by Forster, III. 474; by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 GOLLANZ, SIR ISRAEL, III. 846.
 Gondibert, by D'Avenant, I. 628.
 GOODALL, WALTER, II. 389.
 Good Counsel, Ballad of, by James I., I. 183.
 Good-Natur'd Man, by Goldsmith, II. 480.
 Good-night, and Joy be wi' ye a', by Sir A. Boswell, II. 832.
 GOODWIN, THOMAS, I. 668.
 Good Words, III. 396.
 GOOGE, BARNABE, I. 265.
 Gorboduc, by Norton and Sackville, I. 157, 240.
 Gordian Knot, by C. W. S. Brooks, III. 492.
 GORDON, ADAM LINDSAY, III. 729, 730.
 GORDON, CHARLES WILLIAM, III. 728.
 GORDON, LADY DUFF (Lucie Austin), III. 873, 783.
 GORE, CATHERINE G. F., III. 279.
 GORE, CHARLES, III. 843.
 Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions, I. 257.
 GOSSE, SIR EDMUND, III. 696.
 Gossip in a Library, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 GOSBON, STEPHEN, I. 266.
 Gotham, by C. Churchill, II. 496, 497.
 GOUGE, RICHARD, II. 629.
 GOULDSBURY, CULLEN, III. 733.
 Governance of England, by Fortescue, I. 90.
 Government, Best Form of, by Sir G. C. Lewis, III. 207.
 Government, Discourses on, by Algernon Sidney, I. 716.
 Governor, by Sir T. Eliot, I. 127.
 GOWER, JOHN, I. 35, 74.
 Grace Abounding, by Bunyan, I. 719, 722.
 GRAFTON, RICHARD, I. 257.
 GRAHAM, DOUGAL, II. 810.
 GRAHAM, ENNIS (Mrs Mary Louisa Stewart Molesworth), III. 850.
 GRAHAM, JAMES. See MONTROSE, MARQUIS OF.
 GRAHAM, R. B. CUNNINGHAME, III. 724, 843.
 GRAHAM, ROBERT, II. 797.
 GRAHAM, STEPHEN, III. 848.
 Graham of Claverhouse, by Mark Napier, III. 291.
 GRAHAME, JAMES, II. 689.
 GRAHAME, KENNETH, III. 844.
 GRAHAME, SIMON, I. 818.
 GRAINGER, JAMES, II. 375.
 Grammar of Assent, by Newman, III. 338.
 GRAND, SARAH, III. 851.
 Grandfather's Chair, by Hawthorne, III. 780.
 Grandissimes, by G. W. Cable, III. 829.
 GRANGER, JAMES, II. 388.
 GRANT, JAMES, III. 578.
 GRANT, JAMES AUGUSTUS, III. 610.
 GRANT, MRS ANNE, II. 506.
 GRANT, MRS ELIZABETH, II. 596.
 GRANVILLE, G. See LANSDOWNE, LORD.
 GRANVILLE-BARKER, HARLEY, III. 847.
 GRASS OF PARNASSUS, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 GRATTAN, HENRY, II. 678.
 GRATTAN, THOMAS COLLEY, III. 350.
 Grave, by Robert Blair, II. 305.
 Graver Thoughts of a Country Parson, by A. K. H. Boyd, III. 624.
 GRAVES, ALFRED PERCEVAL, III. 694.
 GRAVES, CLOTILDE, III. 733.
 GRAVES, RICHARD, II. 376.
 GRAVES, ROBERT, III. 849.
 Graves of a Household, by Mrs Hemans, III. 180.
 Graves of Tirconnel and Tyrone, by A. de Vere, III. 582.
 GRAY, DAVID, III. 657.
 GRAY, MAXWELL (Miss M. Tuttle), III. 851.
 GRAY, THOMAS, II. 11, 359; III. 5; book on, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Great Adventure, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 Great Britain, History of, by Speed, I. 271; by Hume, II. 377-381.
 Great Duke of Florence, by Massinger, I. 464, 466.
 Great Remembrance, by R. W. Gilder, III. 831.
 Great Stone Face, by Hawthorne, III. 782.
 Greatest English Poets, by Addison, II. 212, 218.
 Greece, History of, by W. Mitford, II. 630-632; by John Gillies, II. 636; by Thirlwall, III. 204; by Finlay, III. 217; by George Grote, III. 199; Ancient Language and Literature of, by Colonel Wm. Mure, III. 219.
 Greece and Russia, Travels in, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Greek Social Life, by Sir John P. Mahaffy, III. 688.
 GREELEY, HORACE, III. 811.
 GREEN, JOHN RICHARD, III. 652.
 GREEN, MATTHEW, II. 288.
 GREEN, MRS ALICE STOPFORD, III. 850.
 GREEN, MRS MARY ANNE EVERETT, III. 850.
 GREEN, THOMAS HILL, III. 651.
 Green Fire, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Green grow the Rashes, by Burns, II. 824.
 Green Linnet, by Wordsworth, II. 16, 21.
 Green Mansions, by W. H. Hudson, III. 711.
 GREENE, ROBERT, I. 238, 240, 323.
 Greenland, by James Montgomery, II. 742, 743.
 GREG, PERCY, III. 400.
 GREG, WILLIAM RATHBONE, III. 400.
 GREGORY, LADY, III. 850.
 GREVILLE, CHARLES CAVENDISH FULKE, III. 819.
 GREVILLE, FULKE, LORD BROOKE, I. 354.
 GREY, EDWARD, VISCOUNT, III. 845.
 Grey, Memoir of Sir George, by Mandell Creighton, III. 687.
 GRIERSON, SIR HERBERT J. C., III. 846.
 GRIEVE, CHRISTOPHER M., III. 849.
 Griff, by Farjeon, III. 732.
 GRIFFIN, B., I. 278.
 GRIFFIN, GERALD, III. 357.
 Griffith Gaunt, by Charles Reade, III. 483.
 GRIMALD or GRIMOALD, NICHOLAS, I. 278.
 Griselda, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 GRISWOLD, RUFUS WILMOT, III. 853.
 Groats-worth of Wit, by Greene, I. 325.
 GROCVN, WILLIAM, I. 120.
 Grongar Hill, by John Dyer, II. 284.
 GROOME, FRANCIS HINDER, III. 842.
 GROSE, FRANCIS, II. 629.
 GROSSETESTE, ROBERT, I. 34.
 GROTE, GEORGE, III. 199.
 Grotesque and Arabesque, Tales of the, by E. A. Poe, III. 786.
 GROVE, SIR GEORGE, III. 578.
 Gruach, by Gordon Bottomley, III. 714.
 GRUNDY, SYDNEY, III. 695.
 Gryll Grange, by T. L. Peacock, III. 150, 153.
 Guardian, II. 4, 121, 195, 214; extract by Addison, II. 226; commenced, II. 282; extract by Steele, II. 235.
 Guardian Angel, by Holmes, III. 791.
 Gude and Godlie Ballatis, I. 216.
 Guesses at Truth, by A. and J. Hare, III. 269, 270.
 GUEST, LADY CHARLOTTE, III. 387.
 Guiana, Discovery of, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 305.
 Guizot's Civilisation, trans. by Mrs Austin, III. 373.
 Gulistan, trans. by Sir E. Arnold, III. 663.
 Gulliver's Travels, by Swift, II. 125, 127, 141-143.
 Gull's Hornbook, by Dekker, I. 425.
 Gustavus Vasa, by Henry Brooke, II. 396.
 GUTHRIE, THOMAS, III. 342.
 GUTHRIE, THOMAS ANSTEV, III. 844.
 GUTHRIE, WILLIAM, II. 387.
 Guy Livingstone, by Lawrence, III. 624.
 Guy Mannering, by Scott, III. 40.
 Guy of Warwick, I. 61.
 GWYNN, STEPHEN, III. 846.
 H, Riddle on, by Miss Fanshawe, II. 739.
 HABBERTON, JOHN, III. 854.
 Habbie Simson, by R. Sempill, I. 818.
 HABBINGTON, WILLIAM, I. 571.
 Habitant, by W. H. Drummond, III. 728.
 Hafiz, Song of, by Sir W. Jones, II. 616.
 HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER, III. 703.
 Hail, Columbia! by J. Hopkinson, III. 736.
 HAILES, LORD, II. 455.
 Hajji Baba, by Morier, II. 783, 784-787.
 HAKE, THOMAS GORDON, III. 384.
 HAKLUYT, RICHARD, I. 283; Hakluytus Posthumus, I. 449.
 HALE, EDWARD EVERETT, III. 853.
 HALE, SIR MATTHEW, I. 663.
 HALES, JOHN, I. 550.
 HALES, JOHN WESLEY, III. 840.
 Half-Century of Conflict, by Parkman, III. 818.
 Half-Heathen Poetry, I. 7.
 Half-Sister, by G. E. Jewsbury, III. 520.
 HALIBURTON, THOMAS CHANDLER, III. 726.
 HALIFAX, EARL OF, II. 244.
 HALIFAX, MARQUIS OF, I. 755.
 HALKET, GEORGE, II. 810.
 HALL, BASIL, III. 227.
 HALL, EDWARD, I. 106.
 HALL, JOSEPH, I. 417.
 HALL, MRS S. C., III. 280.
 HALL, ROBERT, II. 738.
 HALL, SAMUEL CARTER, III. 281.
 HALLAM, ARTHUR HENRY, III. 548.
 HALLAM, HENRY, III. 198.
 HALLECK, FITZ-GREENE, III. 749.
 Hallo, My Fancy, by Cleland, I. 829.
 Hollow-Fair, by F. Sempill (?), I. 819; by R. Fergusson, II. 808, 807.
 Hame Content, by R. Fergusson, II. 808.
 Hame, Hame, Hame, by Allan Cunningham, III. 804.
 HAMERTON, PHILIP GILBERT, III. 613.
 HAMILTON, ALEXANDER, III. 736.
 HAMILTON, ELIZABETH, II. 808.
 HAMILTON, SIR WILLIAM, III. 245.
 HAMILTON, THOMAS, III. 254.
 HAMILTON, W., OF BANGOR, II. 309.
 HAMILTON, W., OF GILBERTFIELD, II. 309.
 Hamilton's Catechism, Archbishop, I. 218.
 Hamlet, by Shakespeare, I. 368.
 HAMLEY, SIR EDWARD BRUCE, III. 839.
 HAMMOND, JAMES, II. 422.
 HAMPOLE, RICHARD ROLLE OF, I. 49.
 Handful of Pleasant Delights, I. 257, 274.
 Handlyng Synne, by Mannyng, I. 41, 43.
 Handy Andy, by Lover, III. 355.
 Hannah Thurston, by B. Taylor, III. 822.
 HANNAY, JAMES, III. 632, 726.
 Hannibal, by John Nichol, III. 637.
 Hans Breitmann Ballads, III. 784.
 Happiness, Essays on, by Sir G. Mackenzie, I. 826.
 Hard Cash, by C. Reade, III. 483, 484.
 HARDY, THOMAS, III. 678, 722.
 Hardyknute, by Lady E. Wardlaw, II. 812.
 HARE, AUGUSTUS AND JULIUS, III. 269.
 Hare with Many Friends, by Gay, II. 174.
 HARRINGTON, JOHN, I. 264.
 HARRINGTON, SIR JOHN, I. 391.

- HARLAND, HENRY, III. 855.
 Harleian Miscellany, ed. by Oldys, II. 301.
 Harold, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 HARPUR, CHARLES, III. 729.
 HARRADEN, BEATRICE, III. 851.
 HARRINGTON, JAMES, I. 619.
 HARRINGTON, SIR JOHN. See HARINGTON, SIR JOHN.
 HARRIS, JAMES, II. 358.
 HARRIS, JOEL CHANDLER, III. 831.
 HARRISON, CONSTANCE CARY, III. 854.
 HARRISON, FREDERIC, III. 661.
 HARRISON, MARY ST LEGER, III. 704.
 HARRISS, HENRY, III. 853.
 Harris's (Mrs Frances) Petition, 1700, by Swift, II. 133.
 Harrowing of Hell, I. 45.
 Harry Coverdale's Courtship, by F. E. Smedley, III. 492.
 Harry Lorrer, by Lever, III. 359, 360.
 Harry Richmond, by Meredith, III. 658.
 HARTE, FRANCIS BRET, III. 827.
 HARTLEY, DAVID, II. 338.
 HARVEY, GABRIEL, I. 332.
 Hassan the Camel-driver, by Collins, II. 369.
 Hastings, Speech against Warren, by Sheridan, II. 569.
 Haunch of Venison, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 486.
 Haunted and the Haunters, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Haunted Palace, by E. A. Poe, III. 789.
 Havelok the Dane, I. 43, 44, 336.
 HAWES, STEPHEN, I. 112.
 HAWKER, ROBERT STEPHEN, III. 381.
 HAWKESWORTH, JOHN, II. 410.
 HAWKINS, SIR ANTHONY HOPE, III. 708.
 Hawthorn and Lavender, by W. E. Henley, III. 695.
 HAWTHORNE, JULIAN, III. 831.
 HAWTHORNE, NATHANIEL, III. 778.
 Hawthorne, by Henry James, III. 830.
 HAY, IAN (John Hay Beith), III. 847.
 HAY, JOHN, III. 825.
 Haydon, Autobiography of B. R., compiled and edited by Tom Taylor, III. 468.
 HAYLEY, WILLIAM, II. 614.
 HAYNE, PAUL HAMILTON, III. 853.
 HAYWARD, ABRAHAM, III. 327.
 HAYWARD, SIR JOHN, I. 271.
 Haze, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 798.
 HAZLITT, WILLIAM, III. 79.
 'H. D.' (Hilda Doolittle), III. 856.
 HEAD, SIR FRANCIS BOND, III. 266.
 HEAD, SIR GEORGE, III. 266.
 Headlong Hall, by Thomas Love Peacock, III. 150, 151.
 HEARN, LAFADIO, III. 842.
 HEARNE, THOMAS, II. 244.
 Heart of Gold, by D. Jerrold, III. 328.
 Heart of Midlothian, by Scott, III. 39, 44-46.
 Heartsease, by Miss Yonge, III. 535.
 Hearts-ease and Rue, by Lowell, III. 802.
 Heat as a Mode of Motion, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Heathen Chinese, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Heavens, Mechanism of, by Mrs Somerville, III. 186.
 HEAVYSEGE, CHARLES, III. 725.
 HEBER, REGINALD, III. 212.
 Hebrew Melodies, by Byron, III. 122.
 Hecatompethia, by T. Watson, I. 241, 277.
 Hedda Gabler, trans. by Gosse, III. 696.
 Hegel, Secret of, by J. H. Stirling, III. 661.
 Heir at law, by Colman, II. 656, 657.
 Heiress of Bruges, by Grattan, III. 351.
 Heir of Redclyffe, by Miss Yonge, III. 535.
 Helbeck of Bannisdale, by Mrs H. Ward, III. 704.
 Helen of Kirkconnell, by J. Mayne, II. 811.
 Helen of Troy, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Helenore, by Alexander Ross, II. 317.
 Hellas, by Shelley, III. 112, 116.
 Hellenica, by Landor, III. 141.
 HELPS, SIR ARTHUR, III. 478.
 HELMANS, MRS, III. 179.
 HEMINGWAY, ERNEST, III. 856.
 HENLEY, WILLIAM ERNEST, III. 695.
 HENRY, MATTHEW, II. 60.
 HENRY, O. (W. S. Porter), III. 833.
 HENRY, ROBERT, II. 388.
 Henry II., Reign of, by Lyttelton, II. 349.
 Henry IV., by Shakespeare, I. 366.
 Henry V., by Shakespeare, I. 366.
 Henry VI., by Shakespeare, I. 359.
 Henry VIII. as author, I. 149.
 Henry VIII., by Fletcher and Shakespeare, I. 373; Henry VIII., by Bacon, I. 385; Henry VIII., by Lord Herbert, I. 491.
 Henry and Emma, by Prior, II. 114.
 Henry Masterton, by G. P. R. James, III. 327.
 HENRY OF HUNTINGDON, I. 33.
 HENRYSON, ROBERT, I. 166, 189.
 HENTY, GEORGE ALFRED, III. 840.
 Hephzibah Guinness, by S. W. Mitchell, III. 825.
 HERAUD, JOHN ABRAHAM, III. 268.
 HERBERT, GEORGE, I. 495.
 HERBERT OF CHERBURY, LORD, I. 401.
 HERBERT, SIR THOMAS, I. 601.
 HERBERT, WILLIAM, II. 755.
 HERD, DAVID, II. 797.
 Herdsman's Book (Cura Pastorals), I. 20.
 HEREFORD, NICHOLAS, I. 86.
 Heretic, A, by Walter C. Smith, III. 607.
 Heretics, by G. K. Chesterton, III. 711.
 Hereward the Wake, by Kingsley, III. 513.
 HERFORD, CHARLES HAROLD, III. 843.
 HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH, III. 856.
 Hermes, by James Harris, II. 358.
 Hermit, by Beattie, II. 526, 527; by Parnell, II. 249.
 HERNE, JAMES A., III. 854.
 Hero and Leander, by Marlowe, I. 352.
 Heroic Stanzas, by Dryden, I. 792, 795, 800.
 HERRICK, ROBERT, I. 560, 731.
 HERSCHEL, SIR JOHN, III. 243.
 Hertha, by Swinburne, III. 675.
 HERVEY, JAMES, II. 338.
 HERVEY, LORD, Memoirs, II. 280.
 Hesiod, trans. by Cooke, II. 290.
 Hesperides, by Herrick, I. 560.
 HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY, III. 845.
 HEVLIN, PETER, I. 582.
 HEYWOOD, JOHN, I. 152.
 HEYWOOD, THOMAS, I. 431.
 Hiawatha, by Longfellow, III. 770, 773.
 Hibernian Nights Entertainments, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362.
 HICHENS, ROBERT SMYTHE, III. 846.
 Hierarchy of the Blessed Angels, by T. Heywood, I. 433.
 Hieroglyphics, by Quarles, I. 566, 568.
 Higden's Polychronicon, I. 33, 84.
 HIGGINSON, T. WENTWORTH, III. 811.
 Highlander, by Mrs Anne Grant, II. 506.
 Highland Host, by Cleland, I. 829.
 Highland Parish, by Norman Macleod, III. 397.
 Highland Rambles, by Sir T. Dick Lauder, III. 805.
 High Life below Stairs, by James Townley, II. 410.
 Highways and Byways, by T. C. Grattan, III. 350.
 HILDRETH, RICHARD, III. 853.
 HILL, AARON, II. 107.
 HILL, GEORGE BIRKBECK, III. 840.
 Hills of Dream, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Hillyars and the Burtons, by H. Kingsley, III. 517.
 Hind and the Panther, by Dryden, I. 793, 796, 800.
 HINKSON, MRS KATHARINE TYNAN, III. 851.
 HINTON, JAMES, III. 613.
 His Darling Sin, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 Historical Characters, by H. L. Bulwer, III. 336.
 Historical Register, by Fielding, II. 340.
 Historic Doubts, by Whately, III. 196.
 Historie of the Reformation, by John Knox, I. 220.
 History, Study of, by Bolingbroke, II. 202, 204; by Lord Acton, III. 684.
 History, Universal, II. 387, 388.
 History of Our Own Times, by J. McCarthy, III. 600.
 History of English Poetry, by W. J. Court-hope, III. 684.
 History of Scotland. See SCOTLAND.
 Histro-Mastix, by W. Prynn, I. 584.
 HOADLY, BENJAMIN, II. 245.
 HOBBS, JOHN OLIVER (Pearl Mary Teresa Richards), III. 834.
 HOBBS, THOMAS, I. 553.
 HOBY, SIR THOMAS, I. 258.
 HOCCELEVE, THOMAS, I. 77.
 Hochelega, by George Warburton, III. 274; ed. by Eliot Warburton, III. 274.
 HOCKING, JOSEPH, III. 843.
 HOCKING, SILAS KITTO, III. 842.
 HODGKIN, THOMAS, III. 661.
 HODGSON, FRANCES ELIZA (Frances Hodgson Burnett), III. 833.
 HODGSON, RALPH, III. 847.
 HOGAN, JAMES FRANCIS, III. 730.
 Hogarth, Epistle to, by Churchill, II. 495.
 497; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 HOGGEN, LANCELOT, III. 849.
 HOGG, JAMES, III. 8, 292.
 Hoggarty Diamond, by Thackeray, III. 456.
 Hohenlinden, by Campbell, II. 766, 769.
 HOLCROFT, THOMAS, II. 669.
 HOLINSHED, RAPHAEL, I. 255.
 HOLLAND, JOSIAH GILBERT, III. 778.
 HOLLAND, PHILEMON, I. 260.
 Holland-Tide Tales, by G. Griffin, III. 357.
 Holly Tree, by Southey, III. 52.
 HOLMES, OLIVER WENDELL, III. 790.
 HOLTRY, WINIFRED, III. 852.
 Holy and Prophane State, by Fuller, 596, 597.
 Holy Dying, by Jeremy Taylor, I. 604, 606.
 Holy Living, by Jeremy Taylor, I. 604.
 Holy Roman Empire, by Bryce, III. 686.
 Holy Scriptures, Introduction to the, by Thomas Hartwell Horne, II. 714.
 Holy Thursday, by William Blake, II. 720.
 Holy War, by Bunyan, I. 720.
 Holy Willie's Prayer, by Burns, II. 822.
 HOLYOAKE, GEORGE JACOB, III. 839.
 HOME, HENRY (Lord Kames), II. 388.
 HOME, JOHN, II. 453.
 Homer, Studies on, by Gladstone, III. 448.
 Homer, translations of, by Chapman, I. 377; by Hobbes, I. 555, 559; by Clarke, II. 100; by Pope, II. 179, 191; by Tickell, II. 251; by Macpherson, II. 500; by Cowper, II. 602, 609; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Blackie, III. 490; by Morris, III. 665; by Lang, &c., III. 692.
 Homes and Haunts of the Italian Poets, III. 490.
 Homes of England, by Mrs Hemans, III. 180.
 Homilies of Ælfric, I. 26.
 Homilies on the Sacraments, by Edward Irving, III. 268.
 HONE, WILLIAM, II. 759.
 Honest Whore, by Dekker, I. 423.
 Honey Moon, by John Tobin, II. 710.
 HOOD, BASIL, III. 846.
 HOOD, THOMAS, III. 136.
 HOOD, TOM, the Younger, III. 668.
 HOOK, THEODORE EDWARD, III. 103.
 HOOKER, RICHARD, I. 279.
 HOOLE, JOHN, II. 755.
 'Hoosier Poet' (J. W. Riley), III. 831.
 Hoosier Schoolmaster, by E. Eggleston, III. 824.
 HOPE, ANTHONY (Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins), III. 708.
 HOPE, THOMAS, II. 745.
 Hope, by William Cowper, II. 603.
 HOPKINS, GERARD MANLEY, III. 713, 723.
 HOPKINS, JOHN, I. 150.
 Horace, trans. by Dryden, I. 806; by Smart, II. 424; by Geddes, II. 708, 800; by Conington, III. 634.
 Horace in London, by James and Horace Smith, III. 159.
 Horæ Hellenicæ, by J. S. Blackie, III. 490.
 Horæ Lyricæ, by Isaac Watts, II. 206-209.
 Horæ Paulinæ, by Paley, II. 643, 645.
 Horæ Subsecivæ, by Dr J. Brown, III. 449.
 Horatian Ode on Cromwell, by Marvell, I. 714.
 Horatius, by Macaulay, III. 369.
 HORNE, RICHARD HENRY, III. 413, 729.
 HORNE, THOMAS HARTWELL, II. 714.
 HORNING, ERNEST WILLIAM, III. 846.
 HORSLEY, SAMUEL, II. 646.
 Hospital Rhymes, by Henley, III. 695.
 HOUGHTON, LORD, III. 382.
 HOUGHTON, STANLEY, III. 848.
 Hound of Heaven, by Francis Thompson, III. 710.
 Hound of the Baskervilles, by Sir A. Conan Doyle, III. 707.
 Hours in a Library, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 Hours of Idleness, by Lord Byron, III. 120.
 Hours of Thought, by James Martineau, III. 392, 393.
 House by the Churchyard, by Le Fanu, III. 365.
 House of Fame, by Chaucer, I. 63, 70.
 House of Life, by Rossetti, III. 642, 643, 644.
 House of the Seven Gables, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 House of the Wolfings, by William Morris, III. 666.
 House of Titian, by Mrs Jameson, III. 185.
 House of Usher, by Poe, III. 786, 787, 788.
 Household Words, ed. by Dickens, III. 465.
 Householder, by Robert Browning, III. 565.
 HOUSMAN, ALFRED EDWARD, III. 713.
 HOUSMAN, LAURENCE, III. 847.
 HOVEY, RICHARD, III. 838.
 HOWARD, BRONSON, III. 854.
 HOWARD, EDWARD, III. 259.
 HOWARD, SIR ROBERT, I. 787.
 Howard, Life of John, by Hepworth Dixoo, III. 578.
 HOWE, JOHN, I. 669.
 HOWE, JOSEPH, III. 725, 726.
 HOWE, JULIA WARD, III. 826.

- HOWELL, JAMES, I. 572.
 HOWELLS, WILLIAM DEAN, III. 829.
 HOWIE, JOHN, II. 640.
 HOWITT, WILLIAM AND MARY, III. 283.
 HUCHON OF THE AWLE REALE, I. 51, 166, 171.
 Huckleberry Finn, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Hudibras, by Butler, I. 735, 737.
 HUDSON, HENRY NORMAN, III. 853.
 HUDSON, W. H., III. 711.
 HUDSON, WILLIAM HENRY, III. 845.
 HUEFFER, FORD MADDOX, III. 847.
 HUGGINS, SIR WILLIAM, III. 839.
 Hugh Trevor, by Holcroft, II. 570.
 Hugh Wynne, by S. W. Mitchell, III. 825.
 HUGHES, JOHN, II. 106.
 HUGHES, THOMAS, I. 333.
 HUGHES, THOMAS, III. 577.
 HULME, THOMAS ERNEST, III. 718, 848.
 Human Life, by S. Rogers, II. 723, 725.
 Human Mind, by James Mill, II. 757; by Thomas Brown, II. 761.
 Human Nature, by Hobbes, I. 554, 557, 558.
 Human Personality, by Myers, III. 691.
 Human Understanding, by Locke, II. 18; by David Hume, II. 377.
 HUME, ALEXANDER, I. 507.
 HUME, DAVID, II. 377; Life of, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
 HUME, MARTIN, III. 841.
 HUMPHREYS, MRS DESMOND, III. 850.
 Humphrey Clinker, by Smollett, II. 443, 444, 447.
 HUNGERFORD, MRS MARGARET WOLFE, III. 851.
 HUNNIS, WILLIAM, I. 156.
 HUNT, JAMES HENRY LEIGH, III. 147.
 HUNTER, MRS, II. 599.
 Huon of Bordeaux, ed. by Lee, III. 707.
 HURD, RICHARD, II. 428.
 Hurlothrumbo, II. 99.
 Hurl of Sedition, by Sir J. Cheke, I. 143.
 Husband's Message, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 HUTCHESON, FRANCIS, II. 290.
 HUTCHINSON, A. S. M., III. 848.
 HUTCHINSON, LUCY, I. 674.
 HUTTON, RICHARD HOLT, III. 632.
 HUXLEY, ALDOUS, III. 716, 720.
 HUXLEY, JULIAN, III. 848.
 HUXLEY, THOMAS HENRY, III. 615.
 Whomely Rhymes, by W. Barnes, III. 412.
 HYDE, DOUGLAS, III. 845.
 Hydriotaphia, by Sir T. Browne, I. 501, 502, 593-505.
 Hylas and Philonous, by Berkeley, II. 265, 267-269.
 Hymen's Triumph, by S. Daniel, I. 339, 340.
 Hymn of Heavenly Beauty, by Spenser, I. 296, 302; to the Name above every Name, by Crashaw, I. 681; on the Nativity, by Milton, I. 687, 693; to Darkness, by Thomas Yalden, II. 200; to Intellectual Beauty, by Shelley, III. 108, 112.
 Hymns for Infant Minds, by Ann and Jane Taylor, III. 174.
 Hypatia, by Charles Kingsley, III. 513.
 Hyperion, by Keats, III. 99, 100, 103; by Longfellow, III. 768, 769.
 Hypolympia, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 HYSLOP, JAMES, III. 310.
- I do not love Thee, by Mrs Norton, III. 386.
 I remember, I remember, by Hood, III. 138, 140.
 Ibsen, by Gosse, III. 696.
 Ichabod, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775, 776.
 I'd be a Butterfly, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Idalia, by Ouida, III. 690.
 Idesleigh, Life and Letters of Lord, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Ideal Husband, by Oscar Wilde, III. 707.
 Ideals in Ireland, III. 707.
 Idea of a Patriot King, by Bolingbroke, II. 202, 206.
 Ideas of Good and Evil, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 Idler, by Dr Johnson, II. 459.
 Idler in Italy, by the Countess of Blessington, III. 278.
 Idyll of Red Gulch, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Idylls of the King, by Tennyson, III. 541, 542.
 If Doughty Deeds, by R. Graham, II. 708.
 Iliad, translations of, by Chapman, I. 377; by Hobbes, I. 555, 559; by Clarke, II. 160; by Alexander Pope, II. 179, 191; by Tickell, II. 261; by Macpherson, II. 500; by Cowper, II. 609; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Blackie, III. 490; by Conington, III. 634; by A. Lang, &c., III. 692.
 Illumination, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
 Il Penseroso, by Milton, I. 687, 696.
- Image of Death, by Southwell, I. 338.
 Imaginary Conversations, by Landor, III. 141, 144-146.
 Imaginary Portraits, by Pater, III. 607.
 Imagination and Fancy, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
 Imagist Poetry, III. 723.
 Imitations of Horace, by Pope, II. 179.
 Imitations of Living Writers, by Isaac Hawkins Browne, II. 287.
 Immorality of the English Stage, by Jeremy Collier, II. 47.
 Importance of being Earnest, by Oscar Wilde, III. 707.
 Imposture, by Shirley, I. 485.
 Impregnable Rock of Scripture, by Gladstone, III. 448.
 Improvement of the Mind, by Mrs Chapone, II. 418.
 In All Shades, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 INCHEBALD, MRS ELIZABETH, II. 584.
 Inconstancy Upbraided, by Sir R. Ayton, I. 508.
 Inconstant Mistress, by Sir R. Ayton, I. 508.
 Independent in Politics, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802.
 India, History of, by Mountstuart Elphinstone, III. 366.
 India, China, and Japan, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Indian Mutiny, by Malleson, III. 632.
 Indian Pilgrim, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Indicator, edited by L. Hunt, III. 148, 149.
 Indostan, History of, by Orme, II. 541.
 Inductive Sciences, by Whewell, III. 198.
 Infant Medusa, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 Infernal Marriage, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 436, 439.
 Infidel, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 INGE, WILLIAM RALPH, III. 845.
 INGELOW, JEAN, III. 528.
 Ingoldsby Legends, by Barham, III. 166.
 INGRAM, J. K., III. 580.
 Inheritance, by Susan E. Ferrier, III. 300.
 Inisfail, by Aubrey de Vere, III. 581.
 Initials, by the Baroness von Tauphœus, III. 385.
 Inland Voyage, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697.
 In Memoriam, by Tennyson, III. 541, 542, 546, 548.
 Inner Temple Masque, by W. Browne, I. 489, 490.
 INNES, COSMO, III. 291.
 INNES, THOMAS, II. 302.
 Innkeeper of Abbeville, by Fitzball, II. 783.
 Innocents Abroad, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Inquirer, by Godwin, II. 702.
 Inquiry into the Human Mind, by Reid, II. 388.
 Insane Root, by Mrs Campbell Praed, III. 732.
 Insatiable Countess, by Marston, I. 462, 464.
 Insectivorous Plants, by Darwin, III. 417.
 Instauration of the Sciences, by Lord Bacon, I. 380.
 Institutes of Metaphysics, by Ferrier, III. 398.
 Instructions for Forreine Travel, by Howell, I. 573, 577.
 Intellectual Development, by J. B. Crozier, III. 727.
 Intellectual Development of Europe, by J. W. Draper, III. 825.
 Intellectual Powers, by J. Abercromby, III. 242; by Reid, II. 388.
 Intellectual System, by Cudworth, I. 670.
 Interludes, I. 150; Interlude of the Four Elements, I. 102, 152.
 In the Shadows, by David Gray, III. 657.
 Intimations of Immortality, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 25.
 Intuitions of the Mind, by J. McCosh, III. 397.
 Intuitive Theory of Morals, by Miss Cobbe, III. 537.
 Invasion of the Crimea, by Kinglake, III. 421, 422-424.
 In Vinculis, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 In War Time, by S. W. Mitchell, III. 825.
 Ion, by Sir T. N. Talfourd, III. 272.
 Ionica, by Wm. J. Cory, III. 577.
 IOTA (Mrs Caffyn), III. 851.
 IRELAND, WILLIAM HENRY, II. 711.
 Ireland in Burlesque, A Voyage to, by C. Cotton, I. 775; Legends and Stories of, by Samuel Lover, III. 355; Past and Present, by Croker, III. 170; Sketches in, by Cæsar Otway, III. 345; Songs and Ballads of, edited by M. J. Barry, III. 579; Tales of, by Carleton, III. 352; Tour in, by Arthur Young, II. 627; View of, by Spenser, I. 294, 297, 303.
- Irene, by Johnson, II. 457, 458.
 Irish Airman foresees his Death, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 Irish Ballads, edited by D. F. MacCarthy, III. 579, 583.
 Irish Contribution to English Literature, I. 831.
 Irish Emigrant, by Lady Dufferin, III. 385.
 Irish Melodies, by Moore, III. 346.
 Irish Nation, by James Wills, III. 350.
 Irish Peasantry, Stories of the, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
 Irish Peasantry, Traits and Stories of the, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Irish Poetry, by Stopford Brooke and another, III. 662.
 Irish Rebellion, by W. H. Maxwell, III. 268.
 Irish Songs and Ballads, by A. P. Graves, III. 694.
 IRVING, EDWARD, III. 268.
 IRVING, WASHINGTON, III. 745.
 Isaac Ashford, by G. Crabbe, II. 696.
 Isabella, by Keats, III. 99, 101, 102.
 Isabella, by Southerne, II. 75, 76.
 Ishmael, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 Island, by Lord Byron, III. 131.
 Island Nights' Entertainments, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Isle of Palms, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Israel in Egypt, by E. Atherstone, III. 146.
 Israel Potter, by H. Melville, III. 821.
 Israfil, by Poe, III. 785, 787, 788.
 It is Never too Late to Mend, by C. Reade, III. 483.
 Italian, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594.
 Italian Influence on English Literature, I. 235.
 Italy, by Beckford, II. 621; by Rogers, II. 723, 724, 726, 727; by Lady Morgan, II. 781; by Hodgkin, III. 661; Remarks on, by Addison, II. 212, 219; Visit to, by Frances Trollope, III. 276.
 Itinerary, by Leland, I. 140.
 Ivanhoe, by Scott, III. 34, 37.
- Jack Brag, by Theodore Hook, III. 164, 165.
 Jack Cade's Rebellion, by R. Fabyan, I. 105.
 Jack Hinton, by Lever, III. 359.
 JACKS, LAWRENCE P., III. 845.
 Jack Sheppard, by Ainsworth, III. 378.
 Jack Wilton, by Nash, I. 330.
 Jacob and Esau (by Hunnis?), I. 155, 156.
 Jacobean Literature, I. 235.
 Jacobean Poets, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Jacob Faithful, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Jacobite's Journal, ed. by Fielding, II. 341.
 JACOBS JOSEPH, III. 730.
 JACOBS, WILLIAM WYMARK, III. 846.
 JACO, RICHARD, II. 438.
 Jail Journal, by John Mitchell, III. 582.
 JAMES, GEORGE PAYNE RAINSFORD, III. 327.
 JAMES, HENRY, III. 720, 830.
 JAMES, WILLIAM, III. 831.
 JAMES L., I. 505; Court of, by Lucy Aikin, III. 178.
 JAMES I. of Scotland, I. 166, 183.
 James II., History of the Reign of, by Fox, II. 636.
 JAMESON, ANNA, III. 183.
 Jamie Telfer, I. 526.
 Jane Eyre, by C. Brontë, III. 522, 524.
 Jane Shore, by Nicholas Rowe, II. 93, 94.
 Janice Meredith, by P. L. Ford, III. 832.
 Japhet in Search of a Father, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Jar of Honey, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
 Jason, by William Morris, III. 666, 667.
 Jeanie Morrison, by Motherwell, III. 309.
 JEANS, SIR JAMES, III. 847.
 JEBB, SIR RICHARD CLAVERHOUSE, III. 841.
 JEFFRIES, RICHARD, III. 840.
 JEFFERSON, THOMAS, III. 736.
 JEFFREY, FRANCIS, III. 85; Life of, by Henry Cockburn, III. 313.
 Jekyll (Dr) and Mr Hyde, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Jenny dang the Weaver, by Sir A. Boswell, II. 830.
 Jenny's Bawbee, by Sir A. Boswell, II. 831.
 JEROME, JEROME KLAUPA, III. 844.
 JERROLD, DOUGLAS, III. 328.
 JERROLD, WILLIAM BLANCHARD, III. 331.
 Jess, by Sir H. Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 JESSOFF, AUGUSTUS, III. 839.
 Jesuits in North America, by Parkman, III. 818.
 Jew of Malta, by Marlowe, I. 849, 861.
 JEWETT, SARAH ORNE, III. 854.

- Jews, History of the, by Milman, III. 209.
 JEWSBURY, GERALDINE ENDOR, III. 520.
 Joan and Peter, by Wells, III. 713.
 Joan of Arc, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 50;
 by De Quincey, III. 93.
 John Brent, by Theodore Winthrop, III.
 823.
 John Bull, by Arbuthnot, II. 145; by
 Colman, II. 656, 657.
 John Gilpin, by Cowper, II. 605.
 John Halifax, by Mrs Craik, III. 536.
 John Herring, by Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 John Holdsworth, by Clark Russell, III.
 691.
 John Inglesant, by Shorthouse, III. 637.
 John March, Southerner, by G. W. Cable,
 III. 830.
 John Ploughman's Talk, by Spurgeon, III.
 649.
 John Splendid, by Neil Munro, III. 713.
 Johnnie Courteau, by W. H. Drummond,
 III. 727.
 Johnny Gibb of Gushetneuk, III. 839.
 JOHNSON, DR SAMUEL, II. 8, 457; Life of, by Boswell, II. 469, 470-473.
 JOHNSON, E. PAULINE, III. 728, 851.
 JOHNSON, LIONEL, III. 846.
 JOHNSON, SAMUEL (Whig), II. 99.
 JOHNSTON, ARTHUR, I. 519.
 JOHNSTON, MARY, III. 834.
 JOHNSTON, SIR HARRY HAMILTON, III. 844.
 JOHNSTONE, CHARLES, II. 410.
 JOHNSTONE, CHRISTIAN ISOBEL, II. 772.
 Jolly Beggars, by Burns, II. 825.
 Jonathan to John, by J. R. Lowell, III.
 803.
 Jonathan Wild, by Fielding, II. 341, 344.
 JONES, EBENEZER, III. 506.
 JONES, ERNEST, III. 505.
 JONES, HENRY ARTHUR, III. 695.
 JONES, SIR WILLIAM, II. 615.
 JONSON, BEN, I. 401.
 Jorrock's Jaunts, by Surtees, III. 414.
 JORTIN, JOHN, II. 301.
 Joseph and his Brethren, by C. J. Wells,
 III. 657.
 Joseph Andrews, by Fielding, II. 340, 342-344.
 Joseph Vance, by Wm. de Morgan, III. 709.
 Joshua Davidson, by Mrs Lynn Linton, III.
 536.
 Journalism, II. 2, 15.
 Journey to France, by J. Corbet, I. 456; to the Hebrides, by Boswell, II. 467; to the Western Isles, by Johnson, II. 459, 463.
 JOWETT, BENJAMIN, III. 494.
 JOYCE, JAMES, III. 720, 848.
 JUDD, SYLVESTER, III. 773.
 Jude the Obscure, by T. Hardy, III. 679.
 Judgment of the Flood, by Heraud, III. 268.
 Judith, in Beowulf MS., I. 11, 12.
 Julia de Roubigné, by Mackenzie, II. 536.
 Julian, by Miss Mitford, III. 176.
 Julian, Count, by Landor, III. 141.
 Julian and Maddalo, by Shelley, III. 109.
 Julian the Apostate, by Johnson, II. 99.
 Julia's Letter, by Lord Byron, III. 133.
 Julius Cæsar, by Shakespeare, I. 368.
 June Bracken and Heather, by Tennyson,
 III. 543, 547.
 Jungle Books, by Rudyard Kipling, III.
 708.
 Junian MS., I. 10.
 JUNIUS, II. 517.
 Jürgen, by J. B. Cabell, III. 836.
 Justice, by J. Galsworthy, III. 712.
 Justice and Expediency, by Whittier, III.
 774.
 Justin Martyr, by Trench, III. 393.
 Just So Stories, by Rudyard Kipling, III.
 708.
- KAMES, LORD, II. 388.
 Kant, by Edward Caird, III. 625; by Mahaffy, III. 689; Text-book to, by
 J. H. Stirling, III. 661.
 Karbush, by Browning, III. 563.
 Kate Coventry, by G. J. Whyte-Melville,
 III. 585.
 Kate Kearney, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 Katerfelto, by Whyte-Melville, III. 585.
 Kathrina, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 KAVANAGH, JULIA, III. 850.
 KAYE, SIR JOHN WILLIAM, III. 482.
 KEATS, JOHN, III. 99; Life and Remains of, by Lord Houghton, III. 383; Life and Letters, by Sir Sidney Colvin, III.
 698.
 KEBLE, JOHN, III. 215.
 KEIGHTLEY, THOMAS, III. 259.
 KEITH, ROBERT, II. 805.
 KELLY, HUGH, II. 571.
- KELVIN, LORD, III. 839.
 KEN, THOMAS, II. 45.
 KENDALL, HENRY CLARENCE, III. 729, 731.
 Kenilworth, by Scott, III. 84.
 KENNEDY, JOHN PENDELTON, III. 853.
 KENNEDY, MARGARET, III. 852.
 KENNEDY, QUINTIN, I. 230.
 KENNEDY, WALTER, I. 200.
 Kentons, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 Kentucky Cardinal, by J. L. Allen, III. 831.
 KER, WILLIAM PATON, III. 843.
 Khartoum, by J. A. Grant, III. 610.
 KIDD, BENJAMIN, III. 844.
 Kidnapped, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 690, 701.
 Kildrostan, by Walter C. Smith, III. 607.
 Killarney, Legend of, by Bayly, III. 241.
 KILLIGREW, SIR WILLIAM, I. 634.
 KILLIGREW, THOMAS, I. 634.
 Killing no Murder, by Saxby, I. 622.
 Kilmeny, by Hogg, III. 293, 294.
 Kim, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
 KINCAID, SIR JOHN, III. 223.
 KING, HENRY, I. 568.
 KING, WILLIAM, II. 197.
 King Alisaunder, I. 51.
 King Arthur, by Lord Lytton, III. 333;
 by Sir R. Blackmore, II. 107.
 King Erik, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 King Horn, I. 43, 45.
 King John, by Shakespeare, I. 361.
 King Lear, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 King Lear's Wife, by Gordon Bottomley,
 III. 714.
 King Solomon's Mines, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 King's Own, by F. Marryat, III. 255, 258.
 King's Tragedy, by Rossetti, III. 643.
 Kingis Quair, by James I., I. 166, 183.
 KINGLAKE, ALEXANDER WILLIAM, III. 421.
 KINGSFORD, WILLIAM, III. 727.
 KINGSLEY, CHARLES, III. 513.
 KINGSLEY, GEORGE HENRY, III. 517.
 KINGSLEY, HENRY, III. 517, 729.
 KINGSLEY, MARY HENRIETTA, III. 517.
 KINGSTON, W. H. G., III. 482.
 Kinmont Willie, I. 539.
 KIPLING, RUDYARD, III. 708, 721.
 Kipps, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
 Kirby, WILLIAM, III. 726, 839.
 Kitten, by Joanna Baillie, II. 730.
 KITTO, JOHN, III. 373.
 Kitty of Coleraine, by E. Lysaght, II. 759.
 KLEIN, CHARLES, III. 855.
 KNIGHT, CHARLES, III. 266; his Cyclopædia, Magazine, III. 266.
 KNIGHT, HENRY GALLY, II. 782.
 KNIGHT, RICHARD PAYNE, II. 678.
 Knight of the Burning Pestle, by Beaumont and Fletcher, I. 471.
 Knight of the Kirk, by W. Weston, II. 316.
 KNOLLES, RICHARD, I. 272.
 KNOWLES, HERBERT, II. 787.
 KNOWLES, JAMES SHERIDAN, III. 225.
 KNOX, JOHN, I. 166, 218; Life of, by M'Crie, II. 763; by Hume Brown, III.
 716.
 KNOX, VICESIMUS, II. 713.
 KNOX, WILLIAM, II. 782.
 Koran, trans. by George Sale, II. 388.
 Kruitzner, by Harriet Lee, II. 653.
 Kuzilbash, by J. B. Fraser, II. 787.
 KYD, THOMAS, I. 240, 241, 319.
 Kynd Kytok, by Dunbar, I. 197.
- La Belle Dame sans Merci, by Keats, III.
 99, 101, 105.
 Lachrymæ Musarum, by Sir W. Watson,
 III. 706.
 Lack of Gold, by Adam Austin, II. 810.
 Lacon, by C. C. Colton, III. 172.
 Lady Audley's Secret, by Miss Braddon,
 III. 690.
 Lady-Errant, by Cartwright, I. 635.
 Lady of Last Century, by Doran, III. 331.
 Lady of Lyons, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 Lady of Pleasure, by Shirley, I. 484, 485.
 Lady of the Lake, by Scott, III. 37.
 Lady or the Tiger, by Stockton, III. 824.
 Lady Windermere's Fan, by Oscar Wilde,
 III. 707.
 LAIDLAW, WILLIAM, III. 807.
 LAING, DAVID, III. 291.
 LAING, MALCOLM, II. 637.
 Laird o' Cockpen, by Lady Nairne, II. 828.
 Lake Lyries, by W. W. Campbell, III. 728.
 Lake Regions, by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
 Lalla Rookh, by Moore, III. 347, 349.
 L'Allegro, by Milton, I. 687, 696.
 LAMB, CHARLES, III. 72; Memoir of, by Talfourd, III. 272.
 LAMB, LADY CAROLINE, II. 780.
- Lame Lover, by Foote, II. 432-434.
 Lament for the Makaris, by Dunbar, I. 196.
 Lament for Thomas Davis, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 363.
 Lament of the Irish Emigrant, by the Countess of Dufferin, III. 385.
 Lamia, by Keats, III. 99, 101.
 Lampighter, by Miss Cummins, III. 827.
 LAMPMAN, ARCHIBALD, III. 728.
 Lamp of our Feet, by Bernard Barton, III.
 231.
 LAMPSON. See LOCKER-LAMPSON, III. 600.
 Lancashire Witches, by Shadwell, II. 63.
 Land and Water, ed. by Buckland, III. 590.
 Land Monopoly, by E. Jones, III. 506.
 Land Nationalisation, by A. R. Wallace,
 III. 614.
 Land of the Saracen, by Bayard Taylor,
 III. 821.
 Land o' the Leal, by Lady Nairne, II. 828.
 Land Sharks, by W. N. Glascock, III. 259.
 LONDON, LETITIA ELIZABETH, III. 181.
 LANDOR, WALTER SAVAGE, III. 141.
 Landor's Cottage, by Poe, III. 787.
 LANE, EDWARD WILLIAM, III. 327.
 LANG, ANDREW, III. 692.
 LANGHORNE, DR JOHN, II. 521.
 LANGLAND, WILLIAM, I. 55.
 LANIER, SIDNEY, III. 828.
 LANDSDOWNE, LORD, II. 244.
 Laodicean, by Thomas Hardy, III. 679.
 LARCOM, LUCY, III. 858.
 LARDNER, DIONYSIUS, III. 266; his Cyclopædia, III. 266.
 LARDNER, NATHANIEL, II. 247.
 Lars, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 La Saisiaz, by Browning, III. 556, 559, 566.
 La Salle and the Great West, by Parkman,
 III. 818.
 Last Baid, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Last Buccanier, by Kingsley, III. 514, 516.
 Last Chronicle of Barset, by Trollope, III.
 487.
 Last Conquest of Ireland, by J. Mitchell,
 III. 583.
 Last Days of Herculæum, by Edwin
 Atherstone, III. 146.
 Last Days of Pompeii, by Lord Lytton, III.
 332, 334.
 Last Entry, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 Last Leaf, by Holmes, III. 790, 791, 792 794.
 Last Man, by Campbell, II. 766, 770.
 Last of the Barons, by Lytton, III. 332.
 Last of the Mohicans, by Cooper, III. 750.
 Last Rose of Summer, by Moore, III. 349.
 Last Testimony, by Nayler, I. 624.
 LATIMER, HUGH, I. 136.
 Latin Christianity, by Milman, III. 209, 210.
 Latin Poetry, Sacred, by Trench, III. 393.
 Latin Writers before Ælfred, I. 16; after,
 I. 33.
 Latter-Day Pamphlets, by Carlyle, III.
 404, 405, 409.
 LAUDER, SIR THOMAS DICK, III. 806.
 LAUDER, WILLIAM, I. 710.
 LAUGHTON, SIR JOHN KNOX, III. 840.
 LAURENCE, DR FRENCH, II. 670.
 Laurence Bloomfield, by W. Allingham, III.
 605.
 LAURIE, SIMON SOMERVILLE, III. 839.
 Lavengro, by Borrow, III. 430, 432, 434.
 LAW, WILLIAM, II. 247.
 Law-Breaker, by James Hinton, III. 613.
 LAWLESS, HON. EMILY, III. 850.
 LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT, III. 715, 720,
 721.
 LAWRENCE, GEORGE ALFRED, III. 624.
 LAWRENCE, THOMAS EDWARD, III. 716.
 Lawrie Todd, by John Galt, III. 297, 298, 725.
 LAWSON, HENRY, III. 729, 782.
 LAYAMON, I. 3, 35.
 LAYARD, SIR AUSTEN HENRY, III. 497.
 Lay of the Last Minstrel, by Scott, III. 31, 34, 35.
 Lays from Strathearn, by Lady Nairne, II.
 827.
 Lays of Ancient Rome, by Macaulay, III.
 367, 369.
 Lays of my Home, by Whittier, III. 775.
 Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers, by W. E.
 Aytoun, III. 475, 476.
 Lays of the Western Gael, by Sir S. Fer-
 guson, III. 362.
 LAZARUS, EMMA, III. 854.
 Lazarus, York Play of, I. 110.
 LEA, HENRY CHARLES, III. 853.
 LEACOCK, STEPHEN, III. 720, 728.
 Leaders in the Northern Church, by Bishop
 Lightfoot, III. 625.
 Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland, by Lecky, III. 682.

- Lead, kindly Light, by Newman, III. 337.
 LEAF, WALTER, III. 843.
 LEAR, EDWARD, III. 667.
 Lear, King, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Learning, Ancient and Modern, by Sir W. Temple, I. 754.
 LEATHES, STANLEY, III. 840.
 Leaves from Australian Forests, by H. C. Kendall, III. 731.
 Leaves of Grass, by Whitman, III. 806, 808.
 LECKY, W. E. H., III. 682.
 LEE, NATHANIEL, II. 87.
 LEE, SIR SIDNEY, III. 707.
 LEE, SOPHIA and HARRIET, II. 653.
 LEE, VERNON (Violet Paget), III. 851.
 LE FANU, JOSEPH SHERIDAN, III. 365.
 Legal and Political Sketches, by Sheil, III. 351.
 Legal Antiquities, by Cosmo Innes, III. 201.
 LE GALLIENNE, RICHARD, III. 846.
 Legal Lyrics, by Outram, III. 414.
 Legende of Good Women, by Chaucer, I. 63, 70.
 Legends and Stories of Ireland, by Samuel Lover, III. 355.
 Legends of the Saints, attributed to Barbour, I. 180; of the Saxon Saints, and of St Patrick, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 Legislative Reviews, by J. Howe, III. 726.
 LEHMANN, ROSAMOND, III. 852.
 LEHMANN, RUDOLPH CHAMBERS, III. 844.
 LEIGHTON, ARCHBISHOP, I. 822.
 Leith Races, by Fergusson, II. 806, 808.
 LELAND, CHARLES GODFREY, III. 784.
 LELAND, JOHN, I. 139, 270.
 LEMON, MARK, III. 399.
 LENNOX, CHARLOTTE, II. 417.
 Leo X., by Roscoe, II. 639.
 Leonard Lindsay, by A. B. Reach, III. 505.
 Leonidas, by Richard Glover, II. 351, 352.
 LEPROHON, Mrs R. E., III. 726.
 Lesbia, by Campion, I. 401.
 LESLIE, CHARLES, II. 200.
 LESLIE, JOHN, I. 226.
 L'ESTRANGE, SIR ROGER, I. 741.
 Letters, by Pope, II. 191-195; from Italy, by Addison, II. 212, 216; from the Mountains, by Mrs Grant, II. 596; from the Cape, and from Egypt, by Lady Duff Gordon, III. 373, 733; from the Baltic, by Lady Eastlake, III. 387.
 Letters of Horace Walpole, II. 411-414.
 Letters on Literature, by A. Lang, III. 602.
 Letters to Dead Authors, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Leven Water, Ode to, by Smollett, II. 444.
 LEVER, CHARLES JAMES, III. 359.
 Leviathan, by Hobbes, I. 554, 555, 556, 558.
 LEVY, AMY, III. 851.
 LEWES, GEORGE HENRY, III. 495.
 Lewesdon Hill, by William Crowe, II. 616.
 LEWIS, ALFRED HENRY, III. 855.
 LEWIS, CECIL DAV, III. 724, 849.
 LEWIS, DAVID, II. 420.
 LEWIS, MATTHEW GREGORY, II. 748.
 LEWIS, SIR GEORGE CORNEWALL, III. 206.
 LEWIS, SINCLAIR, III. 836.
 LEYDEN, JOHN, II. 690.
 Liberal Education, by Huxley, III. 618.
 Liberator, edited by W. Lloyd Garrison, III. 811.
 Liberty, by J. S. Mill, III. 443.
 Liberty, Ode to, by Shelley, III. 110.
 Liberty and Necessity, by Hobbes, I. 544, 558.
 Liberty of Prophesying, by Jeremy Taylor, I. 604.
 Library, by Andrew Lang, III. 602.
 Library, by George Crabbe, II. 694.
 Library of American Literature, III. 824.
 Library of English Literature, by H. Morley, III. 633.
 LIDDON, HENRY PARRY, III. 625.
 Lie, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 308.
 Life, by Mrs Barbauld, II. 582; in London, by Pierce Egan, III. 264; in the Sick-room, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388; in Nature, by James Hinton, III. 613; Use of, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
 Life and Death of Mr Badman, by Bunyan, I. 720.
 Life Drama, by Alexander Smith, III. 604.
 Life of Reason, by G. Santayana, III. 835.
 Lifted Veil, by George Eliot, III. 531.
 Ligeia, by Poe, III. 786, 787.
 Light of Asia, by Sir E. Arnold, III. 663; of Nature, by A. Tucker, II. 388; of other Days, by Moore, III. 348; of the Harem, by Moore, III. 348, 860; of the World, by Sir E. Arnold, III. 663.
 Light that Failed, by R. Kipling, III. 708.
 LIGHTFOOT, JOSEPH BARBER, III. 625.
 Lights and Shadows of Irish Life, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280; of Scottish Life, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Lillian of the Vale, by G. Darley, III. 235.
 Lillibulero, by Thomas Wharton, II. 98.
 LILLO, GEORGE, II. 276.
 LILLY, WILLIAM, I. 120.
 LILLY, WILLIAM SAMUEL, III. 841.
 Lilly Dawson, by Catherine Crowe, III. 280.
 Lily Neil, by David Wingate, III. 608.
 Limits of Religious Thought, by Mansel, III. 497.
 LINACRE, THOMAS, I. 120.
 LINCOLN, RICHARD, I. 278.
 LINCOLN, ABRAHAM, III. 784; Emerson on, III. 762; Death of, by Whitman, III. 810.
 LINDSAY, ROBERT, I. 225.
 LINDSAY. See LINDSAY, LYNDISAY.
 LINDSAY, LADY ANNE. See BARNARD.
 LINDSAY, VACHEL, III. 856.
 Lines written among the Euganean Hills, by Shelley, III. 109.
 LINGARD, DR JOHN, II. 647.
 LINKLATER, ERIC, III. 849.
 LINTON, ELIZA LYNN, III. 536.
 LINTON, WILLIAM JAMES, III. 536.
 Linton, by Geddes, II. 799.
 Lion's Cub, by R. H. Stoddard, III. 824.
 LISTER, THOMAS HENRY, III. 158.
 Litane to the Holy Spirit, by Herrick, I. 565.
 Literary Criticism, Early, I. 266.
 Literature, Curiosities of, by Isaac D'Israeli, II. 715.
 Literature, Studies in, by Morley, III. 686.
 Literature and Dogma, by M. Arnold, III. 595.
 Literature of Europe, by Henry Hallam, III. 193, 195.
 LITHGOW, WILLIAM, I. 517.
 LITTLE, THOMAS (Thomas Moore), III. 345.
 Little Black Rose, by A. de Vere, III. 582.
 Little Henry and his Bearer, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Little Lord Fauntleroy, by Mrs Burnett, III. 833.
 Little Mary, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Little Masters, by W. Bell Scott, III. 490.
 Little Minister, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Little White Bird, by Barrie, III. 705.
 Little Woodman, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Lives of the Engineers, by Samuel Smiles, III. 475.
 Lives of the Poets, by Johnson, II. 460.
 LIVINGSTONE, DAVID, III. 480.
 Livy, trans. by Philemon Holland, I. 260.
 LLOYD, ROBERT, II. 612.
 LLOYD GEORGE, DAVID, III. 845.
 LLYWARCH HEN, I. 3.
 Lochiel's Warning, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Lochleven, by Michael Bruce, II. 528.
 LOCKE (LOK), HENRY, I. 278.
 LOCKE, JOHN, II. 17.
 LOCKE, WILLIAM J., III. 846.
 LOCKER-LAMPSON, FREDERICK, III. 600.
 LOCKHART, JOHN GIBSON, III. 250; Life of, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Locksley Hall, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 LOCKYER, SIR NORMAN, III. 840.
 LODGE, HENRY CABOT, III. 854.
 LODGE, SIR OLIVER JOSEPH, III. 843.
 LODGE, SIR RICHARD, III. 843.
 LODGE, THOMAS, I. 316.
 Lodging for Single Gentlemen, by Colman, II. 660.
 LOFFT, CAPELL, II. 689.
 LOGAN, JOHN, II. 529.
 LOGAN, SIR WILLIAM, III. 726.
 Logan Braes, by John Mayne, II. 811.
 Logbook, by Buckland, III. 690.
 Logic, by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 444; by Alexander Bain, III. 497.
 Logie o' Buchan, by G. Halket, II. 810.
 LOK, HENRY, I. 278.
 Lombard Street, by W. Bagehot, III. 630.
 LONDON, JACK, III. 855.
 London, by Glover, II. 851; by Johnson, II. 457, 458; Survey of, by John Stowe, I. 267; in the Eighteenth Century, by Sir W. Besant, III. 651.
 London Gazetteer, II. 230.
 London Lyckpenny, by John Lydgate, I. 79.
 London Lyrics, by Locker-Lampson, III. 600.
 London Poems, by R. Buchanan, III. 655.
 London Rhymes, by Locker-Lampson, III. 600.
 London Voluntaries, by Henley, III. 78, 695.
 LONG, GEORGE, III. 839.
 Long-ago, by Lord Houghton, III. 384.
 Long Ago, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 LONGFELLOW, HENRY WADSWORTH, III. 768.
 Looking Backward, by E. Bellamy, II. 831.
 Lord Gregory, by John Wolcot, II. 663, 666.
 Lord Harry has written a Novel, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Lord of the Isles, by Scott, III. 31.
 Lord Ormont and his Aminta, by Meredith, III. 658.
 Lord Ullin's Daughter, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Lord Wickenham, by J. O. Hobbes, III. 830.
 Lorenzo de' Medici, by Roscoe, II. 369.
 Lorna Doone, by R. D. Blackmore, III. 622.
 Loss and Gain, by J. H. Newman, III. 337.
 Lost and Won, by Georgina Marion Craik, III. 291.
 Lost Chord, by Miss Procter, III. 528.
 Lost Leader, by Browning, III. 562.
 Lost Leaders, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Lost Sir Massingberd, by J. Payn, III. 634.
 Lost Tales of Miletus, by Lytton, III. 333.
 Lot of Thousands, by Mrs Hunter, II. 599.
 Lothair, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 438.
 Lotos-eaters, by Tennyson, III. 541, 545.
 Lounger, II. 536, 539.
 LOUNSBURY, THOMAS R., III. 854.
 Lousiad, by John Wolcot, II. 662.
 Love Affairs of a Bibliomaniac, by Eugene Field, III. 831.
 Love à-la-Mode, by Macklin, II. 274.
 Love for Love, by Congreve, II. 82, 86.
 Love in a Village, by Bickerstaffe, II. 400.
 Love in the Valley, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Love is Enough, by William Morris, III. 665.
 Love of Fame, by F. Young, II. 260, 263.
 Love Sonnets of Proteus, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 LOVELOCK, RICHARD, I. 637.
 LOVE, SAMUEL, III. 355.
 Lovers, and a Reflection, by C. S. Calverley, III. 639.
 Lover's Journey, by George Crabbe, II. 698.
 Lover's Melancholy, by John Ford, I. 481, 483; Answer to the, by Strode, I. 570.
 Lover's Tale, by Tennyson, III. 540.
 Love's Dominion, by R. Flecknoe, I. 784.
 Love's Labour's Lost, by Shakespeare, I. 357, 358.
 Love's Meinie, by John Ruskin, III. 571.
 Loves of the Angels, by Moore, III. 347; of the Plants, by Darwin, II. 572, 573, 575; of the Poets, by Anna Jameson, III. 183, 184; of the Triangles, by Canning, II. 673, 674, and by Hookham Frere, II. 676.
 LOWE, JOHN, II. 803.
 LOWELL, AMY, III. 855.
 LOWELL, JAMES RUSSELL, III. 799.
 LOWES, JOHN LIVINGSTON, III. 855.
 LOWTH, ROBERT, II. 389.
 Low Tide on Grand Pré, by W. B. Carman, III. 723.
 Loyalties, by J. Galsworthy, III. 712.
 LUBBOCK, SIR JOHN (Lord Avebury), III. 663.
 Lucan's Pharsalia, trans. by T. May, I. 582; by Rowe, II. 93, 95.
 LUCAS, EDWARD VERRALL, III. 847.
 Lucasta, by Richard Lovelace, I. 637, 638.
 Lucian's Dialogues, trans. by Mayne, I. 638.
 Lucile, by the Earl of Lytton, III. 638.
 Luck of Roaring Camp, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Lucree, by Shakespeare, I. 361, 363.
 Lucubrations of Bickerstaff, by Steele, II. 230.
 Lucy's Flittin', by William Laidlaw, III. 307.
 Lusiad, trans. by Mickle, II. 522, 524; by Sir R. Burton, III. 610.
 Lusty Juvenut, Moral Interlude, I. 151.
 LUTTRELL, HENRY, II. 755.
 LUTT, EDNA, III. 851.
 LYALL, SIR ALFRED COMYN, III. 681.
 Lycidas, by Milton, I. 687, 688, 698.
 LYDGATE, JOHN, I. 79.
 LYELL, SIR CHARLES, III. 317.
 Lying Valet, by David Garrick, II. 432.
 LYL, JOHN, I. 238, 240, 274, 313.
 LYNCH (LINCHE), RICHARD, I. 278.
 LYNDISAY, SIR DAVID, I. 166, 204.
 Lyra Apostolica, by J. H. Newman, III. 387.
 Lyrical Ballads, by Wordsworth and Coleridge, III. 13, 17, 19, 58.
 Lyrical Poetry, Influence of Music on, I. 278.
 Lyric Poetry, Beginning of, I. 41.
 Lyrics of Earth, by A. Lampman, III. 728.
 LYSAGHT, EDWARD, II. 759.
 LYTTE, HENRY FRANCIS, III. 271.

- LYTTLETON, GEORGE, LORD, II. 348.
 Lyttelton Fabrication, by W. Combe, II. 661.
 LYTTON, EARL OF, III. 638.
 LYTTON, LORD, III. 332.
- M
 Mabinogion, trans. by Lady Charlotte Guest, III. 387.
 MACAULAY, CATHERINE, II. 419.
 MACAULAY, ROSE, III. 852.
 MACAULAY, THOMAS BABINGTON, III. 387;
 Life and Letters of, by Sir G. O. Trevelyan, III. 687.
 Macbeth, by Shakespeare, I. 357, 370, 458, 461.
 MACCARTHY, DENIS FLORENCE, III. 583.
 M'CARTHY, JUSTIN, III. 660.
 M'CARTHY, JUSTIN HUNTLY, III. 660, 845.
 M'COSH, JAMES, III. 397.
 M'CRAE, JOHN, III. 726.
 M'CRIE, DR THOMAS, II. 783.
 MACDIARMID, HUGH (Christopher M. Grieve), III. 849.
 MACDONALD, GEORGE, III. 606.
 MACFIE, RONALD CAMPBELL, III. 847.
 MacFlecknoe, by Dryden, I. 793, 799.
 M'GEE, THOMAS D'ARCY, III. 726.
 MACKAIL, JOHN W., III. 844.
 MACKAY, CHARLES, III. 481.
 MACKAY, JESSIE, III. 729.
 MACKAYE, PERCY, III. 855.
 MACKAYE, STEELE, III. 855.
 M'KENNA, STEPHEN, III. 848.
 MACKENZIE, COMPTON, III. 848.
 MACKENZIE, HENRY, II. 536.
 MACKENZIE, SIR GEORGE, I. 826.
 Mackery End, by Lamb, III. 77.
 MACKINTOSH, ELIZABETH ('Gordon Daviot'), III. 852.
 MACKINTOSH, SIR JAMES, II. 641.
 MACKLIN, CHARLES, II. 274.
 M'LACHLAN, ALEXANDER, III. 726.
 MACLAREN, IAN (John Watson), III. 842.
 MCLENNAN, JOHN FERGUSON, III. 613.
 M'LENNAN, MURDOCH, II. 810.
 MACLEOD, FIONA (Wm. Sharp), III. 705.
 MACLEOD, NORMAN, III. 398.
 Macleod of Dare, by W. Black, III. 691.
 MACNEILL, HECTOR, II. 802.
 MACPHERSON, JAMES, II. 500.
 M'Pherson's Farewell, by Burns, II. 824.
 Mad Dog, Elegy on a, by Goldsmith, II. 486.
 Madeline in her Chamber, by Keats, III. 104.
 MADISON, JAMES, III. 736.
 Madoc, by Southey, III. 48, 49.
 Madonna, Legends of the, by Anna Jameson, III. 183, 184.
 Mænad's Grave, by Gosse, III. 696.
 Mæviad, by William Gifford, II. 668.
 Magazines, beginnings of Monthly, II. 12.
 Magdalen Hepburn, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Magic and Religion, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 MAGINN, WILLIAM, III. 280.
 Magnolia Christi, by Cotton Mather, III. 734, 736, 737, 738.
 Magnificence, by John Skelton, I. 152.
 Magnificent Ambersons, by Booth Tarkington, III. 836.
 MAHAFFY, SIR JOHN PENTLAND, III. 687.
 MAHAN, ALFRED THAYER, III. 827.
 MAHONY, FRANCIS SYLVESTER (Father Prout), III. 262.
 Maid Marian, by T. L. Peacock, III. 150, 152.
 Maid of Honour, by Massinger, I. 464, 465.
 Maid of Sker, by R. D. Blackmore, III. 622.
 Maid of the Mill, by Bickerstaffe, II. 400.
 Maid's Tragedy, by Beaumont and Fletcher, I. 470, 473.
 Main Street, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
 MAINE, SIR HENRY J. S., III. 567.
 Maine Woods, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 796.
 MAITLAND, FREDERIC WILLIAM, III. 842.
 MAITLAND, SIR RICHARD, I. 231.
 Maitland of Lethington, by Sir J. Skelton, III. 635.
 MAJOR, JOHN, I. 212.
 Malay Archipelago, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 MALCOLM, SIR JOHN, II. 741.
 Malcolm, by George Macdonald, III. 606.
 Maldon, Battle of, I. 23, 24.
 Male Regie, by Hoccleve, I. 78.
 MALET, LUCAS (Mrs Harrison), III. 704.
 MALLESON, GEORGE BRUCE, III. 889.
 MALLET, DAVID, II. 328.
 MALLOCK, WILLIAM HURRELL, III. 703.
 MALONE, EDMOND, II. 629.
 MALORY, SIR THOMAS, I. 92.
- MALTHUS, THOMAS ROBERT, II. 707.
 Mamilia, by Greene, I. 239, 324.
 Man, Antiquity of, by Sir Charles Lyell, III. 317.
 Man, History of, by Gilfillan, III. 480.
 Man, Observations on, by Hartley, II. 338.
 Man and his Dwelling-Place, by J. Hinton, III. 613.
 Man and Superman, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 Man for Galway, by C. J. Lever, III. 380.
 Man from Glengarry, by Ralph Connor, III. 728.
 Man made of Money, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 329, 331.
 Man of Feeling, by Henry Mackenzie, II. 536, 537.
 Man of Mode, by Sir G. Etherege, II. 62.
 Man of Property, by Galsworthy, III. 712.
 Man of Taste, by J. Bramston, II. 209, 210.
 Man of the World, by Mackenzie, II. 536, 537-539; by Macklin, II. 274.
 Man of Woe, by Sir Edward Dyer, I. 275.
 Man versus the State, by Spencer, III. 588.
 Man's Destiny, by John Fiske, III. 828.
 Man's Place in Nature, by Huxley, III. 619.
 MANDEVILLE, BERNARD DE, II. 200.
 MANDEVILLE, SIR JOHN, I. 82.
 Manfred, by Lord Byron, III. 128, 132, 133.
 MANGAN, JAMES CLARENCE, III. 358.
 MANING, FREDERICK E., III. 730.
 Mankind, History of, by Tylor, III. 663.
 MANLEY, MARY DE LA RIVIERE, II. 96.
 Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, by Sir J. G. Wilkinson, III. 321.
 Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians, by E. W. Lane, III. 327.
 Manners and Principles of the Times, by John Brown, II. 391.
 MANNING, ROBERT, I. 34, 41, 48.
 MANSEL, HENRY LONGUEVILLE, III. 497.
 MANSFIELD, KATHERINE, III. 721, 730, 852.
 Mansfield Park, by Jane Austen, II. 774.
 Mansie Wauch, by David Macbeth Moir, III. 311.
 Manxman, by Sir Hall Caine, III. 843.
 Many Memories of Many People, III. 343.
 MAP, WALTER, I. 34, 37.
 Marble Faun, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 Marcella, by Mrs Humphry Ward, III. 704.
 March to Kinsale, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 MARE, W. DE LA, III. 714.
 Margaret, by Sylvester Judd, III. 773.
 Margaret, Elegy on Princess, I. 208.
 Margaret Lyndsay, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Margaret Ogilvy, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Marian, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
 Marino Faliero, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 Marius the Epicurean, by W. H. Pater, III. 607, 608.
 Marjorie Fleming, by Dr J. Brown, III. 451.
 Market Harborough, by Whyte-Melville, III. 585.
 MARKHAM, GERVAISE, I. 398.
 Mark Rutherford, by W. H. White, III. 687.
 Marlborough (Duke of), Memoirs of, by William Coke, II. 630; book on, by Saintsbury, III. 693; by Winston Churchill, III. 714.
 MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER, I. 240, 241, 346.
 MARMION, SHACKERLEY, I. 633.
 Marmion, by Scott, III. 31, 34, 36, 39.
 Maroon, by T. Mayne Reid, III. 506.
 MARPRELATE, MARTIN, I. 332.
 Marriage, by S. E. Ferrier, III. 300, 301; by H. G. Wells, III. 713.
 Marriage à la Mode, by Dryden, I. 796.
 MARRIOTT, CHARLES, III. 847.
 MARRYAT, FREDERICK, III. 255.
 Marsena, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
 MARSH, HERBERT, II. 646.
 MARSHALL, ROBERT, III. 845.
 MARSH-CALDWELL, ANNE, III. 187.
 Marshes of Glynn, by S. Lanier, III. 825.
 MARSTON, JOHN, I. 462.
 MARSTON, JOHN WESTLAND, III. 567.
 MARSTON, PHILIP BOURKE, III. 567.
 Martial Achievements of the Scots Nation, by Abercromby, II. 391.
 MARTIN, MARTIN, II. 303.
 MARTIN, SIR THEODORE, III. 478.
 MARTIN, VIOLET, III. 851.
 Martin Chuzzlewit, by Dickens, III. 465, 467, 469, 470.
 Martin Faber, by W. G. Simms, III. 74, 2.
 Martin Rattler, by R. M. Ballantyne, III. 624.
 Martin Touttrond, by J. J. Morier, II. 784.
 MARTINEAU, HARRIET, III. 388; Autobiography of, 389.
- MARTINEAU, JAMES, III. 391.
 Martins of Cro' Martin, by Lever, III. 359.
 Martinus Scriblerus, II. 145, 195.
 Martyrdom of Madeline, by Buchanan, III. 656.
 Martyrs of Science, by Sir D. Brewster, III. 242.
 MARVEL, IK (D. G. MITCHELL), III. 821.
 MARVELL, ANDREW, I. 711.
 Mary Barton, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
 Mary Hamilton, I. 540.
 Mary in Heaven, by Burns, II. 815.
 Mary Jane, by G. R. Sims, III. 695.
 Mary Madgalene (St), by Crashaw, I. 678.
 Mary Morison, by Burns, II. 826.
 Mary of Castle-Cary, by Hector Macneill, II. 802, 803.
 Mary Queen of Scots, by Agnes Strickland, III. 281; by Chalmers, II. 636; by Henry Glassford Bell, III. 415; by Tytler, II. 388; Letters said to have been written by, by Walter Goodall, II. 389.
 Mary Rose, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Mary's Dream, II. 803.
 Mary Stuart, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 671.
 MARZIALS, SIR FRANK, III. 841.
 MASEFIELD, JOHN, III. 710, 723.
 Masks and Faces, by Charles Reade, III. 463, 483.
 MASON, ALFRED EDWARD WOODLEY, III. 846.
 MASON, WILLIAM, II. 426.
 Massachusetts, by J. R. Lowell, III. 803.
 Massachusetts to Virginia, by Whittier, III. 776.
 Massarenes, by Ouida, III. 690.
 MASSEY, GERALD, III. 608.
 MASSINGER, PHILIP, I. 464.
 MASSON, DAVID, III. 633.
 Master Builder, by Gosse, III. 696.
 Masterman Ready, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Master of Ballantrae, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 MASTERS, EDGAR LEE, III. 855.
 Match, a, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 671.
 Materia Hieroglyphica, by Sir J. G. Wilkinson, III. 321.
 MATHER, COTTON, III. 734, 737.
 MATHER, INCREASE, III. 734; Memoirs of, III. 738.
 MATHERS, HELEN (Mrs Reeves), III. 850.
 MATHIAS, THOMAS JAMES, II. 678.
 Matilda, by Marquis of Normanby, II. 783.
 Matins, by George Herbert, I. 496.
 Matter and Spirit, by J. Priestley, II. 540.
 MATTHEW PARIS, I. 33.
 Matthew Wald, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 MATTHEWS, JAMES BRANDER, III. 854.
 MATUREN, CHARLES ROBERT, II. 752.
 Maud, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Maud Muller, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775.
 MAUGHAM, W. SOMERSET, III. 714, 722.
 MAURICE, FREDERICK DENISON, III. 441.
 Maurice Tierney, by C. J. Lever, III. 359.
 MAURIER, GEORGE DU, III. 840.
 MAYOR, DR O. H. ('James Bridle'), III. 848.
 MAX-MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH, III. 661.
 MAXWELL, JAMES CLERK, III. 840.
 MAXWELL, SIR HERBERT, III. 841.
 MAXWELL, WILLIAM HAMILTON, III. 267.
 MAY, SIR THOMAS ESKINE, III. 490.
 MAY, THOMAS, I. 581.
 May, by William Barnes, III. 413.
 May, Song to, by Lord Thurlow, II. 792.
 May-day with the Muses, by Bloomfield, II. 687.
 May-eve, by John Cunningham, II. 455.
 MAYNE, JASPER, I. 638.
 MAYNE, JOHN, II. 810.
 Maynooth Grant, Speech on, by Macaulay, III. 370.
 MEADE, L. T. (Mrs Toulmin Smith), III. 850.
 Measure for Measure, by Shakespeare, I. 370.
 Mechanics, Treatise on, by W. Whewell, III. 198.
 Mechanism of the Heavens, by Mary Somerville, III. 186.
 Medal, by John Dryden, I. 793.
 Medals, Essay on, by J. Pinkerton, II. 637.
 Mediaeval Church History, by Archbishop Trench, III. 393.
 Meditations, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Meditations among the Tombs, by Harvey, II. 338.
 MEDWALL, HENRY, I. 157.
 MEEKE, MRS MARY, III. 178.
 Meg Dods's Cookery, by Christian Isobel Johnston, II. 772.
 Mehlah, by S. Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 Meister Karl's Sketch-Book, by C. G. Leland, III. 784.

- Melancholy, Anatomy of, by Burton, I. 435.
 Melchior, by W. Gorman Wills, III. 584.
 MELMOTH, WILLIAM, II. 391.
 Melmoth the Wanderer, by C. R. Maturin, II. 752, 753.
 MELVILLE, HERMAN, III. 821.
 MELVILLE, JAMES, I. 229.
 MELVILLE, SIR JAMES, I. 227.
 Memoirs of Eighty Years, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 Memorials of English Affairs, by Bulstrode Whitelocke, I. 750.
 Memorials of his Time, by Henry Cockburn, III. 313.
 Memory of the Dead, by J. K. Ingram, III. 580.
 Men and Books, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 608.
 Men and Women, by Robert Browning, III. 554, 563.
 Menaphon, by Greene, I. 324, 327.
 MENCKEN, HENRY LOUIS, III. 856.
 MENNES, SIR JOHN, I. 630.
 Mental and Moral Science, by Bain, III. 497.
 Menu, Ordinances of, trans. by Sir W. Jones, II. 616.
 Merchant of Venice, by Shakespeare, I. 380.
 Merddin, I. 3.
 MEREDITH, GEORGE, III. 658.
 MEREDITH, OWEN (Earl of Lytton), III. 638.
 MERES, FRANCIS, I. 397.
 MERIVALE, CHARLES, III. 207.
 Merle and the Nightingale, by Dunbar, I. 195.
 Merlin and Arthur, I. 51.
 Mermaid, by John Leyden, II. 692.
 Merope, by Matthew Arnold, III. 592.
 MERRICK, JAMES, II. 420.
 MERRICK, LEONARD, III. 846.
 MERRIMAN, HENRY SETON (Hugh Stowell Scott), III. 719.
 Merry Devil of Edmonton, I. 334.
 Merry Men, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Merry Mount, by J. L. Motley, III. 814.
 Merry Wives of Windsor, by Shakespeare, I. 366.
 Messiah, by Pope, II. 180, 184.
 Messiah, Coming of the, by Edward Irving, III. 268.
 MESTON, WILLIAM, II. 316.
 Method, by Coleridge, III. 61.
 Method of the Divine Government, by M'Cosh, III. 397.
 Metra of Boethius, I. 21.
 Metrical Romances, ed. by Ritson, II. 637.
 MEW, CHARLOTTE, III. 851.
 Mexico, Conquest of, by Prescott, III. 765, 766.
 Mexico and the Mexicans, by Sir E. B. Tylor, III. 663.
 MEYNELL, ALICE, III. 704.
 MICHAEL, LIONEL, III. 729.
 Michael, by Wordsworth, III. 16.
 MICKLE, WILLIAM JULIUS, II. 522.
 Microcosmographie, by John Earle, I. 577.
 Middle English Literature, I. 31.
 Middlemarch, by George Eliot, III. 530.
 MIDDLETON, CONYERS, II. 246.
 MIDDLETON, RICHARD, III. 722.
 MIDDLETON, THOMAS, I. 458.
 Midshipman Easy, by Marryat, III. 255, 257.
 Midsummer Holiday, by Swinburne, III. 673.
 Midsummer Night's Dream, by Shakespeare, I. 365.
 Miggles, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Milestones, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 MILL, JAMES, II. 757.
 MILL, JOHN STUART, III. 442.
 MILLAY, EDNA, III. 856.
 MILLER, HUGH, III. 284.
 MILLER, JOAQUIN, III. 828.
 MILLER, THOMAS, III. 877.
 Miller of Deanhaugh, by Ballantine, III. 877.
 Mill on the Floss, by George Eliot, III. 529, 533.
 MILMAN, HENRY HART, III. 208.
 MILNE, ALAN A., III. 848.
 MILNES, RICHARD MONCKTON (Lord Houghton), III. 882.
 MILTON, JOHN, I. 687; Life of, by D. Masson, III. 633; by J. Toland, II. 161, 162; by Mark Pattison, III. 480.
 Minchmoor, by Dr John Brown, III. 451.
 Minor Historians, II. 887.
 Minor Scottish Song-Writers, II. 810.
 MINOT, LAURENCE, I. 64.
 Minstrel, by James Beattie, II. 525, 526.
 Minstrel O'Connellan, by Wills, III. 350.
 Minstrelsy Ancient and Modern, by William Motherwell, III. 309.
 Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, by Scott, III. 7, 31, 83.
 MINTO, WILLIAM, III. 693.
 Minutes of Lives, by John Aubrey, I. 747.
 Miracle-Plays, I. 34, 45, 107, 239.
 Miracles, On, by Campbell, II. 427, 428.
 Miracles and Modern Spiritualism, by A. R. Wallace, III. 615.
 Miracles of Christ, by Woolston, II. 164.
 Miranda, by Bryan W. Procter, III. 227.
 Mirour de l'Omme, by Gower, I. 74.
 Mirror, II. 536.
 Mirror for Magistrates, I. 237, 245.
 Mirthful Haven, by Booth Tarkington, III. 835.
 Miscellanea, by Sir W. Temple, I. 752; by Dryden, I. 794, 796, 815.
 Miser, by Henry Fielding, II. 339.
 Miseries of Human Life, by Beresford, II. 740.
 Misfortunes of Arthur, I. 333, 334.
 Misfortunes of Barney Branagan, by Carleton, III. 352.
 Misfortunes of Elphin, by Thomas Love Peacock, III. 150, 151.
 Miss in her Teens, by David Garrick, II. 432.
 Missionary of the Andes, by Bowles, II. 721, 722.
 Miss Marjoribanks, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Mistress, by Cowley, I. 643.
 Mistress of Philarete, by Wither, I. 499.
 Mistress of the Manse, by Holland, III. 778.
 MITCHELL, JOHN, III. 582.
 MITCHELL, DONALD GRANT, III. 821.
 MITCHELL, JAMES LESLIE, III. 849.
 MITCHELL, MARGARET, III. 856.
 MITCHELL, SILAS WEIR, III. 825.
 MITCHISON, NAOMI, III. 862.
 MITTFORD, MARY RUSSELL, III. 176.
 MITTFORD, WILLIAM, II. 630.
 Mitherless Bairn, by W. Thom, III. 305.
 MIVART, ST GEORGE, III. 839.
 Mixed Essays, by M. Arnold, III. 595.
 Moby Dick, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
 Mock-Doctor, by Henry Fielding, II. 339.
 Modern Guides of English Thought, by R. H. Hutton, III. 632.
 Modern Love, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Modern Painters, by Ruskin, III. 568, 569, 570, 572.
 Modern Painting, by G. Moore, III. 707.
 Modern Utopia, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
 Modest Proposal, by Swift, II. 125, 127.
 Modocs, My Life among the, by Joaquin Miller, III. 828.
 MOIR, DAVID MACBETH, III. 311.
 Molecular and Microscopic Science, by Mary Somerville, III. 186.
 MOLESWORTH, MRS MARY LOUISA STEWART, III. 850.
 Monarchie, by Sir David Lyndsay, I. 206.
 Monarchy, by Fulke Greville, I. 354.
 MONBODDO, LORD, II. 435.
 Money, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 Monk, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748, 749.
 Monk of Fife, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 MONMOUTH, GEOFFREY OF, I. 3, 33, 35, 37.
 Monna Innominata, by C. Rossetti, III. 646, 648.
 Monody, by Lyttelton, II. 349.
 Monsieur Beaucaire, by Booth Tarkington, III. 835.
 MONTAGU, CHARLES (Earl of Halifax), II. 244.
 MONTAGU, ELIZABETH, II. 418.
 MONTAGU, LADY MARY WORTLEY, II. 254.
 MONTAGUE, CHARLES EDWARD, III. 847.
 Montaigne's Essays, trans. by Florio, I. 261.
 Montcalm and Wolfe, by F. Parkman, III. 818, 819-821.
 MONTEFIORE, CLAUDE G., III. 844.
 Montezuma's Daughter, by Sir H. Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 MONTGOMERIE, ALEXANDER, I. 233.
 MONTGOMERY, JAMES, II. 741.
 MONTGOMERY, L. M., III. 851.
 MONTGOMERY, ROBERT, III. 238.
 Monthly Review, II. 13.
 MONTROSE, MARQUIS OF (James Graham), I. 817; Memoirs of, by M. Napier, III. 291.
 Monuments of Nineveh, by Sir A. H. Layard, III. 498.
 MONYPENNY, WILLIAM F., III. 846.
 MOODIE, MRS SUSANNA, III. 725.
 MOODY, W. V., III. 833.
 Moon and Sixpence, by Somerset Maugham, III. 714.
 Moonstone, by Collins, III. 820.
 MOORE, DR JOHN, II. 618.
 MOORE, EDWARD, II. 400.
 MOORE, FRANK FRANKFORT, III. 843.
 MOORE, GEORGE, III. 707.
 MOORE, GEORGE EDWARD, III. 847.
 MOORE, THOMAS, III. 346.
 MOORE, THOMAS STURGE, III. 714.
 Mopaa the Fairy, by Jean Ingelow, III. 528.
 Moral and Metaphysical Philosophy, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
 Moral and Political Philosophy, by Paley, II. 643.
 Moral and Religious Aphorisms, by Benjamin Whichcote, I. 603.
 Moral Essays, by Pope, II. 183.
 Moral Feelings, by J. Abercromby, III. 242.
 Moral Ode, I. 40.
 Moral Philosophy, by Francis Hutcheson, II. 290; by Dugald Stewart, II. 535.
 Moral Sentiments, by Adam Smith, II. 448, 449.
 Moralists, by Shaftesbury, II. 167, 170-172.
 Moralities, Religious, I. 107, 239.
 Morals, European, by Lecky, III. 684.
 Morals, Inquiry concerning, by Hume, II. 377.
 Morayshire, Floods in, by Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 MORE, DR HENRY, I. 160.
 MORE, HANNAH, II. 577.
 MORE, PAUL ELMER, III. 855.
 MORE, SIR THOMAS, I. 120, 121.
 More Worlds than One, by Brewster, III. 242.
 MORGAN, AUGUSTUS DE, III. 398.
 MORGAN, LADY, II. 780.
 MORGAN, WILLIAM DE, III. 709.
 Morgana (Palace of), by Sterling, III. 271.
 MORIER, JAMES JUSTINIAN, II. 783.
 MORISON, JAMES COTTER, III. 662.
 MORLEY, CHRISTOPHER, III. 856.
 MORLEY, HENRY, III. 632.
 MORLEY, LORD, III. 685.
 Mormons, History of the, by C. Mackay, III. 481.
 MORRIS, SIR LEWIS, III. 662.
 MORRIS, WILLIAM, III. 10, 664.
 MORRISON, ARTHUR, III. 845.
 Mortal Antipathy, by O. W. Holmes, III. 792.
 Morte d'Arthur, by Malory, I. 92-94; attributed to Huchowne, I. 57, 172; by Heber, III. 213.
 MORTON, THOMAS, II. 709.
 Morton's Hope, by Motley, III. 814, 816.
 MOSS, THOMAS, II. 617.
 Mosses from an Old Manse, by Hawthorne, III. 779.
 Mostyn Plays, I. 157.
 MOTHERWELL, WILLIAM, III. 309.
 Moths, by Ouida, III. 690.
 MOTLEY, JOHN LOTHROP, III. 814; Life of, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791.
 MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE, III. 848.
 MOULTON, LOUISE CHANDLER, III. 854.
 MOULTRIE, JOHN, III. 323.
 Mountain Bard, by James Hogg, III. 292.
 Mountain Children, by Mary Howitt, III. 283.
 Mountain Daisy, by Burns, II. 824.
 Mountain Lovers, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Mountaineering, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Mountaineers, by Colman, II. 656, 657.
 Mourning Becomes Electra, by Eugene O'Neill, III. 836.
 Mourning Bride, by Congreve, II. 82, 83.
 Mourning Garment, by Greene, I. 324, 327.
 Mouse, To a, by Burns, II. 823.
 Mrs Dalway, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Mrs Warrren's Profession, by Shaw, III. 706.
 Much Ado about Nothing, by Shakespeare, I. 367.
 MULGRAVE, EARL OF. See SHEFFIELD (JOHN).
 MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH MAX., III. 661.
 MULLINGER, JAMES BASS, III. 840.
 MULOCK, DINAH MARIA (Mrs Craik), III. 536.
 Mummer's Wife, by G. Moore, III. 707.
 Mummy, Address to the, by Horace Smith, III. 160, 162.
 MUNDAY, ANTHONY, I. 333.
 Mundi et Cordis Carmina, by Thomas Wade, III. 344.
 Munera Pulveris, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 MUNRO, NEIL, III. 713.
 Munster Festivals, by G. Griffin, III. 857.
 MURCHISON, SIR RODERICK I., III. 267.
 Murder in the Cathedral, by T. S. Eliot, III. 716.
 Murders in the Rue Morgue, by Poe, III. 788.

- MURE, COLONEL WILLIAM, III. 219.
 MURFREY, MARY NOAILLES, III. 833.
 MURPHY, ARTHUR, II. 455.
 MURRAY, CHARLES, III. 733, 846.
 MURRAY, DAVID CHRISTIE, III. 842.
 MURRAY, GILBERT, III. 730.
 MURRAY, LINDLEY, III. 743.
 MURRAY, SIR JAMES AUGUSTUS HENRY, III. 840.
 MURRAY, SIR JOHN, III. 726.
 Musarum Deliciae, I. 630.
 Music, Influence on Lyrical Poetry, I. 273.
 Music and Manners in France and Germany, by H. F. Chorley, III. 273.
 Music and Moonlight, by A. W. E. O'Shaughnessy, III. 656.
 Musick's Duell, by Crashaw, I. 678.
 My ain Fireside, by Mrs Hamilton, II. 810.
 My Beautiful Lady, by T. Woolner, III. 607.
 My Birthday, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775, 777.
 My Brother's Grave, by J. Moultrie, III. 323.
 My Lady Nicotine, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 My Land, by T. O. Davis, III. 365.
 My Little Wife, by David Wingate, III. 609.
 My Mind to Me a Kingdom is, by Sir Edward Dyer, I. 275.
 My Mother bids me bind my Hair, by Mrs Hunter, II. 599.
 My Novel, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 My Own Time, History of, by Bishop Burnet, II. 30, 32-36.
 My pretty Jane, by E. Fitzball, II. 783.
 My Psalm, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775, 777.
 My Relations with Carlyle, by J. A. Froude, III. 505.
 My Schools and Schoolmasters, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 My Sister's Sleep, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 642, 644.
 My Village, by T. C. Croker, III. 412.
 MYERS, FREDERIC WILLIAM HENRY, III. 691.
 Myrrour for Magistrates, I. 237, 245.
 Mysteries of Udolpho, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594, 595.
 Mysterious Mother, by Walpole, II. 411.
 Mystery of Edwin Drood, by Dickens, III. 465, 466.
 Mystery of Godliness, by H. More, I. 611.
 Mystery of Life, by Gambold, II. 421.
 Mystery of Metropolisville, by E. Eggleston, III. 824.
 Mystery of the Royal Mail, by Farjeon, III. 732.
 Mystic's Monologue, by G. Darley, III. 236.
 Myth, Ritual, and Religion, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Myths of the Middle Ages, by S. Baring-Gould, III. 664.
- NABBES, THOMAS, I. 487.
 Nabob, by Susanna Blamire, II. 801.
 Nalad, by J. H. Reynolds, III. 268.
 NAIRNE, LADY, II. 827.
 Namby Pamby, by Henry Carey, II. 330.
 Namousa the Enchantress, by Moore, III. 350.
 Nan, by John Masefield, III. 710.
 NAPIER, MARK, III. 291.
 Napier, Sir Charles, Life of, by Sir W. F. P. Napier, III. 220.
 NAPIER, SIR WILLIAM F. P., III. 219.
 Napoleon Buonaparte, Life of, by Hazlitt, III. 80; by Seeley, III. 649; Historic Doubts relative to, by Whately, III. 196.
 NASH, THOMAS, I. 323.
 Nation newspaper, III. 364, 583.
 Native Genius, by Ebenezer Elliot, III. 233.
 Natural History, by Waterton, III. 174.
 Natural History of Enthusiasm, by Isaac Taylor, III. 244; of Intellect, by R. W. Emerson, III. 760.
 Natural History of Selborne, by Gilbert White, II. 625-627.
 Natural Magic, by Sir D. Brewster, III. 242.
 Natural Religion, by David Hume, II. 377; by Seeley, III. 649.
 Natural Selection, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 Natural Theology, by Paley, II. 643, 644; by Chalmers, III. 188.
 Naturalist in La Plata, by W. H. Hudson, III. 711.
 Nature, by R. W. Emerson, III. 759, 760, 761, 780; by H. D. Thoreau, III. 799.
 Nature and Art, by Mrs Inchbald, II. 584-586.
- Nature-Riddle, by Cynewulf (?), I. 8, 9, 13.
 Nature's Serial Story, by E. P. Roë, III. 825.
 NAUNTON, SIR ROBERT, I. 457.
 Naval Sketch-Book, by Glascock, III. 259.
 Navigations of Hakluyt, I. 284.
 NAVLER, JAMES, I. 823.
 Nearer Home, by Phoebe Cary, III. 824.
 NEAVES, CHARLES, III. 313.
 Nebo the Nailor, by Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 NECKHAM, ALEXANDER, I. 34.
 Needy Knife-Grinder, by Canning, II. 673, 674.
 Nelson, Life of, by Southey, III. 50, 53; by A. T. Mahan, III. 827.
 Nemesis of Faith, by Froude, III. 502.
 NENNIUS, I. 3.
 Nepenthe, by George Darley, III. 235, 236.
 Nero, by Robert Bridges, III. 693.
 New Arabian Nights, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697, 698.
 New Arcadia, by Madame Duclaux, III. 704.
 New Atlantis, by Bacon, I. 385.
 New Bath Guide, by Anstey, II. 434.
 NEWBOLT, SIR HENRY JOHN, III. 845.
 NEWCASTLE, DUCHESS OF, I. 675, 732.
 Newcastle Apothecary, by Colman, II. 659.
 Newcomes, by W. M. Thackeray, III. 458, 462.
 New England Primer, III. 735.
 New England Tragedies, by Longfellow, III. 770.
 New Grub Street, by Gissing, III. 711.
 New Inn, by Ben Jonson, I. 405.
 New Machiavelli, by Wells, III. 712.
 NEWMAN, F. W., III. 342.
 NEWMAN, JOHN HENRY, III. 337.
 New Paul and Virginia, by W. H. Mallock, III. 703.
 New Road, by Neil Munro, III. 713.
 News from Nowhere, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Newspaper, First Daily, II. 2, 12.
 New Spirit of the Age, III. 413.
 New Testament, Scots, I. 212.
 New Timon, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 NEWTON, JOHN, II. 613.
 NEWTON, SIR ISAAC, II. 23.
 New Way to pay Old Debts, by Massinger, I. 464, 465.
 New York, History of, by Diedrich Knickerbocker, III. 745.
 New York Tribune, III. 811.
 New Zealand, Maning's, III. 730.
 New Zealand Literature. See AUSTRALASIAN LITERATURE, III. 729.
 NICHOL, JOHN, III. 637.
 Nicholas Minturn, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 Nicholas Nickleby, by Dickens, III. 464, 467, 469, 470.
 NICHOLS, ROBERT, III. 849.
 NICHOLSON, WILLIAM, III. 306.
 NICOLL, ROBERT, III. 481.
 NICOLL, SIR WILLIAM ROBERTSON, III. 842.
 NICOLSON, WILLIAM, II. 166.
 Night, by Churchill, II. 496, 496.
 Night, Sonnet on, by Blanco White, II. 792.
 Night and Morning, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 Night-piece on Death, by Parnell, II. 249.
 Night-side of Nature, by Catherine Crowe, III. 280.
 Night Thoughts, by E. Young, 260-263.
 Nightingale, by Coleridge, III. 66.
 Nightingale, Ode to a, by Keats, III. 101, 104.
 Nightingales, by Robert Bridges, III. 693.
 Nile, Books on the, by Burton, III. 610; by Speke, III. 610; by Baker, III. 610.
 Nine Cases of Conscience, by Sanderson, I. 552.
 Nineveh, by Sir A. H. Layard, III. 498.
 NOBLE, JAMES ASHCROFT, III. 841.
 Noble Lord, Letter to a, by Burke, II. 548.
 Noble Numbers, by Robert Herrick, I. 560.
 No Cross, no Crown, by Penn, II. 51, 52.
 Noctes Ambrosianae, by John Wilson, III. 246, 247-250.
 Nocturnal Reverie, by the Countess of Winchelsea, II. 253, 254.
 NOEL, RODEN, III. 637.
 No Name, by Wilkie Collins, III. 620.
 Nonsense Rhymes, by Lear, III. 657.
 Norman Conquest, by Freeman, III. 626.
 Norman Conquest, After the, I. 29.
 NORMANBY, THE MARQUIS OF, II. 783. See also SHEPFIELD (JOHN).
 Normandy, History of, by Palgrave, III. 265.
 Norman-French in England, I. 31.
 NORRIS, FRANK, III. 855.
 NORRIS, JOHN, II. 259.
 NORRIS, WILLIAM EDWARD, III. 842.
- Norse, Tales from the, by Dasent, III. 499.
 NORTH, CHRISTOPHER (John Wilson), III. 245.
 NORTH, SIR THOMAS, I. 258.
 North America, Travels in, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
 North American Review, III. 752, 801, 802.
 North and South, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
 Northanger Abbey, by Jane Austen, II. 774.
 North Briton, edited by Wilkes, II. 516.
 Northern Cobbler, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 Northern Farmer, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 Northern Studies, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 Northern Travel, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 NORTON, CHARLES ELIOT, III. 825.
 NORTON, THE HON. MRS, III. 385.
 NORTON, THOMAS, I. 157, 241.
 Norway and its Glaciers, by J. D. Forbes, III. 400.
 Nosce Teipsum, by Sir John Davies, I. 394.
 Nostromo, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Notes and Queries founded, III. 331.
 Not Wisely but Too Well, by Miss Brough-ton, III. 690.
 Nourjahad, by Mrs Sheridan, II. 564.
 Nova Scotia, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 Nova Scotian, III. 725, 726.
 Novel, Development of the, II. 6.
 Novum Organum, by Bacon, I. 381, 387.
 Now Winter Nights Enlarge, by Campion, I. 400.
 NOYES, ALFRED, III. 848.
 Nugæ Antiquæ, by Harington, I. 392.
 Nun, by Aphra Behn, II. 68.
 Nurse's Song, by William Blake, II. 720.
 Nymph and her Fawn, by Marvell, I. 712.
 Nymphidia, by Drayton, I. 342, 345.
 Nymph's Reply, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 353.
- Oberon (Wieland's) trans. by Sotheby, II. 713.
 Observations on Man, by Hartley, II. 338.
 Observations on the Art of Poesie, by Campion, I. 400.
 O'CASEY, SEAN, III. 722, 848.
 Occasional Reflections, by Boyle, I. 727.
 OCCLEVE (HOCCEVE), I. 77.
 Ocean, Address to the, by B. W. Procter, III. 228.
 Ocean, Ode on, by Young, II. 265.
 Ocean Tragedy, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 Oceana, by Harrington, I. 619; by Froude, III. 503.
 OCKLEY, SIMON, II. 211.
 O'Connor's Child, by Campbell, II. 766, 770.
 Ode to Adversity, by Gray, II. 360; to Eton College, II. 359, 360, 362; for Music, III. 363; to Evening, by Collins, II. 368, 369; to Mrs Anne Killigrew, by Dryden, I. 795, 796; to the Departing Year, by Coleridge, III. 57, 63; to the North-East Wind, by Kingsley, III. 614, 516.
 O'Donnell, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 O'DOWD, BERNARD P., III. 729.
 Odyssey, translations of, by Chapman, I. 377; by Hobbes, I. 555; by Ogilby, I. 824; by Pope, II. 179; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Morris, III. 665; by Lang, &c., III. 692.
 Of Bodies, by Sir Kenelm Digby, I. 580.
 O'FLAHERTY, LIAM, III. 849.
 OGILBY, JOHN, I. 823.
 OGILVY, WILLIAM H., III. 729.
 O'HARA, JOHN B., III. 729.
 O'Hara Family, by Michael and John Banim, III. 858, 854.
 O'KEEFE, JOHN, II. 656.
 Old Arm-Chair, by Eliza Cook, III. 528.
 Old Bachelor, by Congreve, II. 82, 84.
 Old Bridge at Florence, by Longfellow III. 772.
 Old Creole Days, by G. W. Cable, III. 829.
 Old Curiosity Shop, by Dickens, III. 464, 467.
 Old English Baron, by Clara Reeve, II. 420.
 Old Familiar Faces, by Lamb, III. 73, 75.
 Old Ironsides, by O. W. Holmes, III. 790.
 Old Judge, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 Old Kensington, by Lady Ritchie, III. 689.
 Old Lang Syne, by Sir R. Aytoun, I. 508.
 Old Law, by Massinger, Middleton, and Rowley, I. 478.
 Old Manor House, by Charlotte Smith, II. 503.
 Old Man's Wish, by Walter Pope, II. 98.
 Old Mortality, by Scott, III. 42.
 Old Plays, Dodsley's, II. 801.
 Old Quebec, by Sir G. Parker, III. 728.
 Old Red Sandstone, by Hugh Miller, III. 285, 286.

- Old Régime in Canada, by F. Parkman, III. 818.
 Old St Paul's, by W. H. Ainsworth, III. 378.
 Old Stic, by Emily Brontë, III. 528.
 Old Wives' Tale, by Peele, I. 321; by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 Old-World Idylls, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
 Oldham, John, I. 790.
 Oldmixon, John, II. 244.
 Oldys, William, II. 300.
 Ole Swimm'n' Hole, by J. W. Riley, III. 831.
 Oliphant, Laurence, III. 635.
 Oliphant, Mrs., III. 537.
 Oliver, Frederick Scott, III. 846.
 Oliver Twist, by Dickens, III. 464, 467, 468.
 Olivia, by W. G. Wills, III. 584.
 Olney Hymns, II. 601, 605, 614.
 Olor Iscanus, by Vaughan, I. 682, 683.
 Olig Grange, by 'Hermann Kunst' (Walter Chalmers Smith), III. 607.
 Oman, Sir Charles William Chadwick, III. 845.
 'Omar Khayyam, trans. by FitzGerald, III. 424, 427.
 O may I join the Choir Invisible, by George Eliot, III. 535.
 Omoo, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
 O Nancy, wilt thou go with me? by Thomas Percy, III. 505.
 One-Hoss Shay, by O. W. Holmes, III. 792, 793.
 O'Neill, Eugene (Gladstone), III. 722, 836.
 One in Paradise, To, by E. A. Poe, III. 790.
 One of our Conquerors, by Meredith, III. 658.
 Onions, Oliver, III. 847.
 O no, we never mention her, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Opie, Mrs. Amelia, II. 598.
 Optics, by Sir Isaac Newton, II. 24.
 Orara, by H. C. Kendall, III. 731.
 Orcaidan Sketches, by D. Vedder, III. 305.
 Orchestra, or a Poem on Dancing, by Sir John Davies, I. 394.
 Ordeal of Richard Feverel, by G. Meredith, III. 658, 659.
 ORDERICUS VITALIS, I. 33.
 Oregon Trail, by Francis Parkman, III. 817.
 Orestes, by Lord de Tabley, III. 650.
 Oriental Eclogues, by Collins, II. 11, 308.
 Oriental Herald, III. 224.
 Oriental Poems, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Origines Sacrae, by E. Stillingfleet, II. 39.
 Origin of Evil, by John Fiske, III. 828.
 Origin of Society, by Mandeville, II. 201.
 Origin of Species, by Darwin, III. 417, 418, 419, 420.
 ORINDA (Mrs K. Phillips), I. 746.
 Orion, by R. H. Home, III. 413; by Sir C. G. D. Roberts, III. 728.
 Orlando, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Orlando Furioso, by Greene, I. 324.
 Orlando Furioso (Ariosto's), trans. by Harrington, I. 391; by John Hoole, II. 755; by W. S. Rose, II. 760.
 ORM OF ORMIN, I. 38.
 ORME, ROBERT, II. 541.
 Ormond, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735.
 Ormond, To the Duchess of, by Dryden, I. 801.
 Ormulum, I. 38.
 Oroonoko, by Aphra Behn, II. 68, 69; by Thomas Southerne, II. 75.
 Orosius's History, I. 20.
 Orphan, by Otway, II. 72, 74.
 Orphan Boy's Tale, by Mrs Opie, II. 598.
 Orpheus and Eurydice, by King, II. 197.
 Orpheus in Thrace, by Lord de Tabley, III. 660.
 Orra, by Joanna Baillie, II. 733.
 Orygynale Cronyky, by Wyntoun, I. 181.
 OSBORNE, DOROTHY, I. 751; Letters, I. 755.
 O'SHAUGHNESSY, A. W. E., III. 666.
 Ossian, II. 500-504; Wordsworth on, III. 20.
 Othello, by Shakespeare, I. 370.
 Ottoman Empire, by Rycout, I. 273.
 OTWAY, CÆSAR, III. 345.
 OTWAY, THOMAS, II. 71.
 OUIDA (Louise de la Ramée), III. 690.
 Our American Cousin, by Tom Taylor, III. 463.
 Our Betters, by Somerset Maugham, III. 714.
 Our Boys, by Henry James Byron, III. 637.
 Our Old Home, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 Our Own Times, History of, by McCarthy, III. 660.
 Our Village, by M. R. Mitford, III. 176, 177.
 Out of the Hurly Burly, by C. H. Clark, III. 825.
 OUTRAM, GEORGE, III. 414.
 Outward Bound, by E. Howard, III. 259.
 OVERBURY, SIR THOMAS, I. 442.
 Over-Soul, by R. W. Emerson, III. 762.
 OWEN, JOHN, I. 668.
 OWEN, SIR RICHARD, III. 818.
 OWEN, WILFRID, III. 723, 849.
 Owl and the Nightingale, I. 42.
 OXFORD, EARL OF. See DE VERE, I. 277.
 OXFORD AND ASQUITH, EARL OF, III. 843.
 Oxford, by Robert Montgomery, III. 238.
 Oxford Movement, by R. W. Church, III. 577.
 Pacchiarotto, by Browning, III. 556, 566.
 Pacha of Many Tales, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Paddock and the Mous, by Henryson, I. 191.
 PAGAN, ISOBEL, II. 810.
 PAGE, GERTRUDE, III. 733.
 PAGE, THOMAS NELSON, III. 854.
 Pageant, by Christina Rossetti, III. 646.
 Pageant of Summer, by R. Jefferies, III. 640.
 PAGET, VIOLET, III. 851.
 PAIN, BARRY, III. 846.
 PAINÉ, THOMAS, II. 559.
 PAINTER, WILLIAM, I. 238, 262.
 Palace of Morgana, by J. Sterling, III. 271.
 Palace of Pleasure, by W. Painter, I. 238, 262; in Chaucer, I. 70; in Dryden, I. 802.
 Paladin of Philanthropy, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Palamon and Arcite, by R. Edwards, I. 264.
 Palestine, by Bishop Heber, III. 212, 213.
 PALEY, WILLIAM, II. 643.
 PALFREY, JOHN GORHAM, III. 853.
 PALGRAVE, FRANCIS TURNER, III. 266, 609.
 PALGRAVE, SIR FRANCIS, III. 265.
 PALGRAVE, WILLIAM GIFFORD, III. 266, 609.
 Palice of Honour, by Gavin Douglas, I. 202.
 Palladis Tamia, by Francis Meres, I. 397.
 PALTOCK, ROBERT, II. 393.
 Pamela, by Richardson, II. 295, 297.
 Pandosto, by Greene, I. 324, 328.
 Panegyric on the Coronation, by Dryden, I. 795.
 Panegyric to My Lord Protector, by Waller, I. 626.
 Panorama, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775.
 Papacy in the Reformation Period, by Mandell Creighton, III. 687.
 Papp with a Hatchett, by Lyly, I. 316.
 Parables and Tales, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 Paracelsus, by Browning, III. 552, 559.
 Paradise Lost, I. 690, 692, 700-703.
 Paradise of Dainty Devices, by Edwards, I. 257, 264.
 Paradise Regained, I. 690, 704.
 PARDOE, JULIA, III. 384.
 Parentator, by Cotton Mather, III. 737, 738.
 Parish Register, by Crabbe, II. 694, 696.
 Parish Workhouse, by Crabbe, II. 695.
 Parisina, by Lord Byron, III. 122.
 Paris in 1815, by G. Croly, III. 171, 172.
 PARK, MUNGO, II. 651.
 PARKER, JOSEPH, III. 840.
 PARKER, SIR GILBERT, III. 726, 728.
 PARKER, THEODORE, III. 763.
 PARKMAN, FRANCIS, III. 817.
 Parliament of Fables, by Chaucer, I. 63, 66, 67.
 Parliamentary Government in England, by A. Todd, III. 726.
 PARNELL, THOMAS, II. 248.
 PARR, SAMUEL, II. 630.
 Parson's Wedding, by Killigrew, I. 634.
 Parthenia and Argalm, by Cartwright, I. 635.
 Parthenogenesis, by Sir R. Owen, III. 318.
 Parthenophil, by Barnabe Ranne, I. 278.
 Pascarel, by Ouida, III. 690.
 Pasquin, by Henry Fielding, II. 340.
 Passage to India, by Whitman, III. 807, 810.
 Passages from the Diary of a Late Physician, by Warren, III. 344.
 Passages of a Working Life by Charles Knight, III. 266.
 Passing of Arthur, by Tennyson, III. 547.
 Passionate Pilgrim, I. 257, 399.
 Passionate Shepherd to his Love, by Marlowe, I. 352.
 Passions, by Collins, II. 368, 370.
 Passions of Christ, by W. Kennedy, I. 201.
 Past and Present, by Carlyle, III. 404.
 Pastime of Pleasure, by S. Hawes, I. 112.
 PASTON, GEORGE (E. M. Symonds), III. 851.
 Paston Letters, I. 100; ed. by J. Gairdner, III. 632.
 Pastoral Ballad, by Shenstone, II. 353, 355-357.
 Pastoral Poetry, Beginnings of, I. 118, 242.
 Pastors, by Pope, II. 175, 180.
 Patchwork, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
 PATER, WALTER HORATIO, III. 607.
 PATERSON, A. B., III. 729, 732.
 PATERSON, WILLIAM ROMAINE, III. 847.
 Patience, alliterative poem, I. 54, 174.
 Patient Grisill, I. 334.
 PATMORE, COVENTRY K. D., III. 601.
 Patriarcha, by Sir R. Filmer, I. 569.
 Patriarchal Theory, by J. F. McLennan, III. 613.
 PATRICK, SIMON, II. 43.
 Patriot, by Henry Brooke, II. 396.
 Patriotism, Spirit of, by Bolingbroke, III. 202, 205.
 Patron, by George Crabbe, II. 694, 699.
 PATTISON, MARK, III. 479.
 PAUL, HERBERT WOODFIELD, III. 843.
 Paul Clifford, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 PAULDING, JAMES KIRKE, III. 743.
 Pauper's Death-bed, by Mrs Southey, III. 55.
 PAYN, JAMES, III. 634.
 PAYNE, JOHN HOWARD, III. 853.
 Peace Ode, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 PEACOCK, THOMAS LOVE, III. 150.
 Pearl, alliterative poem, I. 54, 173.
 PEARSON, CHARLES HENRY, III. 730.
 PEARSON, JOHN, I. 623.
 PEARSON, KARL, III. 844.
 PEARY, ROBERT E., III. 855.
 Pebbis to the Play, I. 210; not by James I., I. 183.
 PECCOCK, REGINALD, I. 91.
 Peeblesshire, History of, by William Chambers, III. 315.
 Peel, Sir Robert, Life of, by Earl Stanhope, III. 374; by McCarthy, III. 660.
 PEELE, GEORGE, I. 274, 321.
 Peg Woffington, by C. Reade, III. 483.
 Pelham, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Pelican Island, by Montgomery, II. 742, 744.
 PEMBERTON, SIR MAX, III. 845.
 Pencillings by the Way, by N. P. Willis, III. 749.
 Pendennis, by W. M. Thackeray, III. 458.
 Peninsular War, by Sir W. F. P. Napier, III. 219-223; by T. Hamilton, III. 254.
 PENN, WILLIAM, II. 50; Life of, by W. Hepworth Dixon, III. 578.
 PENNANT, THOMAS, II. 494.
 PENNECUK, ALEXANDER, II. 309.
 PENNECUK, DR ALEXANDER, II. 309.
 Penness Pilgrimage, by J. Taylor, I. 454.
 Penny Cyclopaedia, III. 266.
 Penny Magazine, III. 266.
 PENROSE, ELIZABETH, III. 384.
 Pension Beaurepas, by H. James, III. 830.
 Pentameron, by W. S. Landor, III. 141.
 Pentateuch, work on, by Colenso, III. 452.
 PEPYS, SAMUEL, I. 733, 770.
 PERCIVAL, JAMES GATES, III. 853.
 PERCY, THOMAS, II. 504.
 PERCY, WILLIAM, I. 278.
 Percy, by Hannah More, II. 577, 579.
 Peregrine Pickle, by Smollett, II. 442, 443, 444, 446.
 Pericles, by Fletcher and Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Pericles and Aspasia, by George Croly, III. 171; by W. S. Landor, III. 141, 146.
 Perpetual Curate, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Persia, Armenia, and Asia Minor, by J. J. Morier, II. 783.
 Persian in England, by Lyttelton, II. 349.
 Persian Monarchy, by Sir T. Herbert, I. 601.
 Persuasion, by Jane Austen, II. 774, 775.
 Peru, Conquest of, by Prescott, III. 765, 767.
 Peter Bell, by Wordsworth, III. 18.
 Peter Bell the Third, by Shelley, III. 110, 114.
 Peterborough Annals, I. 29.
 Peter Pan, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 PETER PLYMLEY (Sydney Smith), III. 156, 167.
 Peter Simple, by Frederick Marryat, III. 255, 256.
 Peter's Letters to his Kinsfolk, by Lockhart, III. 250.
 Peter Sterling, by P. L. Ford, III. 832.
 Peter the Great, On, by Aaron Hill, II. 198.
 Peter Wilkins, by R. Faltock, II. 393-396.
 Petrarch, Life of, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Phaedrus, Fables of, trans. by Smart, II. 424.
 PHAER, THOMAS, I. 265.
 Phalaris, by Richard Bentley, II. 105.
 Phantasmagoria, by Mrs M. J. Fletcher, III. 520.
 Phantasms of the Living, by Myers, III. 691.
 Phantastes, by George MacDonald, III. 606.
 Pharis, by Fiona Macleod, III. 706.
 Pharonnida, by W. Chamberlayne, I. 744.
 Pharsalia, trans. by T. May, I. 582; by Nicholas Rowe, II. 93, 95.
 Phases of Faith, by F. W. Newman, III. 842.
 Phaudrig Crochoore, by J. S. Le Fanu, III. 365.

- PHELPS, ELIZABETH STUART, III. 854.
 Philaster, by Beaumont and Fletcher, I. 469.
 Philip, II., by W. H. Prescott, III. 765, 766.
 PHILLIPS, AMBROSE, II. 239.
 PHILLIPS, JOHN, II. 241.
 PHILLIPS, MRS KATHERINE, I. 746.
 Philip van Arvelde, by Sir Henry Taylor, III. 324-326.
 PHILLIPS, DAVID GRAHAM, III. 855.
 PHILLIPS, EDWARD, I. 589.
 PHILLIPS, SAMUEL, III. 482.
 PHILLIPS, STEPHEN, III. 722, 846.
 PHILLIPS, WENDELL, III. 811.
 Phillis, by T. Lodge, I. 316, 318.
 PHILLPOTTS, EDEN, III. 845.
 Philoctetes, by Lord de Tabley, III. 650.
 Philosophy, History of, by G. H. Lewes, III. 496.
 Philosophy and Religion, by James Hinton, III. 613.
 Philosophy of Belief, by the Duke of Argyll, III. 614.
 Philosophy of Roman History, by De Quincey, III. 95.
 Philosophy of the Human Mind, by Dugald Stewart, II. 535.
 Phoebe Dawson, by G. Crabbe, II. 607.
 Phoenix Nest, I. 257.
 Phylpy Sparrow, by John Skelton, I. 114, 115, 119.
 Physical Basis of Life, by T. H. Huxley, III. 618.
 Physical Geography, by Mary Somerville, III. 186.
 Physical Sciences, by Mary Somerville, III. 186.
 Physician, Diary of a late, by Warren, III. 344.
 Physics and Politics, by Walter Bagehot, III. 630.
 Physiology of Common Life, by G. H. Lewes, III. 496.
 Piccadilly, by Laurence Oliphant, III. 686.
 PICKEN, ANDREW, III. 308.
 PICKEN, EBENEZER, III. 309.
 PICKTHALL, MARJORIE, III. 726.
 Pickwick Papers, by Dickens, III. 464, 467, 468, 469.
 Pictorial Bible, by John Kitto, III. 374.
 Pictorial History of England, by G. L. Craik and another, III. 291.
 Picturesque, Essay on the, by Sir U. Price, II. 655.
 Pied Piper of Hamelin, by R. Browning, III. 553.
 Pierce Penullesse, by T. Nash, I. 328, 329.
 PIERPONT, JOHN, III. 853.
 Pierre and his People, by Sir G. Parker, III. 728.
 Piers the Plowman, Vision of, I. 85-59.
 Pike County Ballads, by J. Hay, III. 825.
 Pilgrimage, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 307.
 Pilgrimage to El Medinah and Mecca, by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 609.
 Pilgrimage to Parnassus, I. 420.
 Pilgrims and the Peas, by Wolcot, II. 663.
 Pilgrims of the Night, by Faber, III. 482.
 Pilgrims of the Rhine, by Lytton, III. 332.
 Pilgrims of the Sun, by James Hogg, III. 292.
 Pilgrim's Progress, by Bunyan, I. 720, 724, 734.
 Pills to Purge Melancholy, by Tom D'Urfey, I. 782.
 Pilot, by J. Fenimore Cooper, III. 750, 751.
 PINDAR, PETER (John Wolcot), II. 662.
 Pindar, trans. by Gilbert West, II. 259; by Pye, II. 685.
 Pindaric Odes, by Gray, II. 359.
 Pindaric Odes, by Cowley, I. 643.
 PINERO, SIR ARTHUR WING, III. 605, 722.
 Pines, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 PINKERTON, JOHN, II. 637.
 Pioneers of France in the New World, by Parkman, III. 818, 819.
 Pious Editor's Creed, by Lowell, III. 803.
 PIZZI, MRS, II. 473.
 PITCAIRNE, ARCHIBALD, II. 103.
 PITSCOTTIE (R. Lindsay), I. 225.
 PITT, CHRISTOPHER, II. 259.
 PITT, WILLIAM, II. 680; Life of, by Earl Stanhope, III. 374.
 PITT, WILLIAM, EARL OF CATHAM, II. 389.
 PITTER, RUTH, III. 852.
 Pizarro, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565, 569.
 Plague, History of the, by Defoe, II. 151, 152.
 Plain Dealer, by Wycherley, II. 65, 66-68.
 Plain Speaker, by Hazlitt, III. 80, 88.
 Plain Tales from the Hills, by Kipling, III. 708.
 Plaint of Freedom, by W. J. Linton, III. 536.
 PLANCHÉ, JAMES ROBINSON, III. 577.
 Plato, by George Grote, III. 199; trans. by Jowett, III. 494.
 Playboy of the Western World, by Synge, III. 709.
 Playground of Europe, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 Play of Love, by John Heywood, I. 152.
 Play of the Weather, by J. Heywood, I. 153.
 Plays for Puritans, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 Plays on the Passions, by Joanna Baillie, II. 729.
 Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 Plea for Ragged Schools, by Thomas Guthrie, III. 842.
 Pleasant Comedy of Old Fortunatus, by Dekker, I. 422, 424.
 Pleasures of Hope, by Campbell, II. 765, 767; of Imagination, by Akenside, II. 372; of Life, by Lord Avebury, III. 664; of Memory, by S. Rogers, II. 723, 724.
 Pliny's Letters, trans. by Melmoth, II. 391.
 PLUMER, WILLIAM C. F., III. 849.
 PLUMTRE, ANNE, II. 600.
 Plurality of Worlds, by Whewell, III. 108; by Baden Powell, III. 323.
 Plutarch's Lives, trans. by Langhorne, II. 521; by Sir Thomas North, I. 259.
 POE, EDGAR ALLAN, III. 785.
 Poems by Two Brothers, III. 539, 540.
 Poems of Felicity, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Poesie, Arte of, by Puttenham, I. 266; Defence of, by Sidney, I. 289, 291; Observations on, by Campion, I. 400.
 Poet at the Breakfast Table, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791, 792.
 Poet's Portfolio, by W. W. Story, III. 784.
 Poetical Miscellanies, I. 258.
 Poetical Rhapsody, edited by Francis Davison, I. 258.
 Poetical Sketches, by W. Blake, II. 717.
 Poetry, Apologie for, by Sidney, I. 289, 291; Beginning of Christian, I. 9; English, I. 4; from Ælfred to the Conquest, I. 22; of the 10th Century (Religious), I. 22; Lyric, I. 41; Pastoral, I. 118; Renaissance of Wonder in, III. 1-10.
 Polar Star, by Letitia E. Landon, III. 182.
 Policy and Passion, by Mrs Campbell Praed, III. 732.
 Polite Conversation, by Swift, II. 125, 127, 144.
 Political Discourses, by Hume, II. 377.
 Political Economy, books on, by Adam Smith, II. 448; by Ricardo, II. 757; by Nassau Senior, III. 343; by Harriet Martineau, III. 388; by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 445.
 Political Institutions, by Herbert Spencer, III. 588.
 Political Justice, by Godwin, II. 702, 705.
 Political Litany, by William Hone, II. 759.
 Political Register, Cobbett's, II. 681.
 Political State of Great Britain, ed. by Abel Boyer, II. 387.
 Politics, by R. W. Emerson, III. 762.
 POLLARD, ALBERT FREDERICK, III. 847.
 POLLARD, ALFRED WILLIAM, III. 844.
 POLLOCK, SIR FREDERICK, III. 841.
 POLLOCK, WALTER HERRIES, III. 842.
 POLLOCK, ROBERT, II. 792.
 Polly, by Dryden, II. 174.
 Polonius, by Edward FitzGerald, III. 424.
 Polychronicon, Higden's, I. 33; trans. by John of Trevisa, I. 84.
 Polyhymnia, by George Peele, I. 323.
 Polyolbion, by Drayton, I. 341, 342.
 Pomeroy Abbey, by Mrs H. Wood, III. 520.
 POMFRET, JOHN, II. 112.
 Pontiac, by Parkman, III. 818.
 Poor Gentleman, by Colman, II. 656, 657-659.
 Poor Jack, by Dibdin, II. 708.
 Poor Mallie's Elegy, by Burns, II. 822.
 Poor Richard's Almanack, by Franklin, III. 736, 740.
 POPE, ALEXANDER, II. 4, 178; Works and Life of, by Croker, Elwin, and Courthope, III. 490.
 POPE, WALTER, II. 98.
 Popes, History of the, by A. Bower, II. 387; by Creighton, III. 687.
 Popular Delusions, by C. Mackay, III. 481.
 Popular Government, by Sir H. J. S. Maine, III. 567.
 Popular Rhymes of Scotland, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 Popular Tales of the West Highlands, by J. F. Campbell, III. 585.
 Population, by Malthus, II. 707.
 PORSON, RICHARD, II. 637.
 PORTER, ANNA MARIA, II. 772.
 PORTER, JANE, II. 772.
 PORTER, WM. S. ('O. Henry'), III. 833.
 PORTEUS, BEILBY, II. 646.
 Portugal, Traditions of, by Julia Pardoe, III. 384.
 Potiphar Papers, by G. W. Curtis, III. 784.
 POTTER, JOHN, II. 209.
 POUND, EZRA, III. 856.
 POWELL, BADEN, III. 823.
 POWELL, FREDERICK YORK, III. 842.
 PRAED, MRS CAMPBELL, III. 730, 732.
 PRAED, WINTHROP MACKWORTH, III. 379.
 Præterita, by Ruskin, III. 572, 576.
 Prairie, by Fenimore Cooper, III. 750.
 Praise of Aige, by Walter Kennedy, I. 201.
 Prayer of Columbus, by Whitman, III. 810.
 Preceptor, Dodsley's, II. 301.
 Prehistoric Times, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
 Prelude, by Wordsworth, III. 11, 13, 14.
 Preludes, by Alice Meynell, III. 704.
 Pre-Raphaelites, III. 642.
 PRESCOTT, WILLIAM HICKLING, III. 764.
 Present Position of Catholics, by J. H. Newman, III. 339.
 Press, An Essay for the, by Asgill, II. 100.
 PRICE, RICHARD, II. 428.
 PRICE, SIR UVEDALE, II. 655.
 Pricke of Conscience, by Richard Rolle, I. 49.
 Pride and Prejudice, by Jane Austen, II. 774, 776-778.
 PRIDEAUX, HUMPHREY, II. 61.
 PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON, III. 720, 849.
 PRIESTLEY, JOSEPH, II. 639.
 Primitive Culture, by Sir E. B. Tylor, III. 663.
 Primitive Marriage, by J. F. McLennan, II. 613.
 Prince Arthur, by Sir R. Blackmore, II. 107.
 Prince Consort, Life of, by Sir T. Martin, III. 478.
 Prince Deukalion, by B. Taylor, III. 822.
 Prince Otto, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Prince Rupert and the Cavaliers, Memoirs of, by Eliot Warburton, III. 274.
 Prince's Progress, by C. Rossetti, III. 646, 647.
 Princess, by Tennyson, III. 541, 545.
 Princess of Thule, by Wm. Black, III. 691.
 Principia, Newton's, II. 24.
 Principles of Biology, by Spencer, III. 587, 589; of Psychology, by Spencer, III. 586, 587, 589; of Sociology, by Spencer, III. 588.
 PRINGLE, THOMAS, II. 789; III. 733.
 PRINGLE-PATTISON, ANDREW SETH, III. 843.
 PRIOR, MATTHEW, II. 4, 5, 113.
 Prisoner of Chillon, by Byron, III. 130, 135.
 Prisoner of Zenda, by Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins, III. 708.
 Prisoners of Hope, by M. Johnston, III. 830.
 Private Papers of Henry Rycroft, by George Gissing, III. 711.
 Probationary Odes, II. 670, 671.
 Problems of Life and Mind, by G. H. Lewes, III. 496.
 PROCTER, ADELAIDE ANN, III. 528.
 PROCTER, BRYAN WALLER ('Barry Cornwall'), II. 227.
 PROCTOR, EDNA DRAN, III. 854.
 Professor, by Charlotte Brontë, III. 521.
 Professor at the Breakfast Table, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791, 792.
 Professor's Love Story, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Progress of Man, by Canning, II. 673, 674.
 Progress of Poesy, by Gray, II. 359, 364.
 Progress of Romance, by C. Reeve, II. 420.
 Prolegomena Logica, by H. L. Mansel, III. 497.
 Prolegomena to Ethics, by T. H. Green, III. 651.
 Prologue to the Satires, by Pope, II. 179, 183, 189.
 Prometheus, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 Prometheus Unbound, by Shelley, III. 109, 113.
 Promos and Cassandra, by Whetstone, I. 333.
 Prophecy, by T. Chatterton, II. 513.
 Prophecy of Famine, by Churchill, II. 495, 496.
 Prose, Beginning of English, I. 19.
 Prose Edda, trans. by Dasent, III. 409.
 Protopopos, by Spenser, I. 295.
 Prothalamion, by Spenser, I. 293, 296.
 PROTHERO, ROWLAND EDMUND (Lord Ernie), III. 843.
 PROTHERO, SIR GEORGE WALTER, III. 842.
 Proud Malsie, by Scott, III. 33, 39.
 PROUT, FATHER (F. S. Mahony), III. 262.
 Proverbial Philosophy, by Tupper, III. 491.

- Proverbs in Porcelain, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
- Provincial Tales, by N. Hawthorne, III. 779.
- Provoked Wife, by Sir J. Vanbrugh, II. 80.
- Provost, by John Galt, III. 297, 298, 299.
- Prue and I, by G. W. Curtis, III. 784.
- PRYNNE, WILLIAM, I. 584.
- Psalm of Life, by H. W. Longfellow, III. 766.
- PSALMANAZAR, GEORGE, II. 387.
- Psalms, Translation of the, Rous's version, I. 503, 515; Zachary Boyd's version, I. 514; by Dr Arthur Johnston, I. 519; Denham, I. 641; Tate and Brady's version, II. 60.
- Pseudodoxia Epidemica, by Sir T. Browne, I. 590.
- Psyche, by Mrs Tighe, II. 509.
- Psychology, Principles of, by Wm. James, III. 831.
- Public Advertiser, II. 517.
- Puck, by Ouida, III. 690.
- Pudd'nhead Wilson, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
- Pulley, by George Herbert, I. 496.
- Pulvis et Umbra, by Stevenson, III. 702.
- Punch, III. 138, 328, 329, 400, 463, 492, 606.
- PURCHAS, SAMUEL, I. 440.
- Purgatory of Suicides, by Thomas Cooper, III. 376, 377.
- Puritan and Anglican, by Dowden, III. 687.
- Puritan Movement, I. 542.
- Purple East, by Sir Wm. Watson, III. 706.
- Purple Island, by P. Fletcher, I. 445, 446.
- Pursuits of Literature, by Mathias, II. 678.
- PURVEY, JOHN, I. 87.
- PUSEY, EDWARD BOUVERIE, III. 336.
- Put Yourself in his Place, by Charles Reade, III. 483.
- PUTTENHAM, GEORGE, I. 266.
- PYE, HENRY JAMES, II. 685.
- Q (Sir A. T. Quiller-Couch), III. 846.
- Quakers, Sect founded, I. 716.
- QUARLES, FRANCIS, I. 566.
- Quarterly Magazine, Knight's, III. 266.
- Quarterly Review, II. 660.
- Queechy, by Susan Warner, III. 795.
- Queen Anne, Age of, II. 119.
- Queen Anne, Reign of, by Earl Stanhope, III. 374; by Burton, III. 398; by M'Carthy, III. 660.
- Queen Esther, by Quarles, I. 566.
- Queen Elizabeth, by Creighton, III. 687; Court of, by Lucy Aldin, III. 178.
- Queen Mab, by Shelley, III. 107.
- Queen Mary, by Tennyson, III. 542.
- Queen Victoria, by Lytton Strachey, III. 715.
- Queens of England, by Miss Strickland, III. 281.
- Queens of Scotland, by Miss Strickland, III. 281.
- Queen's Wake, by James Hogg, III. 292, 294.
- Quentin Durward, by Scott, III. 37.
- Questions at Issue, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
- Quest of the Sangraal, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381.
- QUILLER-COUCH, SIR ARTHUR THOMAS, III. 846.
- QUIN, DAN (A. H. Lewis), III. 855.
- Quince, by Præd, III. 380.
- Quip, by George Herbert, I. 497.
- Quisante, by Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins, III. 708.
- Quizology of the British Drama, by A. Beckett, III. 400.
- Rab and his Friends, by Dr J. Brown, III. 449.
- Rabelais, trans. by Sir Thomas Urquhart, I. 824.
- RADCLIFFE, MRS, II. 594.
- RAIMOND, C. E. (Elizabeth Robins), III. 851.
- Rainbow, by Præd, III. 381.
- RALEIGH, SIR WALTER, I. 304.
- RALEIGH, SIR WALTER, III. 845.
- Ralph Roister Doister, by Udall, I. 155, 239.
- Rambler, II. 450, 461.
- RAMÉE, LOUISE DE LA (Ouida), III. 690.
- RANSAY, ALLAN, II. 312.
- RANSAY, DEAN, III. 314.
- RANDALL, JAMES RYDER, III. 854.
- RANDOLPH, THOMAS, I. 572.
- Ranolf and Amohia, by A. Domett, III. 732.
- Rape of Lucrece, by T. Heywood, I. 431, 433; by Shakespeare, I. 361, 362, 363.
- Rape of the Lock, by Pope, II. 178, 180, 181, 182, 185.
- Rapture, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
- Rare Adventures, by W. Lithgow, I. 517.
- RASHDALL, HASTINGS, III. 844.
- RASPE, RUDOLF ERICH, II. 714.
- Rasselas, by Samuel Johnson, II. 459, 462.
- RASTELL, JOHN, I. 152, 157.
- Rationalism, History of, by W. E. H. Lecky, III. 682.
- Rational Religion, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
- Rational Theology, by J. Tulloch, III. 506.
- Rattlin the Reever, by E. Howard, III. 259.
- Raven, by E. A. Poe, III. 786, 787, 788.
- Ravenscroft Hall, by J. F. Waller, III. 364.
- Ravenshoe, by H. Kingsley, III. 517, 518.
- RAY, JOHN, II. 26.
- REACH, ANGUS BETHUNE, III. 505.
- READ, THOMAS BUCHANAN, III. 853.
- READE, CHARLES, III. 482, 729.
- READE, JOHN EDMUND, III. 267.
- Ready-Money Mortiboy, by Besant and Rice, II. 650, 651.
- Realmah, by Sir A. Helps, III. 478.
- Real Presence, Doctrine of the, by Edward Bouverie Pusey, III. 337.
- Rebellion, History of the, by Lord Clarendon, I. 652.
- Rebellion, History of the Irish, by W. H. Maxwell, III. 268.
- Rebellions in Scotland, History of the, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
- Recess, by Sophia Lee, II. 653.
- Recessional, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
- Recollections of a Chaperon, II. 772.
- Records of the Western Shore, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381.
- Recreations of a Country Parson, by A. K. H. Boyd, III. 624.
- Recruiting Officer, by Farquhar, II. 90, 91.
- Red as a Rose is She, by Miss Broughton, III. 690.
- Red Badge of Courage, by Stephen Crane, III. 832.
- Redgauntlet, by Scott, III. 34.
- Red Rover, by Fenimore Cooper, III. 750.
- REEVE, CLARA, II. 420.
- REEVES, MRS HENRY, III. 850.
- REEVES, W. P., III. 729, 730.
- Reflections on the Dead-Alive, by John Banim, III. 353.
- Reflections upon Exile, by Lord Bolingbroke, II. 202, 203.
- Reformation, History of, by John Knox, I. 220; by Peter Heylyn, I. 582; by Gilbert Stuart, II. 388; by William Cobbett, II. 682.
- Reformation of the Church of England, by Bishop Burnet, II. 30.
- Reginald Dalton, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
- Reginald Hastings, by Elliot Warburton, III. 274.
- Rehearsal, by the Duke of Buckingham, I. 788.
- REID, CAPTAIN MAYNE, III. 505.
- REID, SIR THOMAS WEMYSS, III. 841.
- REIO, THOMAS, II. 386.
- Reign of Law, by J. L. Allen, III. 831.
- Rejected Addresses, by James and Horace Smith, III. 159.
- Relapse, by Sir J. Vanbrugh, II. 80.
- Religio Laici, by Dryden, I. 793, 796, 800.
- Religio Medicæ, by Sir T. Browne, I. 590, 595.
- Religion, A Study of, by Martineau, III. 392.
- Religion and Science, by J. W. Draper, III. 825.
- Religion of the Future, by J. B. Crozier, III. 727.
- Religion of the Protestants, by Chillingworth, I. 586.
- Religions of the World, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
- Religious Literature of the Middle English Period, I. 38, 49.
- Religious Moralities, I. 107.
- Religious Poetry of the 10th Century, I. 22.
- Reliques, Percy's, II. 504.
- Reliques of Irish Poetry, by Charlotte Brooke, II. 396.
- Reliquiæ Baxterianæ, I. 665.
- Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, I. 393.
- Reminiscences, by Carlyle, III. 404, 405, 407, 502.
- Reminiscences of a Highland Parish, by Norman Macleod, III. 397.
- Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character, by Dean Ramsay, III. 314.
- Remorse, by Coleridge, III. 60, 63.
- Renaissance, by W. H. Pater, III. 607; by J. A. Symonds, III. 640.
- Renaissance and Reformation Period, I. 120.
- Renascence of Wonder in Poetry, III. 1-10.
- RENNELL OF RODD, BARON, III. 844.
- Representative, newspaper, begun, III. 260.
- Representative Government, by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 444.
- Representative Men, by R. W. Emerson, III. 760, 762.
- Repressor, by Bishop Pecock, I. 91.
- Resignation, by H. W. Longfellow, III. 769, 771.
- Resolution and Independence, by Wordsworth, III. 16, 20.
- Resolves, by Owen Feltham, I. 578.
- Restoration Period, I. 729.
- Resurrection, by Cowley, I. 645.
- Retaliation, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 487.
- Retired from Business, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 328, 330.
- Retreat, by H. Vaughan, I. 682, 683.
- Return from Parnassus, I. 420.
- Return of the Native, by T. Hardy, III. 679.
- Revenge, by Edward Young, II. 260.
- Revenge, Ballad of the, by Tennyson, III. 542.
- Revenger's Tragedy, by Tourneur, I. 430.
- Reveries of a Bachelor, by D. G. Mitchell, III. 821.
- Reversionary Payments, by Price, II. 428.
- Review, edited by Defoe, II. 150.
- Revolt in the Desert, by T. E. Lawrence, III. 716.
- Revolt of Islam, by Shelley, III. 108, 113.
- Revolution, History of the, by Mackintosh, II. 642.
- Revolution in Tanner's Lane, by W. Hale White, III. 687.
- Revolution Period and After, II. 13.
- Reynard the Fox, by J. Masefield, III. 710.
- REYNOLDS, FREDERIC, II. 710.
- REYNOLDS, GEORGE NUGENT, II. 759.
- REYNOLDS, JOHN HAMILTON, III. 268.
- REYNOLDS, SIR JOSHUA, II. 542.
- Rhetoric, by Campbell, II. 427.
- Rhoda Fleming, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
- RHODES, JAMES FORD, III. 854.
- RHODES, WILLIAM BARNES, II. 710.
- Rhodora, by R. W. Emerson, III. 763.
- Rhymed Tragedy, introduced, I. 787.
- RHYMER, THOMAS THE, I. 43, 166.
- Rhymes à la Mode, by A. Lang, III. 692.
- Rhymes of Childhood, by J. W. Riley, III. 831.
- Rhythm of Life, by Alice Meynell, III. 704.
- RICARDO, DAVID, II. 757.
- RICE, JAMES, III. 650.
- Riceyman Steps, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
- RICH, BARNABE, I. 238, 333.
- Richard Cable, by Baring-Gould, III. 664.
- Richard Carvel, by W. Churchill, III. 832.
- Richard Cœur de Lion, I. 50.
- Richard Edney, by Sylvester Judd, III. 773.
- Richard II., by Shakespeare, I. 360; Richard III., I. 360.
- Richard III., History of, by Sir Thomas More, I. 121, 123.
- RICHARDS, IVOR ARMSTRONG, III. 724, 849.
- RICHARDSON, DOROTHY M., III. 720, 851.
- RICHARDSON, JOHN, III. 726, 839.
- RICHARDSON, JOSEPH, II. 670.
- RICHARDSON, SAMUEL, II. 6, 294; book on, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
- Richelieu, by G. P. R. James, III. 327; by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
- RIDDELL, HENRY SCOTT, III. 311.
- Riddle of Existence, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
- Riddle on the Letter H, by Catherine Maria Fanshawe, II. 739.
- Riddles, by Cynewulf, I. 13.
- Riders to the Sea, by Synge, III. 709.
- RIDGE, WILLIAM PETT, III. 846.
- Rienzi, by Lord Lytton, III. 332; by Mary Russell Mitford, III. 176.
- Rifle Brigade, by Sir J. Kincald, III. 223.
- Rights of Man, by Paine, II. 559, 560.
- Rights of Woman, by Mary W. Godwin, II. 706.
- RILEY, JAMES WHITCOMB, III. 831.
- Rimini, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
- Ring and the Book, by R. Browning, III. 555, 556, 559, 565.
- Ringan Gilhaize, by John Galt, III. 297.
- RIPLEY, GEORGE, III. 763.
- Rise and Progress of Religion, by Doddridge, II. 332.
- RITA (Mrs Desmond Humphreys), III. 850.
- RITCHIE, LADY, III. 689.
- RITCHIE, LEITCH, III. 827.
- RITSON, JOSEPH, II. 637.
- Ritter Bann, by Campbell, II. 766.
- Rival Queens, or Alexander the Great, by N. Lee, II. 88.
- Rivals, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565.
- Road to Ruin, by T. Holcroft, II. 570.
- Roaring Girl, by Dekker and Middleton, I. 428, 458.

- Rob Roy, by Scott, III. 84, 43.
 Robene and Makyn, by Henryson, I. 189.
 Robert Elsmere, by Mrs Humphry Ward, III. 704.
 Robert Falconer, by George Macdonald, III. 606.
 Robert Macaire, by Henley and Henderson, III. 695, 699.
 ROBERTS, SIR CHARLES GEORGE DOUGLAS, III. 726, 728.
 ROBERTS, LORD, III. 840.
 ROBERTS, MORLEY, III. 844.
 ROBERTSON, ALEXANDER, II. 309.
 ROBERTSON, FREDERICK WILLIAM, III. 493; Life of, by Stopford A. Brooke, III. 662.
 ROBERTSON, JOHN MACKINNON, III. 843.
 ROBERTSON, THOMAS WILLIAM, III. 637.
 ROBERTSON, WILLIAM, III. 382.
 Robin Hood and the Curtal Friar, I. 581.
 ROBINS, ELIZABETH, III. 851.
 ROBINSON, EDWIN A., III. 835.
 ROBINSON, HENRY CRABB, III. 168.
 ROBINSON, MARY (Mine. Duclaux), III. 704.
 ROBINSON, PHILIP STEWART, III. 842.
 Robinson Crusoe, by Defoe, II. 6, 150, 156-158.
 ROCHE, MAZO DE LA, III. 852.
 ROCHESTER, THE EARL OF (John Wilmot), I. 779.
 Rock of Ages, by A. M. Toplady, II. 456.
 Rocks Ahead, by W. R. Greg, III. 400.
 RODD, BARON RENNELL OF, III. 844.
 Roderick, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 61.
 Roderick Random, by Smollett, II. 442, 443, 445.
 Rodney Stone, by Sir A. C. Doyle, III. 707.
 ROE, EDWARD PAYSON, III. 825.
 ROGER DE HOVEDEN, I. 33.
 ROGER DE WENDOVER, I. 33.
 ROGERS, HENRY, III. 374.
 ROGERS, SAMUEL, II. 723; Recollections of, by Alexander Dyce, III. 324.
 Rokeby, by Scott, III. 38.
 ROLLE, RICHARD, OF HAMPOLE, I. 49.
 Rolliad, II. 669-672.
 ROLLOCK, ROBERT, I. 230.
 Roman, by S. T. Dobell, III. 603.
 Romance of the Forest, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594.
 Romance of the Nineteenth Century, by Mallock, III. 703.
 Romance of War, by James Grant, III. 578.
 Romances, Later, I. 60; Alliterative, I. 51; Metrical, I. 51.
 Roman de Rou, by Wace, I. 34.
 ROMANES, GEORGE JOHN, III. 842.
 Roman History, by Sir G. C. Lewis, III. 206; by Charles Merivale, III. 207.
 Roman Literature, History of, by J. C. Dunlop, III. 219.
 Roman Poets of the Republic, by W. Y. Sellar, III. 634.
 Roman Republic, by Ferguson, II. 430.
 Roman Republic, Fall of the, by C. Merivale, III. 207.
 Romantic, On the Epithet, by J. Foster, II. 738.
 Romantic Revival, III. 1.
 Romany Rye, by G. H. Borrow, III. 432, 434.
 Ronaunt of the Rose, I. 61.
 Rome, History of, by Dr T. Arnold, III. 202.
 Romeo and Juliet, by Shakespeare, I. 358.
 Romeus and Juliet, by A. Broke, I. 263.
 Romola, by George Eliot, III. 530, 531.
 Ronald and Dorna, by Aaron Hill, II. 198.
 Rondel of Lufe, by Alexander Scott, I. 232.
 Rookwood, by W. H. Ainsworth, III. 377.
 Room of One's Own, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 ROOSEVELT, THEODORE, III. 855.
 Roots of the Mountains, by William Morris, III. 666, 667.
 ROPER, RICHARD, I. 125.
 Rory O'More, by Samuel Lover, III. 355.
 ROS, SIR RICHARD, I. 81.
 Rosalind and Helen, by Shelley, III. 108.
 Rosalynde, by T. Lodge, I. 316, 317.
 Rosamund, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 Rosciad, by Churchill, III. 495.
 ROSCOE, WILLIAM, II. 639.
 ROSCOE, WILLIAM CALDWELL, III. 625.
 ROSCOMMON, EARL OF, I. 777.
 ROSE, JOHN HOLLAND, III. 843.
 ROSE, WILLIAM STEWART, II. 760.
 Rose Aymmer, by W. S. Lander, III. 142.
 ROSEBURY, EARL OF, III. 842.
 ROSS, ALEXANDER, II. 317.
 ROSS, MARTIN (Violet Martin), III. 851.
 ROSETTI, CHRISTINA, III. 646.
 ROSETTI, DANTE GABRIEL, III. 10, 641.
 ROSETTI, WILLIAM MICHAEL, III. 839.
 ROVZSEFF, MICHAEL I., III. 855.
 ROUS, FRANCIS, I. 503.
 Rousseau, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Rovers, by Canning, II. 673, 675, 676.
 Rover's Song, by Eliza Cook, III. 528.
 ROW, JOHN, I. 514.
 ROWE, NICHOLAS, II. 93.
 Rowfant Rhymes, by F. Locker-Lampson, III. 600.
 ROWLEY, THOMAS (Chatterton), II. 512.
 ROWLEY, WILLIAM, I. 478.
 Royal Society, I. 685, 726, 733.
 Royston Gower, by Thomas Miller, III. 377.
 Roy's Wife, by Mrs Grant, II. 596.
 Rudder Grange, by F. R. Stockton, III. 824.
 RUDDIMAN, THOMAS, II. 305.
 Ruined Burg, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 Ruins of Nineveh, by Sir A. H. Layard, III. 498.
 Rule Britannia, by J. Thomson (?), II. 321, 329.
 Rumours from an Æolian Harp, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 798.
 Rump, by J. Tatham, I. 787.
 Runnamed, by John Logan, II. 529, 532.
 Rupert of Hentzau, by Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins, III. 708.
 Rural England, by Sir R. Haggard, III. 703.
 Rural Life in England, by Howitt, III. 283.
 Rural Rides, by Cobbett, II. 682-685.
 Rural Sketches, by Thomas Miller, III. 377.
 RUSKIN, G. W., III. 730.
 RUSKIN, JOHN, III. 568.
 RUSSELL, EARL, III. 318.
 RUSSELL, BERTRAND, 3RD EARL, III. 847.
 RUSSELL, ELIZABETH MARY, COUNTESS, III. 852.
 RUSSELL, GEORGE W., III. 710.
 RUSSELL, IRWIN, III. 854.
 RUSSELL, LADY RACHEL, II. 58.
 RUSSELL, SIR WILLIAM HOWARD, III. 578.
 RUSSELL, WILLIAM, II. 388.
 RUSSELL, WILLIAM CLARK, III. 691.
 Ruth, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527; by Thomas Hood, III. 140.
 RUTHERFORD, MARK (W. H. White), III. 687.
 RUTHERFORD, SAMUEL, I. 820.
 Ruthwell Cross, I. 10, 163, 169.
 RYCAUT, SIR PAUL, I. 273.
 RYMER, THOMAS, I. 751.
 Sabbath, by J. Grahame, II. 689, 690.
 Sack of Baltimore, by T. O. Davis, III. 365.
 SACKVILLE, CHARLES (Earl of Dorset), I. 781.
 SACKVILLE, THOMAS (Earl of Dorset), I. 237, 245.
 SACKVILLE-WEST, HON. VICTORIA MARY, III. 852.
 Sacred and Legendary Art, by Anna Jameson, III. 183.
 Sacred Latin Poetry, by Trench, III. 393.
 Sacred Theory of the Earth, by Thomas Burnet, II. 28.
 Sad Fortunes of Amos Barton, by George Eliot, III. 529, 632.
 Saga of Burnt Njal, by Dasent, III. 499.
 Sailors and Saints, by Glascock, III. 259.
 St Albans, Book of, by Dame Juliana Berners, I. 99.
 St Augustine's Holiday, by W. Alexander, III. 584.
 St Giles and St James, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 329, 330.
 St Ives, by Stevenson, III. 699.
 Saint Joan, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 St John, C. G. W., III. 839.
 St John, HENRY. See BOLINGBROKE.
 St Kilda, Voyage to, by M. Martin, II. 303.
 St Leon, by William Godwin, II. 702, 704.
 Saint Mary Magdalene, by Crashaw, I. 678.
 St Patrick, Legends of, by Aubrey de Vere, III. 581.
 St Paul and Protestantism, by M. Arnold, III. 594.
 St Paul's Cathedral, by Milman, III. 209.
 St Peter's Complaint, by Southwell, I. 337.
 St Ronan's Well, by Scott, III. 46.
 SAINTSBURY, GEORGE E. B., III. 693.
 Saints' Everlasting Rest, by Baxter, I. 664.
 St Stephen's, by Lord Lytton, III. 333, 336.
 SALA, GEORGE AUGUSTUS HENRY, III. 624.
 Salathiel, by George Croly, III. 171.
 SALE, GEORGE, II. 388.
 Salem Chapel, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 537, 538.
 SALISBURY, JOHN OF, I. 84.
 Sally in our Alley, by Henry Carey, II. 331.
 Salmagundi, III. 743, 745.
 Salmoria, by Sir H. Davy, II. 761, 762.
 Salutation, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Samor, by Milman, III. 208, 212.
 Sam Slick, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 Samson Agonistes, by Milton, I. 690.
 SANDBURG, CARL, III. 856.
 SANDERSON, ROBERT, I. 562.
 Sandford and Merton, by T. Day, II. 738; Modern, by Burnand, III. 604.
 Sandra Belloni, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Sandy Foundation Shaken, by Penn, II. 51.
 SANDYS, GEORGE, I. 450.
 SANGER, CHARLES, III. 726.
 SANTAYANA, GEORGE, III. 835.
 Sapho and Phao, by Lyly, I. 274, 315.
 Sappho's Song, by L. E. Landon, III. 181.
 Saracen, Land of the, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Saracens, by S. Ockley, II. 211.
 Saracinesca, by F. M. Crawford, III. 832.
 Satch Harker, by Masefield, III. 710.
 Sartor Resartus, by Carlyle, III. 403, 405, 406, 408.
 SASSON, SIEGFRIED L., III. 848.
 Satan, by George Croly, III. 172; by Robert Montgomery, III. 238.
 Satan Absolved, by W. S. Blunt, III. 691.
 Satire and Satirists, by J. Hannay, III. 632.
 Satires of Pope, III. 183; of Dryden, I. 793, 797-799.
 Satirist, Hall claims to be the First, I. 417.
 Satiromastix, by Dekker, I. 423.
 Saturn and Thea, by Keats, III. 103.
 Satyr against Mankind, by the Earl of Rochester, I. 780.
 Satyre of the Thrie Estaitis, by Lyndsay, I. 204, 207.
 Saul, by Byron, III. 135.
 SAUNDERS, MISS M. M., III. 726.
 SAVAGE, RICHARD, II. 282; Life of, by Johnson, II. 457.
 SAVILE, GEORGE. See HALIFAX, MARQUIS OF, I. 755.
 Savonarola, by Alfred Austin, III. 681.
 SAXBY, COLONEL EDWARD, I. 622.
 SAXE, JOHN GODFREY, III. 853.
 Saxon Saints, Legends of the, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 SAYCE, ARCHIBALD HENRY, III. 842.
 SAYERS, DOROTHY, III. 721, 852.
 Sayings and Doings, by Theodore E. Hook, III. 164.
 Say not the struggle, by Clough, III. 513.
 Scaliger, by Mark Pattison, III. 480.
 Scalp Hunters, by T. Mayne Reid, III. 506.
 Scaramouch in Naxos, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Scarlet Letter, by Hawthorne, III. 770, 780, 781, 783.
 Scenes and Legends in the North of Scotland, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 Scenes of Infancy, by John Leyden, II. 691.
 Scenes from Clerical Life, by George Eliot, III. 529.
 Schiller, by Carlyle, III. 402.
 Schloss Hainfeld, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
 Scholemaster, by Roger Ascham, I. 144, 146.
 School, by T. W. Robertson, III. 637.
 School-Days, In, by Whittier, III. 777.
 School for Scandal, by Sheridan, III. 564, 565, 567.
 Schoolmistress, by Shenstone, II. 353, 354.
 School of Abuse, by Stephen Gosson, I. 286.
 School of Compliment, by Shirley, I. 484.
 Short Poeme of Tyme, by James I., I. 505.
 SCHREINER, MRS CRONWRIGHT, III. 733.
 SCHURMAN, JACOB GOULD, III. 854.
 Scientific Memoirs, by T. H. Huxley, III. 619, 620.
 Scientific Spirit of the Age, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 637.
 Scinde, Conquest of, by Napier, III. 220.
 SCORESBY, WILLIAM, III. 266.
 SCOT, REGINALD, I. 333.
 Scot Abroad, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
 Scotchironcon, by John Fordun, I. 182.
 Scotland; Church of, by Spottiswoode, I. 512; by Calderwood, I. 514; by Row, I. 514.
 Scotland, History of, by Boece, I. 212; by Leslie, I. 227; by Keith, II. 305; by Robertson, II. 382; by W. Tytler, II. 388; by Lord Hailes, II. 456; by Laing, II. 637; by Pinkerton, II. 637; by Fraser Tytler, III. 200; by Cosmo Innes, III. 291; by Burton, III. 398; by Lang, III. 692.
 Scotland's Skathi, by H. Macneill, II. 802.
 Scotland Yet, by H. S. Riddell, III. 311.
 Scots, Cleveland's Satire on the, I. 636.
 Scots Figgaries, by J. Tatham, I. 787.
 Scots New Testament, I. 212.
 Scots Worthies, by John Howie, II. 640.
 SCOTT, ALEXANDER, I. 231.

- SCOTT, DUNCAN C., III. 729.
 SCOTT, HUGH STOWELL, III. 845.
 SCOTT, JOHN, II. 456.
 SCOTT, LADY JOHN, III. 850.
 SCOTT, MICHAEL, III. 254.
 SCOTT, SIR WALTER, III. 7, 8, 30; Life of, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250, 251-253; book on, by Saintsbury, III. 693.
 SCOTT, WILLIAM BELL, III. 490.
 Scottish Ballads, John Pinkerton's, II. 637.
 Scottish Chiefs, by Jane Porter, II. 773.
 Scottish Fifteenth-Century Prose, I. 188.
 Scottish Life and Character, by Dean Ramsay, III. 314.
 Scottish Literature, I. 163, 817; from James VI. to the Civil War, I. 504; Scottish Vernacular Revival, II. 307; Scottish Vernacular Writers under George III., II. 795.
 Scottish Philosophy, by M'Cosh, III. 397.
 Scottish Poems, coll. by Pinkerton, II. 637.
 Scottish Poets, Early Minor, I. 208.
 Scottish Prose Writers, Lesser Sixteenth-Century, I. 230.
 Scottish Rivers, by Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 Scottish Songs, Herd's Collection of, II. 797.
 Scottyshe Kyngye, by Skelton, I. 115.
 Scribner's Club, II. 183.
 Scribner's Monthly, III. 778.
 SCULLY, W. C., III. 733.
 Sea-divided Gael, by T. D. M'Gee, III. 580.
 Seafarer, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 Sea-Limits, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 645.
 SEAMAN, SIR OWEN, III. 845.
 Seaman's Secrets, by John Davis, I. 390.
 Sea Nymphs, by Thomas Miller, III. 377.
 Sea Power, by A. T. Mahan, III. 827.
 SEARCH, EDWARD (Tucker), II. 338.
 Search after Happiness, by Hannah More, II. 577.
 Season, by Alfred Austin, III. 681.
 Seasons, by Thomson, II. 321, 323-26; III. 5.
 Sea-spray and Smoke-drift, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
 Seat of Authority, by J. Martineau, III. 392, 393.
 Seats of the Mighty, by Sir G. Parker, III. 728.
 SECOMBE, THOMAS, III. 846.
 Secret of Narcisse, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 SEDGWICK, ADAM, III. 202.
 SEDGWICK, ANNE DOUGLAS, III. 855.
 SEDLEY, SIR CHARLES, I. 778.
 SEGER, ALAN, III. 856.
 SEELEY, SIR JOHN ROBERT, III. 649.
 Sejanus, by Ben Jonson, I. 402.
 SELDEN, JOHN, I. 546.
 Select Charters, by William Stubbs, III. 629.
 Self-control, by Mary Brunton, II. 772.
 Self-Culture, by J. S. Blackie, III. 490.
 Self-Help, by Samuel Smiles, III. 475.
 Self-Reliance, by R. W. Emerson, III. 761.
 SELLAR, WILLIAM YOUNG, III. 634.
 Semites, Religion of, by Robertson Smith, III. 687.
 SEMPILL, FRANCIS, I. 819.
 SEMPILL, ROBERT, I. 232.
 SEMPILL, ROBERT, I. 818.
 SEMPILL, SIR JAMES, I. 818.
 Seneca, trans. by L'Estrange, I. 742.
 SENIOR, NASSAU WILLIAM, III. 343.
 Sense and Sensibility, by Jane Austen, II. 774, 779.
 Senses and Instincts, by Avebury, III. 664.
 Senses and the Intellect, by Bain, III. 497.
 Sensitive Plant, by Shelley, III. 112.
 Sentimental Journey, by Sterne, II. 402, 404, 409.
 Sentimental Tommy, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Sepoy War, by Kaye, III. 482.
 SERGEANT, E. F. ADELIN, III. 850.
 SERVICE, ROBERT, III. 728.
 Sesame and Lilies, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 Seth's Brother's Wife, by H. Frederic, III. 832.
 SETON-THOMPSON, ERNEST, III. 846.
 SETTLE, ELKANAH, II. 71.
 Seven Lamps of Architecture, by Ruskin, III. 568, 569, 572, 573.
 Seven Pillars of Wisdom, by T. E. Lawrence, III. 716.
 Seven Sages, I. 51.
 SEWALL, SAMUEL, III. 735.
 SEWARD, ANNA, II. 576.
 Sexton's Daughter, by J. Sterling, III. 271.
 Shadows of Shasta, by Joaquin Miller, III. 828.
 SHADWELL, THOMAS, I. 729; II. 68; Satire on, by Dryden, I. 793, 799.
 SHAFTESBURY, EARL OF, 187.
 SHAFRIP, JOHN CAMPBELL, III. 839.
 Shakespear, Comments on the Commentators of, by H. J. Pye, II. 686.
 SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM, I. 355; Portraits of, I. 376; ed. by Johnson, II. 459, 460; Beauties of, by Dr Dodd, II. 456; Essay on, by Farmer, II. 629; Illustrations of, by Francis Douce, II. 713; Lectures and Notes on, by Coleridge, III. 60, 69; Characters of, by Hazlitt, III. 80; his Mind and Art, by Prof. Dowden, III. 687; Life of, by Sir Sidney Lee, III. 707; Variorum edition, by Furness, III. 825.
 Shakespeare and his Forerunners, by Sidney Lanier, III. 828.
 Shakespeare's Predecessors, by J. A. Symonds, III. 640.
 Shakespeare to Pope, From, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Shakesperian Forgeries, Ireland's, II. 711.
 Shamus O'Brien, by J. S. Le Fanu, III. 365.
 Shandon Bells, by Mahony, III. 254; by William Black, III. 691.
 Shan Van Vocht, III. 679.
 SHAPCOTT, REUBEN (W. Hale White), III. 687.
 SHARP, RICHARD, II. 713.
 SHARP, WILLIAM, III. 705.
 Shaughraun, by Dion Boucicault, III. 585.
 SHAW, GEORGE BERNARD, III. 705, 722.
 SHAW, HENRY WHEELER, III. 853.
 She, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 708.
 SHEFFIELD, JOHN, II. 108.
 SHEIL, RICHARD LALOR, III. 351.
 She is far from the Land, by Moore, III. 348.
 SHELLEY, MARY W., III. 519.
 SHELLEY, PERCY BYSSHE, III. 9, 107; Early Life, by MacCarthy, III. 583; Life, by Dowden, III. 687.
 SHENSTONE, WILLIAM, II. 353.
 Shepherds' Hunting, by Wither, I. 499.
 Shepherd's Calendar, by Spenser, I. 293, 298.
 Shepherd's Play, in Wakefield Plays, I. 108.
 Shepherd's Song, by Joanna Baillie, II. 731.
 Shepherd's Week, by Gay, II. 172, 174.
 SHERIDAN, RICHARD BRINSLEY, II. 563.
 SHERLOCK, THOMAS, II. 42.
 SHERLOCK, WILLIAM, II. 40.
 Sherlock Holmes, by Sir A. C. Doyle, III. 707.
 SHERRIFF, ROBERT CEDRIC, III. 840.
 SHERWOOD, MARY MARTHA, III. 324.
 She Stoops to Conquer, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 483-490.
 She would and she would not, by Colley Cibber, II. 272, 273.
 Ship of Fools, by Alexander Barclay, I. 116.
 Ship's Adventure, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 Shipwreck, by William Falconer, II. 498.
 SHIRLEY, JAMES, I. 484, 729.
 Shirley, by C. Brontë, III. 523, 524, 525.
 Shoemaker's Holiday, by Dekker, I. 422.
 SHORTER, CLEMENT KING, III. 844.
 SHORTER, MRS CLEMENT, III. 851.
 Shortest Way with Dissenters, by Defoe, II. 149.
 SHORTHOUSE, JOSEPH HENRY, III. 637.
 Short Studies, by Froude, III. 502, 504.
 Shropshire Lad, by A. E. Housman, III. 713, 722.
 Sibylline Leaves, by Coleridge, III. 61.
 Sicilian Romance, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594, 595.
 Sicilian Summer, by Sir H. Taylor, III. 325.
 Sicily, by E. A. Freeman, III. 626, 627.
 Sick Stock-rider, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
 Siddons, Life of Mrs, by Campbell, III. 766.
 Side-Walk Studies, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
 SIDGWICK, ETHEL, III. 851.
 SIDGWICK, HENRY, III. 841.
 SIDNEY, ALGERNON, I. 715.
 SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP, I. 287.
 Sidney Biddulph, by Mrs Sheridan, II. 563.
 Siege of Corinth, by Byron, III. 122.
 SIGERSON, DORA (Mrs Shorter), III. 851.
 Sight and Song, by Fiona Macleod, III. 704.
 SIGOURNEY, LYDIA HUNTLEY, III. 757.
 Sigurd the Volsung, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Silas Lapham, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 Silas Marner, by George Eliot, III. 580, 534.
 Silence: A Fable, by E. A. Poe, III. 789.
 Sillex Scintillans, by H. Vaughan, I. 682, 683, 684.
 SILL, EDWARD R., III. 633.
 Siller Gun, by John Mayne, II. 810, 811.
 Siliurian System, by Murchison, III. 287.
 Silver Box, by J. Galsworthy, III. 712.
 SIMON OF DURHAM, I. 83.
 SIMMS, WILLIAM GILMORE, III. 752.
 Simonides, by W. S. Lander, III. 141.
 Simplon Pass, by Wordsworth, III. 19.
 SIMS, GEORGE ROBERT, III. 694.
 Sinai and Palestine, by Dean Stanley, III. 394, 395.
 SINCLAIR, MAY, III. 852.
 SINCLAIR, UPTON, III. 856.
 Sin-Eater, by Fiona Macleod, III. 708.
 Sir Aldingar, I. 523, 533.
 Sir Andrew Wylie, by J. Galt, III. 297, 298.
 Sir Beville, by R. S. Hawker, III. 382.
 Sir Charles Grandison, by Richardson, II. 295, 299.
 Sir Courty Nice, by John Crowne, II. 89.
 Sir Gawane and the Grene Knight, I. 51, 52, 172.
 Sir Lancelot Greaves, by Smollett, II. 442, 444.
 Sir Patrick Spens, I. 532.
 Sir Percival, by J. H. Shorthouse, III. 638.
 Sir Richard Calmady, by Mrs Harrison, III. 705.
 Sir Tristrem, I. 43.
 Sir Turlough, by Carleton, III. 352.
 Sister, by Charlotte Lennox, II. 417.
 Sister Helen, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 643.
 SITWELL, EDITH, III. 723, 852.
 SITWELL, OSBERT, III. 849.
 SITWELL, SACHEVEREL, III. 849.
 SKEAT, WALTER WILLIAM, III. 840.
 SKELTON, JOHN, I. 113.
 SKELTON, SIR JOHN, III. 634.
 SKENE, GILBERT, I. 231.
 SKENE, JOHN, I. 231.
 SKENE, WILLIAM FORBES, III. 399.
 Sketch Book, by Washington Irving, III. 745, 746, 748.
 Sketches by Boz, by Dickens, III. 464, 467.
 Sketches of Irish Character, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280, 281.
 SKINNER, JOHN, II. 318.
 Skipper Ireson's Ride, by Whittier, III. 775.
 SKIPSEY, JOSEPH, III. 608.
 SKIRVING, ADAM, II. 810.
 Skylark, by James Hogg, III. 296; by Shelley, III. 110.
 Sky Pilot, by Ralph Connor, III. 728.
 Slang, Dictionary of, by Henley, III. 695.
 Sleeper Wakes, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
 Sleeping Child, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Slingsby Papers, by N. P. Willis, III. 749.
 SLOANE, WILLIAM MILLIGAN, III. 854.
 Small House at Allington, by Trollope, III. 487.
 SMART, CHRISTOPHER, II. 423.
 Smectymnus, I. 586; Apology for, by Milton, I. 668.
 SMEDLEY, FRANCIS EDWARD, III. 492.
 SMILES, SAMUEL, III. 475.
 SMITH, ADAM, II. 448.
 SMITH, ALBERT, III. 492.
 SMITH, ALEXANDER, III. 604.
 SMITH, CHARLOTTE, II. 593.
 SMITH, DODIE, III. 852.
 SMITH, EDMUND, II. 196.
 SMITH, FRANCIS HOPKINSON, III. 854.
 SMITH, GEORGE GEORGEY, III. 846.
 SMITH, GOLDWIN, III. 726, 727.
 SMITH, HENRY, I. 283.
 SMITH, JAMES AND HORACE, III. 159.
 SMITH, MRS BURNETT, III. 851.
 SMITH, MRS TOULMIN, III. 850.
 SMITH, SARAH (Hesba Stretton), III. 850.
 SMITH, SIR WILLIAM, III. 479.
 SMITH, SYDNEY, III. 155.
 SMITH, WALTER CHALMERS, III. 607.
 SMITH, WILLIAM, I. 278.
 SMITH, WILLIAM ROBERTSON, III. 687.
 SMOLLETT, TOBIAS GEORGE, II. 8, 442.
 SMUTS, JAN C., III. 733, 847.
 Snake in the Grass, by P. Egan, III. 265.
 Snarleyvow, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Snob Papers, by Thackeray, III. 455.
 Snow-Bound, by Whittier, III. 774, 775, 777.
 Snow Image, by Hawthorne, III. 779, 780.
 Social Morality, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
 Social Statics, by H. Spencer, III. 586.
 Society and Solitude, by Emerson, III. 760.
 Society in America, by H. Martineau, III. 388.
 Sour Louise, by C. Rossetti, III. 648.
 Soggarth Aroon, by John Banim, III. 354.
 Sohrab and Rustum, by M. Arnold, III. 591, 592, 596.
 Soldier's Daughter, by A. Cherry, II. 758.
 Soldier's Tear, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Soldiers Three, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
 Solitary Reaper, by Wordsworth, III. 21.
 Solitude, by Grainger, II. 376.
 Solomon, by Prior, II. 114, 116.
 SOMERVILLE, EDITH CE., III. 851.
 SOMERVILLE, MARY, III. 185.
 SOMERVILLE, WILLIAM, II. 300.
 Song of Dermot and the Earl, I. 34.
 Song of the Glass, by J. F. Waller, III. 364.
 Song of the Indian Maid, by Keats, III. 102.
 Song of the Shirt, by Hood, III. 133, 139.
 Song of the Universal, by Whitman, III. 611.
 Song of the Western Men, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381, 382.

- Songs before Sunrise, by Swinburne, III. 671.
 Songs from Vagabondia, by W. B. Carman and Richard Moeve, III. 728, 833.
 Songs of Experience, by William Blake, II. 717, 720; of Innocence, II. 717, 719.
 Songs of Israel, by William Knox, II. 782.
 Songs of Labour, by Whittier, III. 775.
 Songs of Scotland prior to Burns, by R. Chambers, III. 316.
 Songs of the Sierras, by J. Miller, III. 828.
 Song-Writers, Elizabethan, I. 273.
 Sonnet-Cycles, Elizabethan, I. 286.
 Sonnet Introduced, I. 159.
 Sonnets from the Portuguese, by E. B. Browning, III. 553, 557, 561.
 Sonnets of Shakespeare, I. 362.
 Sons and Lovers, by D. H. Lawrence, III. 716.
 Sophocles, trans. by Edward FitzGerald, III. 425; by Lewis Campbell, III. 661.
 Sophonisba, by James Thomson, I. 320.
 Sophy, by Sir J. Denham, I. 641.
 Sordello, by R. Browning, III. 552, 553, 558.
 Sorley, Charles H., III. 849.
 Sorrows of Gentility, by Jewsbury, III. 520.
 Sospetto d'Herode, trans. by Crashaw, I. 677.
 SOTHEBY, WILLIAM, II. 713.
 Soul, by Francis William Newman, III. 342.
 SOUTH, ROBERT, I. 760.
 South Africa, by Pringle, II. 789, 790; by Lady Anne Barnard, II. 804; by Bryce, III. 686; by Theal, III. 733.
 South Africa, English Literature in, III. 733.
 South America, Wanderings in, by Charles Waterton, III. 173.
 South Sea Bubbles, by G. H. Kingsley, III. 517.
 SOUTHERNE, THOMAS, II. 75.
 SOUTHEY, MRS, III. 55.
 SOUTHEY, ROBERT, III. 47; book on, by Dowden, III. 680.
 SOUTHWELL, ROBERT, I. 337.
 Space, Time, and Deity, by Alexander, III. 718, 844.
 Spain, Handbook for Travellers in, by Ford, III. 322.
 Spanish Ballads, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 Spanish Farm, by R. H. Mottram, III. 720, 848.
 Spanish Friar, by Dryden, I. 792, 807.
 Spanish Gypsy, by George Eliot, III. 630.
 Spanish Influence on English Literature, I. 236.
 Spanish Literature, by G. Ticknor, III. 749.
 Spanish Military Nun, by De Quincey, III. 93, 94, 96.
 Spanish Student, by Longfellow, III. 769.
 Spanish Tragedy, by Thomas Kyd, I. 319.
 Spasmodic School, III. 475, 603, 604.
 Specimen Days, by Walt Whitman, III. 807, 809.
 Spectator, II. 3, 121, 213, 215; extracts by Addison, II. 219, 221-226; commenced, II. 232; extracts by Steele, II. 234, 237-239; by Budgell, II. 243.
 Spectre Boat, by Campbell, II. 766.
 SPEDDING, JAMES, III. 397.
 Speechcraft, English, by Barnes, III. 412.
 SPEED, JOHN, I. 271.
 Speed the Plough, by Morton, II. 709.
 SPEKE, JOHN STANNING, III. 610.
 SPELMAN, SIR HENRY, I. 271.
 SPENCE, JOSEPH, II. 338.
 SPENCER, HERBERT, III. 586.
 SPENCER, WILLIAM ROBERT, II. 740.
 SPENDER, STEPHEN H., III. 724, 849.
 SPENSER, EDMUND, I. 237, 293.
 Spinoza, by John Caird, III. 625; by Martineau, III. 392; by Pollock, III. 715.
 Spinoza's Ethic, tr. by W. H. White, III. 687.
 Spirit of Patriotism, by Lord Bolingbroke, II. 202, 205.
 Spirit of Place, by Alice Meynell, III. 705.
 Spirit of the Age, by Hazlitt, III. 80.
 Spirit of the Nation, III. 864, 579.
 Spiritual Quixote, by Graves, II. 376.
 Spiritual Wives, by W. H. Dixon, III. 578.
 Spleen, by Matthew Green, II. 288.
 Splendid Shilling, by John Phillips, II. 241.
 SPOFFORD, HARRIET F., III. 854.
 SPOTTISWOODE, JOHN, I. 512.
 SPRAT, DR THOMAS, II. 56.
 Sprig of Shillelagh, II. 759.
 Spring, Ode to, by Mrs Barbauld, II. 582.
 SPURGEON, CAROLINE F. S., III. 851.
 SPURGEON, CHARLES HADDOX, III. 648.
 Spy, by J. Fenimore Cooper, III. 760.
 Squatter's Dream, by Browne, III. 732.
 SQUIRE, SIR JOHN COLLINGS, III. 848.
 Squire Maurice, by Alex. Smith, III. 605.
 Squire of Alsatia, by Shadwell, II. 69.
 Squire's Pew, by Jane Taylor, III. 175.
 Stand Fast, Craig Royston, by W. Black, III. 691.
 STANHOPE, EARL, III. 374.
 STANHOPE, PHILIP DORMER, II. 291.
 STANLEY, ARTHUR PENRYN, III. 394.
 STANLEY, SIR HENRY MORTON, III. 841.
 STANLEY, THOMAS, I. 746.
 STANNARD, MRS ARTHUR, III. 851.
 STANYHURST, RICHARD, I. 332.
 Stanzas Irregulars, by C. Cotton, I. 776.
 Starling, by Norman Macleod, III. 896.
 Star of Bethlehem, by H. K. White, II. 729.
 Statesman, by Sir Henry Taylor, III. 325.
 STEDMAN, EDMUND CLARENCE, III. 824.
 STEEL, MRS FLORA ANNIE, III. 850.
 STEELE, SIR RICHARD, II. 3, 228; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Steele Glas, by Gascoigne, I. 247.
 STEEVENS, GEORGE, II. 549.
 STEIN, GERTRUDE, III. 720, 855.
 Stein, Life of, by Seeley, III. 649.
 Stella and Vanessa, II. 123, 124; Swift's Journal to Stella, II. 127, 143.
 STEPHEN, SIR LESLIE, III. 662.
 Stephen, Life of Sir James Fitzjames, by Sir L. Stephen, III. 662.
 STEPHENS, JAMES, III. 848.
 STEPHENS, J. BRUNTON, III. 729, 732.
 STEPHEN, GEORGE, II. 112.
 Steps to the Temple, by Crashaw, I. 677.
 STERLING, JOHN, III. 270; Life of, by Carlyle, III. 271, 404.
 STERN, GLADYS BRONWYN, III. 852.
 STERN, LAURENCE, II. 8, 401.
 STERNHOLD, THOMAS, I. 150.
 STEVENS, GEORGE ALEXANDER, II. 708.
 STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS, III. 697; ed. by Sir Sidney Colvin, III. 693.
 STEWART, DUGALD, II. 535.
 STILLINGFLEET, EDWARD, II. 39.
 STIRLING, EARL OF, I. 509.
 STIRLING, JAMES HUTCHISON, III. 661.
 STIRLING-MAXWELL, SIR W., III. 499.
 STOCKTON, FRANCIS RICHARD, III. 824.
 STODDARD, RICHARD HENRY, III. 823.
 Stokers and Pokers, by Sir F. Bond Head, III. 266, 267.
 Stones of Venice, by Ruskin, III. 569, 572, 573.
 STORER, THOMAS, I. 399.
 STORY, WILLIAM WYTHEM, III. 784.
 Story (W. W.) and his Friends, by Henry James, III. 830.
 Story of my Heart, by R. Jefferies, III. 640.
 STOW, JOHN, I. 256.
 STOWE, HARRIET BECHER, III. 812.
 STRACHEY, GILES LYTTON, III. 715, 719.
 Strains of the Mountain Muse, by Joseph Train, III. 291.
 Strangers Yet, by Lord Houghton, III. 382.
 Strange Story, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Strathmore, by Ouida, III. 690.
 STRICKTON, HESBA, III. 850.
 STRICKLAND, AGNES, III. 281; ELIZABETH, III. 281; SUSANNA, III. 725.
 Strife, by John Galsworthy, III. 712.
 STRODE, WILLIAM, I. 570.
 STRYPE, JOHN, II. 148.
 STUART, GILBERT, II. 388.
 Stuart of Dunleath, by the Hon. Mrs Norton, III. 386.
 STUBBS, WILLIAM, III. 628.
 Student Life of Germany, by William Howitt, III. 283.
 Studies in Literature, by Lord Morley, III. 666.
 Studies in Parliament, by R. H. Hutton, III. 632.
 Studies of a Biographer, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 Studies Scientific and Social, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 Study of History, by Lord Bolingbroke, II. 202, 204; by Lord Acton, III. 684.
 STUKELEY, WILLIAM, II. 245.
 Style, by Thomas de Quincey, III. 94, 95.
 Subaltern, by G. R. Gleig, III. 323.
 Sublime and Beautiful, by Burke, I. 543.
 SUCKLING, SIR JOHN, I. 630.
 SULLIVAN, ALAN, III. 726.
 Summer is i-cumen in, I. 41, 43.
 Summer Dawn, by W. Morris, III. 665, 667.
 Summer in Arcady, by J. L. Allen, III. 831.
 Summer Morning, by John Clare, III. 234.
 Summers Last Will, by Nash, I. 329.
 Sunday, by George Herbert, I. 496.
 Sun-dial, by Bowles, II. 722.
 Sunset Ridge, by Julia Ward Howe, III. 827.
 Superstitions of the Highlands, by Collins, II. 368, 371.
 SURFACE MAN (Alexander Anderson), III. 841.
 SURREY, HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF, I. 158.
 SURTERS, ROBERT SMITH, III. 414.
 Survey of Cornwall, by R. Carew, I. 353.
 Survey of London, by John Stow, I. 257.
 Susan Hopley, by C. Crowe, III. 280.
 Suspiria de Profundis, by De Quincey, III. 93, 97.
 SUTRO, ALFRED, III. 846.
 SWAIN, CHARLES, III. 376.
 Swallow, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 SWAN, ANNIE S. (Mrs B. Smith), III. 851.
 SWANWICK, ANNA, III. 850.
 Swellfoot the Tyrant, by Shelley, III. 111.
 SWIFT, BENJAMIN (W. R. Paterson), III. 847.
 SWIFT, JONATHAN, II. 122; Life of, by Forster, III. 474.
 SWINBURNE, ALGERNON CHARLES, III. 670.
 SWINNERTON, FRANK, III. 848.
 Sword Chant of Thorstein Raudi, III. 310.
 Sybil, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 437, 440.
 Sylla, by John Banim, III. 353.
 SYLVESTER, JOSUA, I. 345.
 Sylvia, by George Darley, III. 235.
 SYMONDS, EMILY MORSE, III. 851.
 SYMONDS, JOHN ADDINGTON, III. 640.
 SYMONS, ARTHUR, III. 846.
 SYNGE, JOHN M., III. 709.
 Svtax, Dr, by William Combe, II. 661.
 TABB, JOHN BANISTER, III. 854.
 Table-book, by William Hone, II. 760.
 Tables Turned, by Wordsworth, III. 17.
 Table Talk, by Selden, I. 547, 548; by Cowper, II. 601, 603; by Hazlitt, III. 80.
 Table Traits, by John Doran, III. 331.
 TABLEY, LORD DE, III. 650.
 TAGORE, RABINDRANATH, III. 710.
 Talavera, by J. W. Croker, III. 170.
 Tale of a Tub, by Swift, II. 123, 126, 136-138.
 Tales from Shakespeare, by Charles and Mary Lamb, III. 74.
 Tales in Verse, by G. Crabbe, II. 694, 698.
 Tales of Ireland, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Tales of the Hall, by Crabbe, II. 694, 695, 698.
 Tales of the O'Hara Family, by Michael and John Banim, III. 353, 354.
 Tales of the Peerage and Peasantry, II. 772.
 TALFOURD, SIR THOMAS NOON, III. 272.
 TALLESSIN, I. 3.
 Talking Oak, by Tennyson, III. 541, 543.
 Tamar and Tavy, by Mrs Bray, III. 279.
 Tamburlaine, by Marlowe, I. 846.
 Taming of the Shrew, by Shakespeare, I. 365.
 Tam o' Shanter, by Burns, II. 819.
 Tancred, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 437, 439.
 Tanglewood Tales, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 TANNAHILL, ROBERT, II. 829.
 TARKINGTON, NEWTON BOOTH, III. 835.
 Tar-water, Further Thoughts on, by Berkeley, II. 266.
 Task, by Cowper, II. 601, 604, 607-609.
 TASMA, III. 750.
 Tasso, trans. by Carew, I. 335; by Fairfax, I. 444.
 Taste, Essays on, by A. Alison, II. 639.
 TATE, NAHUM, II. 60.
 TATHAM, JOHN, I. 786.
 Tatler, II. 3, 121, 213, 230, 400; extract by Swift, II. 139; extract by Addison, II. 220; extracts by Steele, II. 233, 236.
 TAUTPHUGUS, THE BARONESS VON, III. 385.
 Tayis Bank, I. 210.
 TAYLOR, ANN AND JANE, III. 174.
 TAYLOR, BAYARD, III. 821.
 TAYLOR, CANON ISAAC, III. 244.
 TAYLOR, ISAAC, III. 244.
 TAYLOR, JEREMY, I. 603.
 TAYLOR, JOHN, of Norwich, II. 712.
 TAYLOR, JOHN, the 'Water Poet', I. 454.
 TAYLOR, PHILIP MEADOWS, III. 415.
 TAYLOR, RACHEL ANNAND, III. 852.
 TAYLOR, SIR HENRY, III. 824.
 TAYLOR, TOM, III. 463.
 TAYLOR, WILLIAM, II. 712.
 Tea-Kettle, Song of the, by Ann Taylor, III. 175.
 Tears of Scotland, by Smollett, II. 445.
 Tea-table Miscellany, II. 813.
 TEKAIONWAKE, (E. Pauline Johnson), III. 851.
 Temora, by James Macpherson, II. 500.
 Tempest, by Shakespeare, I. 357, 372.
 TEMPLE, SIR WILLIAM, I. 751.
 Temple, by Herbert, I. 495.
 Temple Bar founded, III. 624.
 Temple of Favour, by Lloyd, II. 612.
 Temple of Venus, by Spenser, I. 801.
 TENISON, THOMAS, II. 80.
 TENNANT, WILLIAM, III. 307.
 Tennessee's Partner, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 TENNYSON, FREDERICK, III. 539.

- TENNYSON, LORD, III. 9, 540.
 Tennyson, by Lady Ritchie, III. 689; by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Ten Thousand a Year, by Warren, III. 344.
 Tent on the Beach, by Whittier, III. 775.
 Tenure of Kings and Magistrates, by Milton, I. 689.
 Terminations, by Henry James, III. 830.
 Tess of the D'Urbervilles, by Thomas Hardy, III. 670.
 Testament of Beauty, by Robert Bridges, III. 693.
 Testaments, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Testimony of the Rocks, by Hugh Miller, III. 285, 286.
 THACKERAY, ANNE ISABELLA, III. 689.
 THACKERAY, WILLIAM MAKEPEACE, III. 453; essay by Dr John Brown, III. 450.
 Thaddeus of Warsaw, by Jane Porter, II. 773.
 Thalaba, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 50.
 Thalia Rediviva, by H. Vaughan, I. 682.
 Thanatopsis, by W. C. Bryant, III. 753, 754.
 Thanksgiving, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Thanksgiving for his House, by Herrick, I. 565.
 THAXTER, CELIA, III. 854.
 THEAL, GEORGE McCALL, III. 726, 733.
 Thealima and Clearchus, by J. Chalkhill, I. 443.
 Theatre, by James Smith, III. 160.
 Theism, by F. W. Newman, III. 342; by Theodore Parker, III. 763.
 THEOBALD, LEWIS, II. 200.
 Theocritus, trans. by Calverley, III. 639; by A. Lang, III. 662.
 Theodoric the Goth, by T. Hodgkin, III. 661.
 Theodosius, by Nathaniel Lee, II. 88.
 Theodic, by Thomas Campbell, II. 766.
 Theological Essays, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
 There is a Green Hill far away, by Mrs Alexander, III. 584.
 There's nae Luck, by Mickle, II. 523, 524.
 Theron and Aspasio, by J. Hervey, II. 338.
 Theristes, Interlude, I. 153.
 Thief and the Cordelier, by Prior, II. 117.
 Things I have Seen, by G. A. H. Sala, III. 625.
 THIRLWALL, CONNOP, III. 204.
 Thirty Years in Australia, by Ada Cambridge, III. 732.
 Thirty Years' Musical Recollections, by Chorley, III. 273.
 Thirty Years' Peace, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388, 390.
 THOM, WILLIAM, III. 305.
 THOMAS, AUGUSTUS, III. 855.
 THOMAS, EDWARD, III. 847.
 THOMAS THE RHYMER, I. 43, 166.
 THOMPSON, FRANCIS, III. 710.
 THOMS, WILLIAM JOHN, III. 831.
 THOMSON, JAMES, II. 320; III. 5.
 THOMSON, JAMES ('B. V.'), III. 654.
 THOMSON, W. R., III. 733.
 THOREAU, HENRY DAVID, III. 795.
 Thorn, by John O'Keefe, II. 656.
 Thoughts at Fourscore, by T. Cooper, III. 376.
 Thoughts concerning Education, by Locke, II. 18, 20.
 Thoughts in Prison, by Dr W. Dodd, II. 456.
 Thoughts on Various Subjects, by Swift, II. 144; by Pope, II. 195.
 Thousand and One Nights, trans. by E. W. Lane, III. 827; by Burton III. 610.
 THRALE, MRS (Mrs Plozzi), II. 473.
 Thrawn Janet, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Three English Statesmen, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Three Generations of Englishwomen, by Janet Ross, III. 378.
 Three Midshipmen, by Kingston, III. 482.
 Three Miss Kings, by A. Cambridge, III. 732.
 Three Priests of Pebils, I. 209.
 Three Tabernacles, by Herbert Knowles, II. 787, 788.
 Three Warnings, by Mrs Plozzi, II. 473.
 Threnodia Augustalis, by Dryden, I. 796.
 Thrissill and the Rois, by Dryden, I. 192.
 Thucydides, trans. by Hobbes, I. 564, 565; by Dr Thomas Arnold, III. 203.
 THURLOW, LORD, II. 634; the second, II. 792.
 Thyestes, by John Crowne, II. 89.
 Thyrsis, by M. Arnold, III. 592, 597.
 Thyrsis, To, by Lord Byron, III. 130.
 TICKELL, RICHARD, II. 670.
 TICKELL, THOMAS, II. 251.
 TICKNOR, GEORGE, III. 749.
 Tidings from the Session, by Dunbar, I. 198.
 Tiger, by William Blake, II. 720.
 TIGHE, MRS, II. 599.
 TILLOTSON, JOHN, II. 37.
 Timber, by Vaughan, I. 683.
 Time and Tide, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 Time works Wonders, by Jerrold, III. 330.
 Timon of Athens, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Timothy Titcomb's Letters, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 TIMROD, HENRY, III. 853.
 TINDAL, MATTHEW, II. 762.
 Tinker, by J. Cocke, I. 443.
 Tintern Abbey, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 17.
 Titles of Honour, by John Selden, I. 546.
 TITMARSH, MICHAEL ANGELO (Thackeray), III. 456.
 Titus Andronicus, by Shakespeare, I. 360.
 TOBIN, JOHN, II. 710.
 TODD, ALPHEUS, III. 726.
 TOLAND, JOHN, II. 161.
 Tom Bowling, by Charles Dibdin, II. 708.
 Tom Brown's Schooldays, by T. Hughes, III. 677.
 Tom Cringle's Log, by M. Scott, III. 254.
 Tom Jones, by Fielding, II. 7, 341, 345.
 Tommy and Grizel, by Barrie, III. 705.
 To-morrow, by John Collins, II. 708.
 Tom Sawyer, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Tom Thumb, by Fielding, II. 339.
 TONE, THEOBALD WOLFE, II. 759.
 Tony Lumpkin, by O'Keefe, II. 656.
 TOOKE, JOHN HORNE, II. 632.
 Too Strange not to be True, by Lady Fullerton, III. 620.
 TOPLADY, AUGUSTUS MONTAGUE, II. 456.
 To the Lighthouse, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Tottel's Miscellany, I. 159, 160, 257, 286.
 Tournament, by Dunbar, I. 197.
 TOURNEUR, CYRIL, I. 420.
 TOUT, THOMAS FREDERICK, III. 843.
 Towneley Plays, I. 108.
 TOWNLEY, JAMES, II. 410.
 Town of the Cascades, by Banim, III. 353.
 TOWNSEND LORD JOHN, II. 670.
 Toxophilus, by Roger Ascham, I. 144.
 TOYNBEE, ARNOLD, III. 710, 848.
 Toy Shop, by Dodsley, II. 301.
 Tractate on Education, by Milton, I. 688, 706.
 Tracts for the Times, III. 336, 337.
 Traditional Tales, by Allan Cunningham, III. 903.
 Traditions of Edinburgh, by Robert Chambers, III. 816.
 Tragic Comedians, by Meredith, III. 658.
 Tragic Mary, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 TRAHERNE, THOMAS, I. 776.
 TRAILL, HENRY DUFF, III. 841.
 TRAIN, JOSEPH, III. 291.
 Traitor, by James Shirley, I. 484, 485.
 Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Tramp Abroad, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Transcaucasia and Ararat, by Bryce, III. 686.
 Transcendental 'Movement' in America, III. 757, 759, 760, 763.
 Transformation, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 Translators and Translations, Early, I. 258.
 Traveller, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 481-484.
 Treasure Island, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Treasure Trove, by Samuel Lover, III. 355.
 Tremaine, by R. P. Ward, II. 754.
 Trembling of the Veil, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 TRENCH, HERBERT, III. 846.
 TRENCH, RICHARD CHENEVIX, III. 393.
 TREVILYAN, GEORGE MACAULAY, III. 715.
 TREVILYAN, SIR GEORGE OTTO, III. 687.
 TREVELYAN, JOHN OF, I. 83.
 Trial of the Witnesses, by Sherlock, II. 42.
 Trials of Margaret Lyndsay, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Trimmer, Character of a, by the Marquis of Halifax, I. 756.
 Tristram, by Edwin A. Robinson, III. 835.
 Tristram of Lyonesse, by Swinburne, III. 673, 674, 677, 678.
 Tristram Shandy, by Sterne, II. 402, 404-409.
 Tristrem, Sir, I. 43.
 Triumph of Life, by Shelley, III. 112, 117.
 Triumphs of Temper, by Hayley, II. 614.
 Trivia, by Gay, II. 172, 175.
 Troilus and Cressida, by Chaucer, I. 62, 63, 68-70; by Shakespeare, I. 369.
 TROLLOPE, ANTHONY, III. 486.
 TROLLOPE, FRANCES, III. 276.
 TROLLOPE, FRANCES ELEANOR, III. 490.
 TROLLOPE, THOMAS ADOLPHUS, III. 490.
 True Intellectual System, by Cudworth, I. 670, 671.
 True King, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 True Patriot, ed. by Fielding, II. 341.
 TRUMBULL, JOHN, III. 736.
 Trumpet and Drum, With, by Field, III. 831.
 Trumps, by G. W. Curtis, III. 784.
 Truth, by Cowper, II. 606.
 TUCKER, ABRAHAM, II. 338.
 TUCKER, MARIA CHARLOTTE, III. 850.
 TUCKERMAN, HENRY THEODORE, III. 853.
 Tufts of Heather, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
 TULLOCH, JOHN, III. 506.
 Tullochgorum, by John Skinner, II. 318.
 TUPPER, MARTIN FARQUHAR, III. 491.
 TURBerville, GEORGE, I. 264.
 Turkes, Historie of the, by Knolles, I. 272.
 TURNER, CHARLES TENNYSON, III. 539.
 TURNER, CYRIL. See TOURNEUR.
 TURNER, ETHEL, III. 720.
 TURNER, SHARON, II. 639.
 TURNER, WALTER JOHN REDFERN, III. 849.
 Tuscan Cities, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 TUSSER, THOMAS, I. 248.
 TUTTIETT, M. G. (Maxwell Gray), III. 851.
 TWAIN, MARK (S. L. Clemens), III. 826.
 'Twas when the Seas were roaring, by Gay, II. 174, 177.
 Tweedside, by Robert Crawford, II. 817.
 TWEEDSMUIR, LORD (John Buchan), III. 847.
 Twelfth Night, by Shakespeare, I. 368.
 Twentieth Century Literature, III. 717-724.
 Twice Round the Clock, by G. A. H. Sala, III. 624.
 Twice-Told Tales, by Hawthorne, III. 779.
 Twilight of the Gods, by R. Garnett, III. 668.
 Two Chiefs of Dunboy, by Froude, III. 608.
 Two Gentlemen of Verona, by Shakespeare, I. 358.
 Two Noble Kinsmen, I. 334, 373, 469, 473.
 Two on a Tower, by T. Hardy, III. 679.
 Two Paths, by Ruskin, III. 570, 572, 57.
 Twopenny Post-Bag, by Moore, III. 347.
 Two Poets of Croisic, by R. Browning, III. 556, 566.
 Two Years ago, by C. Kingsley, III. 513.
 Two Years before the Mast, by R. H. Dana, III. 752.
 TYLER, MOSES COIT, III. 854.
 TYLOR, SIR EDWARD BURNETT, III. 663.
 Tymes goe by Turnes, by Southwell, I. 338.
 TYNAN, KATHARINE, III. 851.
 TYNDAL, WILLIAM, I. 129.
 TYNDAL, JOHN, III. 548.
 Typee, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
 Typhoon, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Tyrranic Love, by Dryden, I. 797, 807, 808.
 Tyrannus, or the Mode, by Evelyn, I. 769.
 Tythes, History of, by J. Selden, I. 546, 549.
 TYTLER, PATRICK FRASER, III. 290.
 TYTLER, WILLIAM, II. 388.
 UDALL, NICOLAS, I. 155.
 Ulysses and the Syren, by Daniel, I. 341.
 Ulysses, by James Joyce, III. 848.
 Uncle Remus, by J. C. Harris, III. 831.
 Uncle Silas, by J. S. Le Fanu, III. 365.
 Uncle Tom's Cabin, by Harriet Beecher Stowe, III. 812, 813.
 UNDERHILL, EVELYN, III. 852.
 Underneath the Bough, by M. Field, III. 704.
 Under the Elm-tree, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Under the Great Elm, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802.
 Under the Willows, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802, 804.
 Under Two Flags, by Ouida, III. 690.
 Under Western Eyes, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Underwoods, by Ben Jonson, I. 409, 410; by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699, 703.
 Unfortunate Traveller, by Nash, I. 330.
 United Netherlands, by J. L. Motley, III. 815, 816.
 United Service Gazette founded, III. 323.
 United States, History of, by Bryant and Gay, III. 753; by G. Bancroft III. 755; by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Universal Beauty, by H. Brooke, II. 396, 397.
 Universal History, II. 387, 388.
 Universal History, by Hawthorne, III. 779.
 Universal Visitor, II. 424.
 Universe, Intellectual System of, by Cudworth, I. 670, 671.
 Unknown Eros, by Patmore, III. 602.
 Unseen Foundations, by the Duke of Argyll, III. 614.
 UNTERMEYER, LOUIS, III. 856.
 Unto This Last, by Ruskin, III. 671, 672.
 Upholsterer, by Arthur Murphy, II. 466.
 Uplandis Mous and the Burges Mous, by Henryson, I. 190.

- Upon Nothing, by Rochester, I. 780.
Upper Crust, by H. J. Byron, III. 637.
URQUHART, SIR THOMAS, I. 824.
USHER, JAMES. See USSHER.
USK, THOMAS, I. 82.
USSHER, JAMES, I. 440.
Usury, Defence of, by Bentham, II. 701.
Utilitarianism, by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 444.
Utilitarians, English, by Stephen, III. 662.
Utopia, by Sir Thomas More, I. 121.
- Vale of Cashmere, by Moore, III. 349.
Valenciennes, by Thomas Hardy, III. 680.
Valentine Vox, by Henry Cockton, III. 490.
Valerius, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250, 253.
VAN BRUGH, SIR JOHN, II. 80.
VAN DRUTEN, JOHN WILLIAM, III. 849.
VAN DYKE, HENRY, III. 854.
Vane's Story, by James Thomson, III. 655.
Vanity Fair, by Thackeray, III. 457, 459.
Vanity of Human Wishes, by Johnson, II. 458, 464.
Variation of Plants and Animals, by Darwin, III. 417, 420.
Variety, by William Whitehead, II. 357.
Vassal Morton, by F. Parkman, III. 818.
Vathek, by Beckford, II. 621, 622-624.
VAUGHAN, HENRY, I. 682, 731.
VAUGHAN, ROBERT, III. 271.
VAUX, LORD, I. 278.
VEDDER, DAVID, III. 305.
VEITCH, JOHN, III. 632.
Velazquez, by Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
'Venerable Bede', I. 18.
Venice Preserved, by Otway, II. 72.
Venus and Adonis, by Shakespeare, I. 361.
Vercelli, Book, I. 14, 15, 169.
VERE, AUBREY DE, III. 581.
VERE, EDWARD DE, EARL OF OXFORD, I. 277.
Verses and Translations, by Calverley, III. 638.
Vertue, by George Herbert, I. 496.
VERY, JONES, III. 853.
Vestiges of Creation, by R. Chambers, III. 316.
Vicar, by Praed, III. 380.
Vicar of Wakefield, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 493.
Vicar of Wrexhill, by F. Trollope, III. 276.
Victoria, by W. W. Campbell, III. 725.
Victorian Poets, by E. C. Stedman, III. 824.
Vida's Art of Poetry, tr. by C. Pitt, II. 259.
Videna, by Heraud, III. 268.
Views Afoot, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
Vignettes in Rhyme, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
Village, by George Crabbe, II. 694, 695.
Village Communities, by Sir H. J. S. Maine, III. 567.
Village Minstrel, by John Clare, III. 234.
Villette, by Charlotte Brontë, III. 523, 524.
VILLIERS, GEORGE, I. 788.
Vindication of Natural Society, by Burke, II. 543.
Vindication of the Rights of Woman, by Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin, II. 706.
Vindicia Gallica, by Mackintosh, II. 641, 642.
Viol and Flute, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
Violenzia, by W. C. Roscoe, III. 625.
Virgilemarum, by Joseph Hall, I. 417.
Virgil, trans. by Gavin Douglas, I. 202; by Phaer, I. 265; by Stanyhurst, I. 332; by Dryden, I. 794; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Conington, III. 634; by Morris, III. 665.
Virginian, by Owen Wister, III. 832.
Virginians, by Thackeray, III. 459.
Virginian Voyage, by Drayton, I. 344.
Virginibus Puerisque, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
Virginus, by S. Knowles, III. 225-227.
Virgin Martyr, by Dekker and Massinger, I. 423, 464, 467.
Vision, by Thomas Moore, III. 349.
Vision of Judgment, by Lord Byron, III. 129.
Vision of Sir Launfal, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 804.
Visions in Verse, by N. Cotton, II. 532.
Visions of England, by Palgrave, III. 609.
Vittoria, by George Meredith, III. 658, 660.
Vivian Grey, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 435.
Voice from the Nile, by Thomson, III. 655.
Voice of Spring, by Mrs Hemans, III. 179.
Voices of the Night, by Longfellow, III. 769.
Volpone, by Ben Jonson, I. 404, 409.
Voltaire, monograph on, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
Vortigern and Rowena, by W. H. Ireland, II. 711.
Vox Clamantis, by Gower, I. 74.
- Voyage round the World, by Dampier, II. 103.
Voyages, Collection of, by Hakluyt, I. 284; by Hawkesworth, II. 410.
Voyage to St Kilda, by M. Martin, II. 303.
Voyageur, by W. H. Drummond, III. 728.
- WACE, I. 34, 35.
Wacousta, by J. Richardson, III. 723, 839.
WADDELL, HELEN, III. 852.
WADDINGTON, WILLIAM, I. 34.
WADE, THOMAS, III. 344.
Wae's me for Prince Charlie, by William Glen, III. 309.
Wages of Sin, by Lucas Malet, III. 704.
WAKEFIELD, GILBERT, II. 647.
Wakefield Plays, I. 108.
Walden, by Thoreau, III. 796, 797.
Waldhere, I. 4, 5.
WALKER, PATRICK, II. 101.
Walker, London, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
Walk in the Light, by B. Barton, III. 231.
WALKLEY, ARTHUR BINGHAM, III. 843.
WALLACE, ALFRED RUSSEL, III. 614.
WALLACE, LEWIS, III. 823.
Wallace, Blind Harry's, I. 186; II. 309.
Wallenstein, tr. by Coleridge, III. 58, 63.
WALLER, EDMUND, I. 624, 731, 734.
WALLER, JOHN FRANCIS, III. 364.
WALPOLE, HORACE, II. 8, 411; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
WALPOLE, SIR HUGH, III. 730, 848.
WALPOLE, SIR SPENCER, III. 841.
Walpole, Sir Robert, by William Cox, II. 630.
WALSH, WILLIAM, II. 111.
WALTON, IZAAK, I. 613.
Wanderer, by Richard Savage, II. 283.
Wanderer, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
Wanderer of Switzerland, by Montgomery, II. 742.
Wanderings in South America, &c., by Charles Waterton, III. 173.
War, Miseries of, by William Crowe, II. 617.
WARBURTON, ELIOT, III. 274.
WARBURTON, GEORGE, III. 274.
WARBURTON, WILLIAM, II. 270.
WARD, ARTEMUS (C. F. Browne), III. 826.
WARD, JAMES, III. 841.
WARD, MRS HUMPHRY, III. 704.
WARD, ROBERT PLUMER, II. 754.
WARD, SIR ADOLPHUS WILLIAM, III. 840.
WARD, WILFRID, III. 843.
WARD, WILLIAM GEORGE, III. 839.
Warden, by Anthony Trollope, III. 487.
WARDLAW, LADY, II. 312.
Warfare of Science with Theology, by A. D. White, III. 825.
WARNER, CHARLES DUDLEY, III. 853.
WARNER, SUSAN, III. 795.
WARNER, SYLVIA TOWNSEND, III. 852.
WARNER, WILLIAM, I. 336.
WARREN, SAMUEL, III. 844.
WARTON, JOSEPH, II. 506.
WARTON, THOMAS, II. 506.
WASHINGTON, BOOKER, III. 855.
WASHINGTON, GEORGE, III. 736, 742.
Washington Square, by H. James, III. 830.
Waste Land, by T. S. Eliot, III. 716, 723.
Watchman, edited by Coleridge, III. 57.
Water Babies, by C. Kingsley, III. 514, 517.
'Water Poet' (John Taylor), I. 454.
WATERLAND, DANIEL, II. 246.
WATERTON, CHARLES, III. 173.
WATSON, H. B. MARRIOTT, III. 730, 845.
WATSON, JOHN, III. 842.
WATSON, JOHN, of Kingston, III. 726.
WATSON, RICHARD, II. 646.
WATSON, ROBERT, II. 388.
WATSON, SIR WILLIAM, III. 706.
WATSON, THOMAS, I. 241, 273, 274, 277.
WATTS, ALARIC ALEXANDER, III. 323.
WATTS, ISAAC, II. 206.
WATTS-DUNTON, THEODORE, III. 668.
Watty and Meg, by Wilson, II. 812, 813.
Wat Tyler, by Southey, III. 48.
WAUGH, EDWIN, III. 492.
Waverley, by Scott, III. 31.
Waves, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
WAY, ARTHUR S., III. 842.
Way to Keep Him, by A. Murphy, II. 455.
We met—'twas in a Crowd, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
Wealth of Nations, by Adam Smith, II. 448, 450-452.
Wearin' o' the Green, III. 579.
WEBBE, WILLIAM, I. 266.
WEBSTER, AUGUSTA, III. 690.
WEBSTER, DANIEL, III. 744.
WEBSTER, JOHN, I. 426.
Wedding Journey, by Howells, III. 829.
- WEDMORE, FREDERICK, III. 841.
Wee Davie, by Norman Macleod, III. 396.
Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers, by Thoreau, III. 796.
Weeper, by Crashaw, I. 678.
Weir of Hermiston, by Stevenson, III. 699.
Welcome from Greece, by J. Gay, II. 177.
WELDON, SIR ANTHONY, I. 589.
WELLESLEY, DOROTHY VIOLET, LADY GERALD, III. 852.
WELLS, CHARLES JEREMIAH, III. 657.
WELLS, HERBERT GEORGE, III. 712, 720.
Welsh Contribution to English Literature, I. 831.
Welsh Language, I. 2, 831.
WELSTED, LEONARD, II. 190.
WENTWORTH, LADY (Lady A. Blunt), III. 691.
Were na my Heart Light I wad die, by Lady Grizel Baillie, II. 811.
Were-Wolves, by S. Baring-Gould, III. 664.
WESLEY, CHARLES, II. 337.
WESLEY, JOHN, II. 333; Life of, by Southey, III. 50, 54.
Wessex Tales, by Thomas Hardy, III. 679.
WEST, GILBERT, II. 259.
WEST, REBECCA, III. 852.
WEST, RICHARD, II. 422.
West Africa, by M. H. Kingsley, III. 517.
WESTALL, WILLIAM, III. 840.
WESTCOTT, EDWARD NOYES, III. 831.
Western and Eastern Rambles, by Joseph Howe, III. 726.
Western Islands of Scotland, by Martin Martin, II. 303.
West Indian, by Cumberland, II. 562.
West India Proprietor, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748, 750.
West Indies, by Froude, III. 503.
West Indies, by Montgomery, II. 742.
Westminster Bridge, by Wordsworth, III. 27.
Westward Ho! by Dekker and Webster, I. 423, 426; by C. Kingsley, III. 513, 514-516.
West Wind, Ode to, by Shelley, III. 110, 114.
Wet Sheet and a Flowing Sea, by Allan Cunningham, III. 304.
WETHERALD, ETHELWYN, III. 726.
WETHERELL, ELIZABETH, III. 795.
WEYMAN, STANLEY JOHN, III. 843.
WHARTON, EDITH, III. 834.
WHARTON, THOMAS, II. 98.
What d'ye Call It? by Gay, II. 172, 177.
WHATLEY, RICHARD, III. 166.
What is Life? by John Clare, III. 234.
What Maisie Knew, by H. James, III. 830.
What will he do with it? by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
What you will, by Marston, I. 462.
When a Man's Single, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
When the Kye comes Hame, by James Hogg, III. 295.
WHETSTONE, GEORGE, I. 238, 240, 333.
WHREWELL, WILLIAM, III. 198.
WHIBLEY, CHARLES, III. 844.
WHICHOTE, BENJAMIN, I. 603.
Whims and Oddities, by Hood, III. 137.
WHIPPLE, EDWARD, III. 853.
WHISTLECRAFT (J. Hookham Frere), II. 675.
WHISTLER, JAMES MCNEILL, III. 854.
WHISTON, WILLIAM, II. 158.
Whitebread's Brewery, by Wolcott, II. 664.
WHITE, ANDREW DICKSON, III. 825.
WHITE, GILBERT, II. 625.
WHITE, HENRY KIRKE, II. 728.
WHITE, JOSEPH BLANCO, II. 791.
WHITE, RICHARD GRANT, III. 853.
WHITE, WILLIAM HALE, III. 687.
Whiteboy, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
White Company, by Conan Doyle, III. 707.
White Devil, by John Webster, I. 427, 428.
WHITEFIELD, GEORGE, II. 337.
WHITEHEAD, ALFRED NORTH, III. 718, 845.
WHITEHEAD, WILLIAM, II. 357.
White Heather, by Wm. Black, III. 691.
WHITING, RICHARD, III. 841.
White Jacket, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
WHITELOCKE, BULSTRODE, I. 750.
White Ship, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 643.
White Wings, by William Black, III. 691.
WHITMAN, WALTER, III. 806.
WHITNEY, WILLIAM DWIGHT, III. 824.
WHITTER, JOHN GREENLEAF, III. 774.
Who shall be Fairest? by C. Mackay, III. 481.
WHYMPER, EDWARD, III. 841.
WHYTE-MELVILLE, GEORGE JOHN, III. 585.
Wide, Wide World, by S. Warner, III. 796.
Widow Barnaby, by F. Trollope, III. 276.
Widow Married, by F. Trollope, III. 276.
Widowers' Houses, by G. B. Shaw, III. 705.

- Widsith, I. 4.
 Wieland's Oberon, trans. by William Sotheby, II. 713.
 Wife o' Usher's Well, I. 537.
 Wife's Complaint, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 WIGGIN, KATE DOUGLAS, III. 838.
 WILBERFORCE, WILLIAM, II. 646.
 WILCOX, ELLA WHEELER, III. 856.
 WILDE, OSCAR O'FLAHERTIE, III. 706.
 Wild Belin, by William Black, III. 691.
 Wild Irish Girl, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 Wild Life in a Southern County, by Richard Jefferies, III. 640.
 Wild Wales, by Borrow, III. 432.
 WILDER, THORNTON, III. 856.
 Wilhelm Meister, trans. by Carlyle, III. 403.
 WILKES, JOHN, II. 495, 516.
 WILKIE, WILLIAM, II. 441.
 WILKINS, JOHN, I. 685.
 WILKINS, MARY ELEANOR, III. 834.
 WILKINSON, HENRY SPENSER, III. 843.
 WILKINSON, SIR JOHN GARDNER, III. 321.
 WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY, I. 33.
 WILLIAM OF NEWBURY, I. 33.
 William and Margaret, by Mallet, II. 328, 329.
 William of Palerne (Palermo), I. 51.
 William Rufus, by Freeman, III. 626; by Michael Field, III. 704.
 WILLIAMS, HELEN MARIA, II. 600.
 WILLIAMS, SIR CHARLES HANBURY, II. 348.
 William Wilson, by Poe, III. 787, 788.
 WILLIS, NATHANIEL PARKER, III. 749.
 WILLIS, SARA PAYSON, III. 749.
 Will o' the Mill, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697.
 WILLS, JAMES, III. 350.
 WILLS, WILLIAM GORMAN, III. 584.
 Will Waterproof, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 WILMOT, JOHN (Earl of Rochester), I. 779.
 WILSON, ALEXANDER, II. 812.
 WILSON, ARTHUR, I. 588.
 WILSON, DAVID ALEC, III. 846.
 WILSON, JOHN, I. 787; II. 440; III. 245.
 WILSON, JOHN MACKAY, III. 578.
 WILSON, SIR DANIEL, III. 726.
 WILSON, SIR THOMAS, I. 143.
 WILSON, WOODROW, III. 855.
 Winchester Annals, I. 29.
 WINCHILSEA, COUNTESS OF, II. 253.
 Wind and Wave, by Patmore, III. 602.
 Window in Thrums, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Windsor Forest, by Pope, II. 180, 182.
 WINGATE, DAVID, III. 608.
 WINTER, JOHN STRANGE, III. 851.
 Winterslow, by W. Hazlitt, III. 80, 84.
 Winter's Tale, by Shakespeare, I. 372.
 WINTHROP, THEODORE, III. 823.
 WINYET, NINIAN, I. 167, 230.
 WIREKER, NIGEL, I. 34.
 WISE, JOHN, III. 735.
 Wise Saws and Modern Instances, by Cooper, III. 376; by Halliburton, III. 726.
 Wish, by Cowley, I. 643, 644.
 Wishes to his supposed Mistress, by Crashaw, I. 680.
 WISTER, OWEN, III. 832.
 Wit and Humour, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148; by Sydney Smith, III. 157.
 Wit and Mirth, by D'Urfey, I. 782.
 Witch, by T. Middleton, I. 458, 461.
 Witch of Atlas, by Shelley, III. 110.
 Witch of Edmonton, by Dekker, Ford, Rowley, &c., I. 423, 478, 481.
 WITHER, GEORGE, I. 499, 731, 735.
 Witness, III. 285.
 Wits of Men, by Charleton, I. 744.
 Wit's Recreations, I. 560.
 Wit's Trenchmoure, by N. Breton, I. 276.
 WODEHOUSE, PELHAM GRENVILLE, III. 848.
 WODROW, ROBERT, I. 830.
 WOLCOT, JOHN, II. 662.
 WOLFE, CHARLES, II. 788.
 Wolfe of Badenoch, by Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 WOLLSTONECRAFT, MARY, II. 706.
 WOLSELEY, LORD, III. 840.
 Wolsey, Life of, by Cavendish, I. 140; by Storer, I. 399.
 Woman, Essay on, by J. Wilkes, II. 516.
 Woman in White, by Wilkie Collins, III. 620.
 Woman killed with Kindness, by T. Heywood, I. 431.
 Woman of no Importance, by Wilde, III. 707.
 Woman who Did, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 Women, by C. R. Maturin, II. 752.
 Women as they are, by Mrs Gore, III. 279.
 Women beware Women, by T. Middleton, I. 458, 459.
 Wonder, by Susannah Centlivre, II. 96.
 Wonder Book, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 WOOD, ANTHONY, I. 749.
 WOOD, MRS HENRY, III. 520.
 WOODBERRY, GEORGE EDWARD, III. 855.
 Woodcraft, by W. G. Simms, III. 752.
 Woodlanders, by Thomas Hardy, III. 679.
 Wood Magic, by Richard Jefferies, III. 640.
 Woodman, by John Clare, III. 235.
 WOODS, MRS MARGARET L., III. 851.
 WOODSEYS, ROLAND ALEXANDER, III. 854.
 Wood Spirit, by Earnest Jones, III. 505.
 Wooing of Malkatoon, by Lewis Wallace, III. 823.
 WOOLF, VIRGINIA, III. 705, 720.
 WOOLMAN, JOHN, III. 738, 741.
 WOOLNER, THOMAS, III. 607.
 WOOLSEY, SARAH CHAUNCKY, III. 854.
 WOOLSTON, THOMAS, II. 164.
 Worcester Annals, I. 29.
 WORDSWORTH, DOROTHY, III. 29.
 WORDSWORTH, WILLIAM, III. 8, 11; Apostasy of, by W. Hale White, III. 687; book on, by Myers, III. 691.
 Wordsworth's Grave, by W. Watson, III. 708.
 World, by H. Vaughan, I. 684.
 World, ed. by Edward Moore, II. 400.
 World before the Flood, by Montgomery, II. 742.
 World, Discovery of a New, by J. Wilkins, I. 635.
 World, History of the, by Sir W. Raleigh, I. 805, 809; by Gillies, II. 637.
 World Mother, by W. W. Campbell, III. 728.
 World of William Clissold, by H. G. Wells, III. 713.
 World's Hydrographical Discription, by John Davis, I. 390.
 World's Desire, by Lang and Haggard, III. 703.
 Worlds, Plurality of, by Whewell, III. 198.
 WORSLEY, PHILIP STANLEY, III. 840.
 Worthies of England, by Fuller, I. 596, 600.
 WOTTON, SIR HENRY, I. 393.
 WRANGHAM, FRANCIS, II. 741.
 WRAXALL, SIR NATHANIEL WM., II. 738.
 Wrecker, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Wreck of the Grosvenor, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 WRIGHT, THOMAS, III. 411.
 WRONG, HAROLD V., III. 726.
 Wrong Paradise, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Wuthering Heights, by Emily Brontë, III. 525, 526.
 WYATT, SIR THOMAS, I. 158.
 WYCHERLEY, WILLIAM, II. 65.
 WYCLIF, JOHN, I. 84; by Vaughan, III. 271.
 Wycliffe Bible, I. 86; Scots Wycliffe New Testament, I. 212.
 WYLIE, ELINOR HOYT, III. 856.
 WYNTOUN, ANDREW OF, I. 166, 171, 181.
 YALDEN, THOMAS, II. 200.
 Yarrow Visited, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 22; Revisited, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 23; Unvisited, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 22.
 YATES, EDMUND, III. 635.
 Year, by Patmore, III. 603.
 Year-book, by William Hone, II. 760.
 Year of Shame, by Sir Wm. Watson, III. 706.
 Years, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Years After, by Landor, III. 142.
 Yeast, by Charles Kingsley, III. 513.
 YEATS, WILLIAM BUTLER, III. 709, 722.
 YELLOWPLUSH, C. J. (Thackeray), III. 455.
 Ye Mariners of England, by Campbell, II. 768, 768.
 Yemassee, by W. G. Simms, III. 752.
 Yeomen of the Guard, by W. S. Gilbert, III. 694.
 Yes and No, by Normanby, II. 783.
 YONGE, CHARLOTTE MARY, III. 535.
 York and Lancaster, by S. Daniel, I. 339, 340.
 York Plays, I. 110.
 Yorkshire Tragedy, I. 335.
 YOUNG, ARTHUR, II. 627.
 YOUNG, EDWARD, II. 260.
 YOUNG, EMILY HILDA, III. 852.
 Young and Old, by C. Kingsley, III. 517.
 Young Beichan, I. 524.
 Young Duke, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 435.
 Young Fur Traders, by R. M. Ballantyne, III. 623.
 Young Ireland, by Sir C. G. Duffy, III. 583.
 Young Maxwell, by Allan Cunningham, III. 803.
 Young Tamlane, I. 528.
 Young Voyageurs, by Mayne Reid, III. 506.
 Youth and Age, by Coleridge, III. 62, 67.
 Zambesi, by Livingstone, III. 480.
 ZANGWILL, ISRAEL, III. 846.
 Zanolli, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Zapolya, by Coleridge, III. 61, 63.
 Zeluco, by Dr John Moore, II. 618-620.
 Zincali, by Borrow, III. 431.
 Zion's Flowers, by Zachary Boyd, I. 514.
 Zohrab, the Hostage, by J. J. Morier, II. 783, 784.
 Zoonomai, by Erasmus Darwin, II. 573, 574.

मसुरी
MUSSOORIE.

This book is to be returned on the date last stamped.

[illegible]

R 032 cha
वर्ग संख्या
Class No. _____
लेखक
Author _____
शीर्षक
Title chambers's Encyclopedi
V.3

अवाप्ति संख्या
Acc No. 118185
पुस्तक संख्या
Book No. 380

R 032 cha
V.3

381

LIBRARY
LAL BAHADUR SHASTRI
National Academy of Administration
MUSSOORIE

Accession No. 118185

1. Books are issued for 15 days only but may have to be recalled earlier, if urgently required.
2. An over-due charge of 25 Paise per day per volume will be charged.
3. Books may be renewed on request, at the discretion of the Librarian.
4. Periodicals, Rare and Reference books may not be loaned and may be consulted only in the Library.
5. Books lost, damaged or injured in any way shall have to be replaced or